Is remarkable for its Display of Copies of Celebrated Works of

THE GREAT MASTERS.

Reproductions of the most important Paintings in the following Collections:—

NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON,	LOUVRE, PARIS,
BUCKINGHAM PALACE,	LUXEMBOURG, PARIS,
WINDSOR CASTLE,	ROYAL GALLERY, OSERDEN,
UFFIZI, FLORENCE,	HERMITAGE, ST. PETERS-
PITTI, FLORENCE,	BURGO.
ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS,	PRADO, MADRID,
FLORENCE,	VATICAN, ROME,
AMSTERDAM,	HAARLEM,
THE HAGUE,	FRANKFORT,

AND

THE PARIS SALONS.

A LARGE COLLECTION of EXAMPLES of MODERN FRENCH and ENGLISH ART in SELECTED FRAMES suitable for HALL, LIBRARY, DRAWING-ROOM BOUDOIR, &c.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

AUTOTYPE: a DECORATIVE and EDUCATIONAL ART.
NEW PAMPHLET—FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

Fourth Edition, pp. 300, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.
By Prof. LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

HARRISON &amp; SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

EPPE'S COCOAINE. COCOA-NIB EXTRACT. (TEA-LIKE.)

A thin beverage of full flavour, now with many beneficially taking the place of tea. Its active principle being a gentle nerve stimulant, supplies the needed energy without unduly exciting the system.—Sold in Packets and Tins, by Grocers, labelled "James Erpe & Co., Ltd., Homoeopathic Chemists, London."

NEW WORKS PUBLISHED BY EDWARD HOWELL, LIVERPOOL.

THE CONTROVERSY of ZION; being the Miscellaneous Works of the late T. W. CHRISTIE, B.A. Camb., M.R.C.S. Eng., &c. Edited by THOS. WILLIAMSON. A handsome 8vo vol., nearly 600 pp., with Portrait of the Author, cloth, 5s.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

THE BOOK of REVELATION: a Sign of the End. Second Edition, Enlarged. 8vo, cloth, 7s.

BEING and DOING. A Selection of Helpful Thoughts from Various Authors arranged for Daily Reading. Edited by C. M. W. (Dedicated to the Members of S. Barnabas Guild, whose object is to do all they can for the relief of suffering and misery.) Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 4s. 6d. net. [Third Edition nearly ready.]

GOLDEN THOUGHTS for NOBLE MEN and GENTLE WOMEN. Selected and Composed by MARY M. BRADDYLL. Fcap. 8vo, with blank pages for MS. Additions and for Autographs, elegantly printed within carmine lines, cloth gilt, price 2s. 6d. net. * * * Copies of this beautiful little Book have been accepted by H.R.H. the Princess of Wales and H.R.H. the Duchess of Teck.

PICTURE of WALES DURING the TUDOR PERIOD (HENRY VII. to ELIZABETH). By J. BIRKBECK NEVINS, M.D. London, &c. 8vo, with Map, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

* * * This Work contains in a collected form the Acts of Henry VIII. relating to Wales (spoken of in the debate in the House of Commons, April 30, 1894, as the "Welsh Act of Union").

GLEANINGS in MANY FIELDS, being Explanatory and Critical Notes on the New Testament, Collected by the late THOMAS HORNBY, M.A., Vicar of Walton-on-the-Hill, Lancashire. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, 12s. 1893.

Here is a work which deserves to become popular. It is virtually a commentary on the New Testament, and has excellencies possessed by no other; for instead of being the reflex of one man's judgment, and the theological bias towards one complexion of thought in the interpretation, it gives the opinions of many minds as brought together during half a century of wide, scholarly reading by a man who, whatever his own predilections may have been, was widely discursive and liberal in his study of books.

Liverpool: EDWARD HOWELL, Church Street. London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & CO., LIMITED

JUST PUBLISHED, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

LEADERS of MODERN INDUSTRY: BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

By G. BARNETT SMITH, Author of "Women of Renown," &amp;c.

"Reading this book would serve as a useful corrective to the tendencies of any who are inclined to undervalue the labours of those pioneers who, in days gone by, established England's commercial and manufacturing supremacy."—Daily Telegraph.
"His biographies are in each case full and interesting."—Times.

LONDON: W. H. ALLEN &amp; CO., LIMITED, 13, WATERLOO PLACE.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.
LIBRARY BOXES ORATIS.
Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand, at greatly Reduced Prices.
LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post free from FRANKS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also,
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.
SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

THE LIFE OF THE DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH

To the Accession of Queen Anne.

By GENERAL VISCOUNT WOLSELEY.

2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits and Plans, 32s.

"It is a distinct gain to historical literature to have this defence of Marlborough on record, especially when it is combined with a brilliant account of his military and political exploits, written with the pen of a competent judge."

Graphic.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

THE SECOND EDITION

OF

A BEGINNER.

By RHODA BROUGHTON,

Author of "Nancy," "Cometh Up as a Flower," &c.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"When all the tendenz-novels we have raved about and quarrelled over shall have ceased from troubling an over-troubled world, that the eternal smiles and tears locked within the covers of Rhoda Broughton's novels will be as fresh as ever they were, is our confident prediction."

Manchester Guardian.

A NEW NOVEL AT ALL LIBRARIES.

IF MEN WERE WISE.

By E. L. SHAW.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A work of rare charm and excellence; it is real literature and real life, too—of an out-of-the-way kind, but convincing, and consistent. The strength and the beauty of Wrayburn's character, the pure and simple tragedy of his life, the passages of thought, observation, and reflection which arrest and hold attention, the very unusual power of the writer so deeply to interest us in the catastrophe that we want to implore him to change it, even while we recognise that it is inevitable, lend to this novel the importance of an exceptional and most welcome event."

World.

NOW READY.

The POWER of the PAST.

By ESMÉ STUART,

Author of "Joan Vellacott."

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "MASTERS OF THE WORLD."

T H O R O U G H.

By MARY A. M. MARKS,

Author of "Dr. Willoughby Smith," &c.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A remarkable book, written with an unobtrusive quaintness of style, as if it were the record of a chronicler writing soon after its events took place. Apart from its historical value, it abounds in quaint touches of character, humour, and shrewdness, and in exquisite bits of Irish landscape."

Scottish Leader.

NOW READY.

THE DAUGHTER of the NEZ PERCÉS.

By ARTHUR PATERSON,

Author of "A Partner from the West," &c.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"Some shadow of Fenimore Cooper's mantle has surely fallen on the author of this novel."—Manchester Guardian.

"An admirably-told, stirring story."—World.

NOW READY.

EVE'S APPLE.

By M. DEANE.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"We are not sure that this is a book which will impress the crowd; many of its effects have too much subtlety of truthfulness for ordinary popularity; but it is a singularly careful imaginative study both of a society and a character."

Spectator.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

NOW READY.

RECTORIAL ADDRESSES

DELIVERED AT THE

UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

1863-1893,

Sir William Stirling-Maxwell to the Marquis of Bute.

Edited, with an Introduction,

By WILLIAM KNIGHT, LL.D.,

Professor of Moral Philosophy, University of St. Andrews.

Demy 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

"The volume should command an appreciative welcome from a far larger circle of readers than that represented by the graduates and students of St. Andrews."—The Times.

"The volume, in fact, is a memorial of what St. Andrews has done for the cause of education in the North, and a singularly interesting epitome of the views on the same subject of many clear and courageous minds."—Daily Telegraph.

"This is a volume of very deep and very varied interest."—Freeman's Journal.

"This is a volume that will be treasured by alumni of St. Andrews whosoever the fates may have borne them. It will revive sunny memories of days departed, and vividly recall scenes that time has obscured but not obliterated."

"The volume is both valuable and attractive, and it is got up in a style worthy of the 'City of the Scarlet Gown,' of which it is meant to be a memorial."—Scotsman.

"Besides being of special interest to all whose student days are recalled by them, appeal more generally to those who wish to understand the aims and ideals of our Scottish universities during the latter half of the nineteenth century."

"Materials so brilliant required the support of no editorial sponsor. The value of the book is, however, increased by the interesting introduction by Professor Knight."

Glasgow Herald.

Aberdeen Free Press.

NOW READY.

SANTA TERESA:

Being some Account of her Life and Times, together with some pages from the History of the last great Reform in the Religious Orders.

By GABRIELA CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM.

In 2 vols.

Illustrated with Two Autographe Frontispieces.

Demy 8vo, price 32s.

"A unique and brilliant success. In the two volumes of 'St. Teresa' you will find that Mrs. Cunningham-Graham has enriched not merely the literature of our country by a masterly biography, but has made this generation her debtor by her wonderful restoration—resurrection, I may call it—of the greatest woman of Spain."—Review of Reviews.

"She has not merely studied much original and previously inaccessible material for the life and times of Saint Teresa, but is also specially qualified for the work she has undertaken by her intimate acquaintance with the country and countrymen of the saint. She has patiently and not un-instructively examined the difficult psychological question of Teresa's mysticism, and her study of the rise of the Discalced Carmelite Order may be acknowledged to throw an interesting light on the general history of the period."—Times.

"A truly noble work, written with such profound knowledge and understanding sympathy that the book has spirit and vitality which no merely graphic skill could impart to it."—World.

"The exhaustive labour she has expended on it, her freedom from religious bias, and unrivalled knowledge of the surroundings and literature of Teresa's life, have resulted in by far the best and most complete biography of Teresa that has yet appeared."—Westminster Gazette.

"If ever a biography were a labour of love, surely these deeply interesting and curiously attaching volumes deserve to be so called."—Daily News.

"It must be admitted that the authoress of the present chronicle has completed her labours, from her own point of view, with scientific thoroughness and a consistently cultivated skill."—Daily Telegraph.

"By the power of sympathy and of patient and self-sacrificing labour Mrs. Cunningham-Graham may be said to have performed a miracle as remarkable as any attributed to Teresa the nun; she has painted a saint who is also a living and breathing woman."—Scotsman.

"Exceedingly well written, very picturesque, complete, accurate, sincere, enthusiastic, and, above all, extremely readable."—Fall Mail Gazette.

"The secret hiring of houses, the surreptitious midnight entries of two or three faithful nuns or friars, the consecrations by stealth of these make-shift convents in town after town, together with the fertility of resource displayed by their foundress in keeping them out of the clutches of this or that outraged authority—all this fills up hundreds of pages of almost exciting, and certainly profoundly interesting, history. The difficulties, triumphs, and death of the saint, and her subsequent canonisation, are subjects exhaustively and well depicted. Such honest labour as the biographer has devoted to her elaborate monograph deserves the frankest recognition. Her glimpses of sixteenth-century life in Spain are vivid and fascinating."—St. James's Gazette.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square, London.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

Published to-day, in 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 36s.

THE MEMOIRS of EDMUND

LUDLOW, Lieutenant-General of the Horse in the Army of the Commonwealth of England, 1625-1672. Edited, with Appendices of Letters and Illustrative Documents, by O. H. FIRTH, M.A.

To be published on May 21, in 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 32s.

AN ESSAY CONCERNING

HUMAN UNDERSTANDING. By JOHN

LOCKE. Collated and Annotated, with Prolegomena, Biographical, Critical, and Historical, by A. CAMPBELL FRASER, Hon. D.C.L., LL.D.

ALSO, BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

BERKELEY.—THE WORKS of

GEORGE BERKELEY, D.D., formerly Bishop of Cloyne; including many of his Writings hitherto unpublished. With Prefaces, Annotations, and an Account of his Life and Philosophy. 4 vols., 8vo, £2 18s.

THE LIFE, LETTERS, &c., separately, 16s.

BERKELEY.—SELECTIONS.

With Introduction and Notes. For the use of Students in the Universities. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

To be published on May 22, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

STUDIES in FORESTRY: being

a Short Course of Lectures on the Principles of Sylviculture delivered at the Botanic Gardens, Oxford, during the Hilary and Michaelmas Terms, 1893. By JOHN NISBET, D. Oec. of the Indian Forest Service.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, with numerous Illustrations, 10s. 6d. net.

ALTERNATING GENERA-

TIONS: a Biological Study of Oak Galls and Gall Flies. By HERMAN ADLER, M.S. Schleswig. Translated and Edited by CHARLES R. STRATON, F.R.C.S.Ed., F.E.S.

Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

INFAMIA: its Place in Roman

Public and Private Law. By A. H. J. GREENIDGE, M.A., Hertford College.

"RULERS OF INDIA."

A Series of Political Biographies, presenting the Epoch-making Periods of Indian History.

Edited by Sir WILLIAM MILN HUNTER, K.C.S.I., M.A., LL.D.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d. each.

AKBAR.

ALBUQUERQUE.

AURANGZIB.

MADHAV RAO SINDHIA.

LORD CLIVE.

DUPLEX.

WARREN HASTINGS.

THE EARL OF MAYO.

SIR THOMAS MUNRO.

EARL AMHERST.

Lord WILLIAM BENTINCK.

EARL OF AUCKLAND.

VISCOUNT HARDINGE.

RANJIT SINGH.

THE MARQUESS OF DALHOUSIE.

THE MARQUESS CORNWALLIS.

HAIDAR ALI AND TIPU SULTAN.

THE MARQUESS WELLESLEY.

THE MARQUESS OF HASTINGS.

MOUNTSTUART ELPHINSTONE.

CLYDE AND STRATHNAIRN.

EARL CANNING.

LORD LAWRENCE.

Full Catalogues will be sent post free on application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE,

CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

SATURDAY, MAY 19, 1894.

No. 1150, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

THE PRIVATE LIFE OF NAPOLEON.

Napoléon Intime. Par Arthur Lévy. (Paris.)The Private Life of Napoleon. From the French. By Stephen Louis Simeon. (Bentley.)

It is not easy to account for the sudden revival of Napoleonic literature of late witnessed. Nothing is improbable in French history; and the time of Prince Napoleon may be coming—he inherits genius in two lines of descent; but Caesarism without a Caesar seems to be condemned by the sorry tragedies of Metz and Sedan. The great and increasing interest that is gathering round the memory and the name of Napoleon is, it appears likely, in the main due to a reaction against the odious calumnies poured forth, after the war of 1870, on the grandest figure of the nineteenth century, whatever may be its flaws and its blemishes. It is scarcely possible, indeed, that the coarse slanders of Taine and Jung would not provoke indignation sooner or later in France; though the warrior of Austerlitz and the author of the Code said, with truth, that adulation, however gross, and defamation, however atrocious, could not permanently affect his fame. The volume before us is a protest against the slanders of the great Emperor, who have been too well received in Europe, and is an attempt to portray, from authentic sources, what Napoleon was in the round of daily life, in his boyhood and youth, in his camp and his court, and in the circle of family and home. The book is one of undoubted merit, were it only because it completely refutes the base falsehoods of many a libeller; and the thorough and conscientious industry and research of M. Arthur Lévy deserve high praise. But it is not satisfactory to try to deal with a great historical character on one side only, and to bring out, so to speak, a part of his life; and in this respect the narrative, full as it is, leaves a sense of much suspicion behind. The treatment, too, of the subject, even within these limits, is not adequate as to some particulars: for instance, the chapter on the early years of Napoleon—an ill-explored but most important passage in a career of marvels without a parallel—is inferior to the other chapters of the work. M. Lévy, besides, if not a mere flatterer, has avoided dark features of Napoleon's conduct, which ought to have been examined and explained. Great men should be always painted with their scars; and to do otherwise is to invite detraction. The author, we should add, is somewhat wanting in art and insight: we do not see the image of his great original through the mass of details he has heaped around it; his conception of Napoleon is rather weak and commonplace; the hand of Correggio could not draw a Titan; and that is a defect of this volume. The translation of the book, from the experienced pen of Mr. Louis Simeon, is very well done; and Messrs. Bentley, as was to be expected, have, as publishers, admirably performed their task.

M. Lévy's account of the first years of Napoleon is, we have said, the most faulty part of this work. This is the more unfortunate, because Jung has dwelt on this subject at great length; and this slanderer, who has compared Napoleon to Bazaine—Good Heavens! what shall we hear of next?—has distorted the facts with industrious malice. M. Lévy ought to have shown that, as always happens in the case of genius of the very first order, we see the germs of the character of the future warrior and ruler even in his later teens. His strong regard for order, his intense industry, his pride, his ambition, his organising gifts, his profound craft, his imaginative power, his love for the ties of family, his religious sympathies, even his aptitude for the highest parts of war, may be traced in the beardless young man of twenty. It is wholly untrue that, as M. Lévy hints, Napoleon was a commonplace lad at Brienne. As a mathematician he was easily first: more than one of his masters said that he would rise to greatness; and a report of a somewhat later date presents to us a most striking and strongly marked nature. M. Lévy truly remarks that Jung is wrong in asserting that Napoleon was not distinguished in his apprenticeship as an artillery officer: the contrary is proved by the clearest evidence; but no reference is made to the earnest studies in military history, law and government, and cognate subjects, of the future lord of the continent; and it is much to be desired that the precious notes which, Lanfrey tells us, still exist of these labours, should be published, crude or even uncouth as they may be. We do not rate highly the known writings of Napoleon's youth; but Mirabeau praised the "History of Corsica" greatly—we confess we cannot understand why; and the "Letter to Buttafuoco," and the "Supper of Beaucaire," are instinct with genuine thought and passion, the last, too, with sound reflections on war. M. Lévy has dealt very slightly on those obscure passages in Napoleon's career, when he was dismissed from the army, and when he played a kind of Eighteenth Brumaire in Corsica: Jung has placed these in the very worst light, and a commentator of this day should enlarge on them. It is a mistake to suppose, as M. Lévy says, that Napoleon was not the master spirit in the famous operations of the siege of Toulon, the first exhibition of his genius in war. His correspondence reveals his well-known plan; the narrative of his commentaries has become history, and is fully accepted, even by Lanfrey. As to the young artillery officer not being singled out for special eulogy in orders of the day, this mere negation is of no real value; and Marmont, certainly an unfriendly witness, says that Napoleon's ascendancy in the army was complete. M. Lévy, too, has almost slurred over a curious passage in the Emperor's life, his relations with the younger Robespierre, an accident which has made defamers describe him as a Jacobin terrorist; a more ridiculous falsehood was never uttered, as Napoleon's acts at this very time attest. Nor do we find much in this book concerning the intrigues through which, in 1795, Napoleon was kept down before Vendémiaire—another nook of history that ought to be searched; and M. Lévy hardly refers to the campaign of 1794—the prelude to the masterpiece of 1796—though the arms of France on the Italian frontier were really directed in 1794 by the coming chief of Arcola and Rivoli.

The campaign of Italy revealed Napoleon to fortune; and thenceforward his commanding figure overshadowed and directs European history, until it vanishes in 1815. M. Lévy, confining himself to his task, glances at that career of wonders from the inner side; and he has done, in the main, his work ably. The detractors, who have denied Napoleon's genius in war—even the capable but unscrupulous Charras—have long ago disappeared into nothingness: they deserve no more attention than the petty experts who have laboured in vain to puff up Moltke into the proportions of the mighty chief of Austerlitz. Napoleon was truly the modern Hannibal: not that, like all warriors, he did not commit mistakes; but that in originality, in resource, in calculation, in craft, in all that constitutes, in a word, a great captain, he stands easily supreme over the generals of this age. M. Lévy has brought out very well one of the Emperor's highest military gifts, his power over the hearts of his soldiery; and he has justly remarked that Napoleon's Marshals were, in too many instances, ungrateful servants. But he has not indicated, with sufficient clearness, how these satellites were reduced to puppets by the domination of their mighty master, and how this was often attended with bad results in the field. We do not find in this work an allusion to Napoleon's foreign and internal policy; and this subject should have been noticed, however limited was the scope of the author. The colossal ambition which remodelled the map of Europe in the nineteenth century, which made France supreme in three-fourths of the continent, and which conceived the famous Continental system, shows a nature essentially of a different kind from that of the rulers and statesmen of the day; but it also proves that, splendid as were his gifts, Napoleon was wanting in the highest wisdom, and did not rightly comprehend the forces that control events in the modern world. So, too, the majestic reforms of the Consulate give Napoleon a place among the greatest men who have founded states and created empires; but here again he misinterpreted the time, and he almost undid his work by his rule of despotic force. M. Lévy, however, has dwelt with effect on what we may call the internal working of Napoleon's government abroad and at home. He does justice to the astonishing energy, the neverceasing attention to details, and, in a word, the matchless administrative power exhibited by Napoleon in his gigantic task; and he has truly pointed out that the First Consul and Emperor succeeded in getting together a body of most capable public servants, if some of them were corrupt and faithless, and nearly all had suffered from the bad influence of an era of revolutionary change. And M. Lévy has dwelt, with correct emphasis, on a marked feature of Napoleon's conduct, in this position of supreme authority: his sallies of vehemence cannot be denied, but there never was a more generous master, or one who made more allowance for mere errors, while properly intolerant of deception and waste.

We may pass over the special faults of Napoleon's policy abroad and at home. The abandonment of Venice, the quarrel with England, the League of Tilsit, the invasion of Spain, the armistice of Pleistnitz, his suppression of the press, his spy system, his hard, despotic tendencies, illustrate in many ways his character, but do not require particular notice. It is otherwise with what must be deemed his crimes; and here M. Lévy avoids inquiry: yet the ostrich attracts the hunter by hiding its head. Many of the charges made in this respect are false: for example, Lanfrey himself gives up the calumny that Napoleon poisoned plague-stricken soldiers; and no one now believes in the absurd story that the victor of Marengo murdered Désaix, the brilliant lieutenant, who saved him from defeat. The chief of these accusations are two; and we shall say a few words on each. Napoleon certainly handed over to slaughter the Turkish prisoners taken at Jaffa; and the plea that they had broken their parole appears to be not borne out by the facts. This was an atrocious deed of blood; but if we recollect what Europeans have done to Asiatics in too many instances, it is unfair to visit Napoleon with special censure. The same view must in justice be taken of the First Consul's most wrongful acts in the tragic affair of the Duc D'Enghien: the Duc was unfairly made prisoner, was seized in neutral territory, in defiance of law, and was condemned, at dead of night, by a mock-tribunal, without an opportunity of defence, on an obsolete charge, prepared artfully by Napoleon himself. But, in pronouncing on the First Consul's conduct, the character of the age must be borne in mind: it was an age of violence and terrible deeds; it was the age of the execution of Caraccioli and Ney, and of the assassination of the plenipotentiaries of France at Rastadt. Old Europe would do well to lay these things to heart; and it cannot be kept out of sight that a murderous plot, in which one at least of the Bourbons took part, provoked the unhappy tragedy of Vincennes, and that Talleyrand, usually a calm-minded man, was certainly one of its principal authors. These considerations extenuate much; and on the other hand, it is perfectly plain that the nature of Napoleon was humane not cruel, and that his acts of clemency and forgiveness were many and striking. Passing from this subject, we may briefly remark that M. Lévy has done good service, in thoroughly refuting the vile charges of incestuous criminality made against Napoleon. We would not allude to this revolting topic had not Taine dared to recur to it, and to rake in the filth of abominable lies collected by the basest of mankind to tickle the prurient fancy of Louis XVIII. and of other survivors of the Court of Louis XV. No one who has read Napoleon's letters to Pauline, his favourite but often rebuked sister, and to Hortense Beauharnais, his brother's wife, a favourite, too, but often harshly dealt with, could give the slightest credence to these odious calumnies.

M. Lévy's account of Napoleon in the life of home, is indisputably the best part of his work. The narrative, indeed, is overcharged with details, and does not bring out its subject in clear relief; but it is excellent in its copious knowledge and research. Napoleon was not a faithful husband: he had passing attachments and several mistresses; and hypocritical censors may take the admission. But when we recollect that his age was that of the sexual orgies of the French Revolution, and that no man probably was ever more tempted; above all, when we recollect what was the morality of the crowned heads of his day, history will hardly care to throw a stone at him. She notes with irony that George IV. was called the First Gentleman in Europe by those who invoke her adverse sentence on one she must place in proud pre-eminence. M. Lévy has thrown some fresh light on the early married life of Joséphine, and has conclusively shown that, while Napoleon at first loved her with heartfelt passion, she regarded him with ill-concealed indifference, and, in all probability, was faithless to him. Bearing this fact in mind, the Emperor was a most indulgent husband to a very worthless consort. As for the divorce, it was a high act of state, sanctioned by Joséphine and the nation as a whole; it is truly amazing to hear it denounced by those who approve the proceedings against Queen Caroline. The marriage with Marie Louise was another affair of politics. Napoleon's delicate attentions and unceasing kindness to his Austrian wife cannot be gainsaid, calamitous as the marriage proved to himself; her own letters proved she was really touched by them. But hers was a shallow and ignoble nature; she disgraced herself by an adulterous passion; and she was utterly unworthy of a man like Napoleon. The most attractive and striking features, however, of the purely domestic life of Napoleon will be found in his relations with those of his own blood. The admirable letter written to Letizia Bonaparte, while he was in his teens, on the death of his father—a letter eloquent for its good feeling and judgment—is, so to speak, an index of what Napoleon was to his kindred during his extraordinary life. He shared a crust with Louis, brought up Jérôme, directed the affairs of his indigent home, with the ascendancy which he could not help, but with kindly affection and tact; and, often greatly against his instincts, he raised brothers and sisters to thrones as he rose to empire. His letters to Madame Mère, to Joseph, to Jérôme, nay, to every member of his family, in all that relates to domestic affairs, are models of sense and of good taste and feeling; and the same may be said of those to Eugène, to Hortense, and to all who belonged to them. And nothing, too, could be more unfair than to judge Napoleon by angry expressions employed towards his crowned brothers in thwarting his policy. This was an official correspondence with vassal princes, in most instances utterly in the wrong; and what it really proves is that he had placed, in a great measure, owing to partial kindness, these royal puppets in a false position.

M. Lévy does not dwell much on the minor charges urged against Napoleon by such accusers as Mme. Rémusat and Mme. de Staël. He was occasionally brusque, and even coarse, in manner; but "Hell has no fury like a woman scorned," and diatribes from such mouths scarcely deserve notice. The evidence of Goethe outweighs such stuff. Napoleon's language and bearing had a peculiar charm, and his conversation was pregnant with fine thought and good sense. The intense selfishness that has been laid to his charge was really almost an opposite quality: he identified self with the national greatness, and he staked and lost all in the interest of France. M. Lévy's conception of this great man is, we have remarked, imperfect and weak. Napoleon had little of the "upright bourgeois" in him, as little as of the "condottiere" of Taine, or the utterly unprincipled "bravo" of Jung. On the contrary, he possessed, in the very highest degree, the genius Italy has now and then produced: he certainly was superior to Caesar in war, he had the art of ruling of the great Roman Pontiffs. In his essential nature, too, he was noble and grand, flawed, no doubt, with passion, but commanding reverence for fine aspirations and glorious aims: large-minded, generous, and with deep sympathies: in some respects an image of the fabled Prometheus. He saved France from defeat and anarchy; he gave her all that is solid in her social structure; and if he overran the continent he did it immense benefits. Why then was his fall so sudden and terrible, and why has calumny ever since been at work upon him? It was because Napoleon, in some respects, was not a man of the nineteenth century: his ideal was that of one of the great conquerors and legislators who establish empires in the earliest stages of human progress; and his gigantic work was not in harmony with his time. He trusted a nation spoiled by revolution, and never stable throughout its history; he defied the order of long settled Europe and the forces of ancient tradition and usage; and striking against the flaming walls of the world, he perished, overwhelmed by his own greatness. But his figure, even in ruin, is sublime; and the herd of libellers who try to deface it "strike in vain," as he said, "on unyielding granite."

WILLIAM O'CONNOR MORRIS.

TWO BOOKS ON GREEK LITERATURE.

The Growth and Influence of Classical Greek Poetry. By R. C. Jebb. (Macmillans.)

Some Aspects of the Greek Genius. By S. H. Butcher. (Macmillans.)

THE editor of Sophocles and the translator of the Odyssey are too well known to scholars to need a word of commendation. The name of either master guarantees the excellence of the book which bears it. But each of these volumes is addressed to a wider public than the immediate pupils of either professor, or the critical student of Greek in general. The aim of both is to show what the Greek genius did for the enlightenment and joy of the world, and to claim for Greek literature the honour which is due to it, though grudgingly conceded nowadays by many who fancy that we have nothing more to learn from Plato, and that Homer is as dead as Beowulf or Klopstock. If any scorn Greek, let him read Prof. Jebb or Prof. Butcher, and mark the earnest conviction with which a man of many-sided culture, fully aware of the claims of modern literature, traces much of what is best in it back to Hellenic sources. If any honour Greek, let him read it.

"Vos exemplaria Græca

Nocturna versate manu, versate diurna."

But in a leisure hour between day and night, when the Anthology is more to your mind than Aeschylus or Pindar, remind Horace, if he chide you, that Homer nods and Apollo's bow is not always strung, and read in charming English, full of the best Greek qualities, proportion, sanity, music, the history of all that was quick and stirring in Hellas, centuries before the birth of intellect in the West and North of Europe. If the poets alone enchant you, read Prof. Jebb; if you would discover unexpected charms in Demosthenes, and new lessons for this age in the political precepts of Aristotle, read Prof. Butcher too, and skip none of his quotations. Are you zealous for Hebraism? You will find that a faith in "le miracle grec" need not estrange you from "le miracle juif." Both writers recognise frankly that Greek morality, though high, was narrow, and allow that the Bible possesses, in a truer sense even than Hellenic literature, the gift of eternal youth, and a new significance for each generation.

The lectures on Greek poetry were delivered in 1892 at Baltimore, during Prof. Jebb's tenure of the Percy Turnbull Memorial Lectureship of Poetry. A graceful Greek epigram fitly commemorates the occasion. The eight lectures cover the history of Greek poetry from the Homeric to the Alexandrian period, though they do not discuss in much detail any later poetry than that of Euripides. The writer has brought into prominence the organic development of Greek poetry during its three chief periods: the epic, the lyric, the dramatic. In all of these it was intimately and vitally associated with the life of the Greek nation. "The laws of epos were evolved by the conditions of a minstrel's recitation at a banquet, or on some public occasion. The laws of the lyric were shaped by the requirements of choral worship at Dorian festivals, or by the usages of Aeolian society. The principal laws of drama were determined by the Attic ritual of Dionysus." Thus from Homer to Pindar, from Pindar to Aeschylus and Sophocles, the progress was orderly and logical: first came the narrative, then the ode, then the combination of the two, with the addition of dialogue. The great procession of the poets moved in a stately order, guided and sustained by a venerable tradition. There were no other sacred books than their hymns and tragedies; there was as yet no prose. Homer was to the Athenians almost as venerable as Moses and the Prophets to Israel; and his successors, more consciously than he, held it their duty and privilege as well to teach religion and morality as to uphold the strict canon of literary form. Euripides, as his contemporaries themselves observed, introduced a certain licence both in matter and in style; and modern writers agree in discerning in him the first beginning of the romantic drama. At least he was the last of the great line. After him different styles and classes of composition sprang up without so much method or logical sequence as had hitherto prevailed: the comedy of manners, the pastoral idyll, the epigram, the didactic poem, the artificial epic, were all in fashion, and each man wrote as he would, in the manner of the Roman, and of most modern schools of poetry.

Thus, Prof. Jebb dwells most fully on the five poets, whom he regards as the most characteristic of the true Hellenic age: Homer, Pindar, and the three great Attic tragedians. He gives a whole lecture, indeed, to the early lyric poets, of whom we possess so few but so splendid fragments; but he devotes an equal space to Pindar alone, the greatest of them all; and we would choose this lecture on Pindar as a specimen of the writer's skill at its best. It gives a brilliant picture of the age in which Pindar lived, in the pride of his strength and skill, raised always by his primacy in song as far above ordinary mortals as were the Olympic victors, for whom he sang, in the moment of their triumph. But Pindar is too lavish of splendid phrases and magnificent metaphors: the very wealth of his inexhaustible genius becomes fatiguing. He was a Theban, and Thebes was the capital of Boeotia. The Thebans were the élite of that provincial district, and Pindar was without a peer in Thebes. "The great Emathian conqueror" thought so; and the poet Cowley, in one of his Pindarique Odes, has justly observed that

Pindar is imitable by none;

The Phoenix Pindar is a vast Species alone.

But he was sometimes ponderous, and did not possess that perfect taste and sobriety which charm us here and there among the poets of "the sprinkled isles," but which were pre-eminently Attic, and belonged, most of all Athenian poets, to Sophocles.

Of Athens Renan has said: "Il y a un lieu où la perfection existe: il n'y en a pas deux: c'est celui-là." Athens was the home of the drama: it was the home, too, of the great Greek prose writers, of the historians and the orators, and, above all, of Plato, whose inimitable style conveys not the mere results of thought, but thought itself, alive and ever changing in the rapid, elusive turns of the dialogue. A keen, lively criticism of the life around them gives a freshness and vitality to the Attic authors, to which writers of a more literary and bookish age have seldom attained. Prof. Butcher dwells at length on this aspect of the Greek genius in his chapter on "The Written and the Spoken Word," with regrets that reading has so largely superseded speech in modern life, that conversation worthy of the name is almost extinct, and that learning suffers in being kept apart from life. The essays entitled "What we owe to Greece," "The Greek idea of the State," and "The Unity of Learning" are already familiar, we hope, to many; for they, and the rest of the series, with one exception, appeared in the first edition of the book, which contained also a longer essay, now detached from it, on the "Poetics of Aristotle." The collection would have gained in unity of style by the sacrifice of another member, the essay on "Sophocles." This was originally an excellent review of Prof. Jebb's edition of the Oedipus Tyrannus; it has been transformed into an essay on the dramatist, not with complete success. By the style of the more independent essays, it is convicted of an humbler origin. The book in its present form ends with a new chapter on "The Dawn of Romanticism in Greek Poetry," which should be read in close connexion with that on "The Melancholy of the Greeks." With all their love of brilliant lights and sharp outlines, both in the world of thought and in that of sense, there were moments when the Greeks of all generations wandered into shadowy places, and shuddered and were afraid. The terrors of death, the dread of an unknown future, chilled them in the midst of life; and they turned for consolation, as modern poets have done, to the tranquil beauty of the natural world.

CAMPBELL DODGSON.

The Gospel according to Peter: a Study. By the Author of "Supernatural Religion." (Longmans.)

THE conclusion reached by the author in this treatise is: that in the recently recovered fragment of the Gospel according to Peter we have a primitive and less crystallised form of the Christian tradition as it has come to us in the three Synoptic Gospels, and that it furnishes no evidence which requires us to assign it to a later date than the canonical Gospels. On the other hand, strong efforts have been made to show that the writer of the Petrine Gospel worked with all our canonical Gospels before him, and that, where he does not follow them, the apparently new matter found in the fragment is in almost every instance taken from the Old Testament writings by a process commonly spoken of as the Gnosis. The method of interpretation therein followed was systematised in the second century, and more especially in the second half of it, and therefore the Petrine fragment cannot be assigned to an earlier time.

In the application of this test, the fragment has not been quite fairly dealt with. Obviously the argument cannot be urged against it with any show of justice, unless it can be shown that this method of the Gnosis has not affected the form of our canonical Gospels, or has affected it in much slighter measure. To this point I confine myself in these remarks. It is not too much to say that the whole controversy turns upon it. The contention, then, is that in Gospels written subsequently to our canonical ones the Gnosis led directly to the invention of incidents, and consequently to the growth of a false history, and that from this tendency the canonical Gospels are at all events comparatively free. If this may not be asserted, the argument is manifestly at fault. It is implied that we have nothing in our Four Gospels which carries us to the full development of this Gnosis, as it is put before us in the Peregrinatio ad loca sancta ascribed to Silvia of Aquitaine. For three hours daily during the forty days of the Lenten fast, the people were taught at Jerusalem, as Silvia puts it, that "nothing took place which had not been foretold, and nothing had been foretold which had not obtained its fulfilment." Prophecy, it is urged, thus reacted on history, or on what passed for such. Nay, it not merely furnished details of incidents, it supplied materials for incidents, and even for whole series of incidents. So great, we are told, was the success achieved, that "it becomes difficult to distinguish what may be a direct reference in a prophetic book from a trick of style borrowed from the prophet or pure legend invented out of their writings." We are further told that, whatever other results may be produced by such a system as this, it cannot fail to impair the historical sense, and finally to destroy it. It is manifest that an incident suggested by words or phrases in a book is not an incident of history at all. The colouring of an incident is one thing; the fact, which may be described in high-flown or exaggerated language, is another. But if the supposed fact itself owes its birth to a supposed prediction, it has no foundation, and it answers to nothing beyond the imagination or inventiveness of the writer. This manufacturing of what is meant to be taken as history is set down as the special sin of the author of the Petrine Gospel. He has been spoken of as an adept in this method of prophetic interpretation, and is therefore marked as one who has worked up or fabricated his history at a time when this system of Gnosis was in full swing. In other words, the Gospel could not have been written before the closing years of the second century.

To say the least, this is a broad and sweeping conclusion to draw from extremely slender evidence, if indeed we ought not to pronounce the whole argument to be altogether inadmissible. Clearly, unless the Canonical Gospels can be proved to be entirely different in method from this supposed Petrine Gospel, the argument cannot with any fairness be applied to the latter. A few verses of this Gospel are all that have been recovered as yet from the sepulchres at Akhmim; but we need not await further discoveries before we say that this argument is a two-edged sword. It is indisputable that, if any discredit be attached to this Gospel from the supposed way in which it has been put together, the same discredit must in the right measure be attached to all other narratives which betray the influence and presence of the same method and system. I am in no way concerned to defend the author of this fragment. My contention is only that he is not fairly (nay, that he is most unfairly) dealt with, if it can be shown that his habits of thought and impression are fully shared by the compilers of the canonical Gospels. It is merely inequitable to discredit the Petrine writer for constructing his narrative on a framework furnished by the language of ancient prophecy, unless it can be first shown that the charge does not apply to the canonical Evangelists. It is quite possible (if it be not in a high degree likely) that a close examination of the Synoptic and Johannine narratives may force on us the conclusion that a vast number of incidents mentioned in them are referred to passages in the Old Testament, and that of all the passages so cited there is scarcely one which has not been misunderstood and misquoted, or else so twisted as to deceive all who are not on their guard against this so-called Gnosis. It is impossible to go into this question here in full detail. It is enough to say that the passage, for instance, which is used for the warrant or sanction for the fact of the flight to Egypt and the return thence has been obtained by cutting away the whole context of five or six words, which are thus made to mean that God called the infant Jesus out of Egypt, although the call in the prophecy is strictly and solely the call addressed to a rebellious house and to children given over to idolatry. If the charge against the Petrine evangelist is to be sustained, then the Synoptic narrative of the flight into Egypt and its sequel has as much and as little reality as the Gnosis which spied it out in the sentences of Hosea.

Nor, indeed, can it be said with truth that the language of the Psalms has affected only the style of the first Synoptist, when he comes to speak of the parabolic teaching of Jesus. The intent and purpose of this teaching is declared to be the blinding of the people in order that they should not be healed and their sins be forgiven them. This openly acknowledged purpose is declared to be set forth by the prophet Isaiah; but when we turn to the prophetic page, we find that he is not speaking of parables at all, and that the words have precisely the opposite meaning; and it is clear that the Evangelist misrepresents the Great Teacher quite as much as he misrepresents the prophet whose words he professes to cite. But if the Gospel of Peter is to be discredited on the ground of a Gnosis which has suggested the incidents of the narrative, then the introduction of the long series of parables is due to the same Gnosis applied to a passage of Isaiah, which means something totally different.

Still more significant is the change which suddenly comes over the Synoptic narratives, when Jesus sets His face to go to Jerusalem, and puts before the disciples the details of coming events. There is no reason for this change in previous occurrences, and the catastrophe now predicted is set forth not in mere indefinite outline, but in the most minute detail. The whole is put before the disciples as an issue to be brought about by an inexorable necessity, and to be brought about also in precise accordance with the sayings of prophets who had lived in the old time. If, then, the charge brought against the Petrine Gospel is to be pushed home here, it will follow that the history of the Passion is built up on a collection of sayings gleaned from the old writings; or, in other words, is not history at all. But there is no warrant for denying that they are, or that they may be, the outgrowth of a Gnosis applied to old prophetic writings. All the passages cited are more or less misquoted and misunderstood, and some of them mutilated or garbled.

And, further, the exercise of this Gnosis is openly avowed in the Synoptics. It is said to receive its supreme sanction from the risen Teacher himself in the closing narratives of the third canonical Gospel. The two disciples on the way to Emmaus are rebuked, not for the shortness of their memory and for their disregard of facts made known to them in their own experience, but for their unbelief of what the prophets had spoken. The things which had perplexed them must happen because they had been foretold; and because they had been foretold, therefore the Christ must suffer them. So in the manifestation which subsequently took place, Jesus tells them that all the things written in the Law of Moses and in the Prophets and Psalms concerning Him must be fulfilled. Their eyes are then opened, not that they might be able to weigh the evidence of facts, but that they might understand the writings (Luke xxiv. 44) which must be fulfilled. We have here not perhaps the exact words ascribed to Silvia of Aquitaine; but we have, nevertheless, a clear statement of the two canons laid down in the Peregrinatio ad loca sancta, (1) that nothing took place which had not been foretold, and (2) nothing had been foretold which had not obtained its fulfilment. Most assuredly in this argument we have not the smallest justification for assigning the Gospel of Peter to an author who had all, or any, of our canonical Gospels before him.

I have kept myself to one point in an inquiry which may prove to be momentous. The author of this "Study" on the Petrine Gospel has gone over the whole ground with a completeness which seems to leave nothing to be desired, and with a patience never broken by the vehemence of controversy. The subject is one in which nothing can be done to any good purpose, except by the exercise of a scrupulously fair and dispassionate judgment.

GEORGE W. COX.

Memorials of Old Haileybury. By Sir M. Monier-Williams, etc. (Constable.)

THIS handsome volume labours somewhat under the disadvantage of defective editing: while, as a collection of contributions by numerous hands, it contains incoherencies, repetitions, and inaccuracies. The register of names at the end has been compiled in a perfunctory way: no dates of birth, details of parentage, or education being given, nor any due identification of those who—like the late Dean Merivale—left the College without entering the Indian Civil Service. It may, nevertheless, be conscientiously welcomed and commended as a noticeable book: executed, indeed, with unequal degrees of ability, but usually with care, and always in a spirit of urbanity and consideration, alike for the living and the dead.

The East India College—to give the exact title of what is here called “old Haileybury”—was opened, in 1806, as an academy for the special training of aspirants to the higher class of posts in the transmarine administration of the Company. Closed in 1857, its existence of half-a-century just indicates the appearance and disappearance of a system of government which could only be tentative and temporary, but which, none the less, produced men who had an important influence on Indian history. Among the civilians turned out by the College may be mentioned Holt Mackenzie and R. M. Bird, the great agrarian reformers, to whom is due the social and commercial prosperity—such as it is—of Hindustan. Other names will occur to those who have any knowledge of the subject, such as those of Thoby Prinsep, Sir G. Clerk, Bryan Hodgson, James Thomason, John Muir, Lord Lawrence, Sir George Campbell, Sir R. Temple, Sir Alfred Lyall, and many more: men who showed various abilities, in India especially, but sometimes in less remote fields of distinction. During the terrible year of the Mutiny, several of the Haileybury men were exposed to trials for which the training of the College could have afforded no special preparation. The writer of this notice may be excused if he observes that he has recorded these services elsewhere (Fifty-Seven, 1883), although Sir M. Monier-Williams does not appear to have heard of the work.

Nor would comic elements be wholly wanting to a complete account of the College, although Sir Monier assures us that he has endeavoured to exclude them:—“I soon became aware,” he says in the opening of that section for which he is particularly responsible, “that to make my chronicle at all valuable, it would be necessary to resist the temptation to be simply amusing.” Nevertheless, a certain amount of anecdotic frivolity has found its way, here and there, the best part being that relating to the Rev. Richard Jones, late of the Charity Commission, who was for some years Professor of Political Economy at the College. This able but eccentric divine was compelled by the academic routine to take his turn with the other ordained Professors as a preacher in the College chapel, and the grotesque nature of those appearances receives adequate description in the present work:—

“The pulpit was in front of the altar, and stood facing the congregation, with its back to the communion-rails. It had to be ascended with some agility from behind, and the manifestation was rather like that of the figure of those toy-boxes whose lid you open, and whose inmate starts at once into considerable stature. First, an amazing rumbling of stools (over which Jones invariably fell), then a panting for breath, a groaning and a muttering; and lastly, with a start, the elevation of a huge torso, surmounted by a colossal red face incarnadined beyond its wont by recent exertion, and this again wreathed in a little brown wig, somewhat disarranged by the troubles of the ascent.”—From a note by J. W. Sherer, C.S.I.

Some capital anecdotes are added, to illustrate the character of the discourses which usually resulted from this truly prodigious presentation; and in this one instance, at least, the editor and his contributors have by no means resisted the temptation to make their work amusing. It is, perhaps, a pity that they could not find room for “The Rape of the Billiard-table,” which might have supplied a still more striking chapter. Does a certain noble Marquess recollect when his name was associated with that of a far humbler individual in a magistrate’s warrant on a charge of burglary?

But these lights and shadows of college life ought not to hide from us the important fact that the teaching at Haileybury was often imparted by men of real distinction. Henry Melvill, the famous preacher; Jeremie, afterwards Regius Professor at Cambridge and Dean of Lincoln; Edward Eastwick, T. R. Malthus, Sir James Stephen, Sir James Mackintosh, Empson, editor of the Edinburgh Review—these were only the best known out of a body of really high-class men who at one time or another filled chairs. Some at least of the students derived from the lectures of such men the materials of culture and knowledge; and a full description of college life from the professorial point of view would be relieved by many interesting associations. Harriet Martineau, who visited the college as the guest of Malthus in 1832-4, has given a pleasant picture, which Sir Monier has done well to prefix to his own narrative.

There are only two Haileybury civilians in the service now; and when Mr. Justice Prinsep shall have laid aside his ermine, and Sir Charles Pritchard made his last speech in the Viceregal Council, the species will be as extinct as the Dodo. They were of all sorts, but in general possessed the common qualities of courage and honesty, being loyal to their employers—of whom they were often sons or nephews—and faithful to the people of India, for administering whose affairs they received a modest recompense. As the Alma Mater of these men “old Haileybury” deserved a record.

H. G. KEENE.

NEW NOVELS.

Katherine Lauderdale. By F. Marion Crawford. In 3 vols. (Macmillans.)

A Daughter of Music. By G. Colmore. In 3 vols. (Heinemann.)

A Great Temptation. By Dora Russell. In 3 vols. (White.)

The Recipe for Diamonds. By C. J. Cutcliffe Hyne. (Heinemann.)

Lost on Du-Corrig, or 'Twixt Earth and Ocean. By Standish O’Grady. (Cassells.)

Needs Must. By Amelia S. C. Young (Pamela Sneyd). (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

The New Arcadia. An Australian Story. By Horace Tucker. (Sonnenschein.)

From the last chapter of Katherine Lauderdale, the reader learns that it is the first of a series of novels dealing with contemporary life in the United States, as that life is illustrated in the fortunes of a New York family. The series will do for American society what a preceding series did for Italian society, with apparently this difference: that it will deal only with the annals of a single generation, and that it will, therefore, be more restricted in range, and consequently more minute in treatment, than the set of stories which closed with Pietro Ghisleri. Indeed, in this matter of minuteness Katherine Lauderdale is probably unique—is certainly all but unique—in English or American fiction. Its three well-filled volumes are occupied with the events of only five days; and, though they are certainly five very critical and determining days in the history of the two principal characters, the experiment is as bold as it is novel. More important, however, than its boldness or its novelty, is the fact of its conspicuous success. The material supplied by imagination and invention fills admirably the space allotted to it; and the only defect in the literary mechanism of the novel is the introduction in the first volume of an appallingly complicated genealogical problem which every reader will find unappetising, and which most readers will leave as insoluble. Happily, however, one makes the discovery that it is easy to enjoy a very admirable story without knowing the exact degrees of relationship or connexion existing among John Ralston, Hamilton Bright, Frank Miner, Walter Crowdie, and the great army of Lauderdales; so the genealogical trouble is both trifling and transient. Katherine Lauderdale is, in one important respect, a great improvement upon its immediate predecessor. There is not perhaps a greater body of story in the new book than there was in Marion Darche; but Katherine Lauderdale is much more substantial and “feeding,” more direct and business-like: there are none of those pages of brilliant, elusive irrelevance which made one think that in the course of his travels westward a delightful writer had got a little off the line of least resistance. We soon perceive the motive of the story—John Ralston’s unfortunate habit, and its possible influence upon his relations with Katherine; and never for the course of a single chapter are we out of touch with this dominant theme, which, it may be noted as a striking illustration of the recent trend of fiction, would have been an all but impossible theme ten years ago. Of course Janet’s Repentance, which is more than thirty-five years old, may be quoted against me; but the example is hardly to the point, for the interest of George Eliot’s story is tragic, and it is only very lately that so obvious a motive as a habit of intemperance has been lifted from the region of farce into that of serious comedy. Mr. Crawford’s treatment of it is singularly skilful—skilful alike in its emphasis and its avoidances—if, indeed, this be the right word to use, for the combined reticence and adequacy of the portrait of Ralston are due less to mere skill than to that healthy artistic instinct, the flower of which is perfect taste. Ralston, rather than Katherine, is really central in the book, which, nevertheless, is perhaps rightly named, as she is the dominating influence in his life, and is therefore the maker of the story. The subordinate personages, who are to come to the front in succeeding novels, are drawn with a few strong characteristic strokes, the only one of them who seems unsatisfactory being Walter Crowdie, the painter, about whom we are told either too much or too little. Even he, however, excites curiosity, and in the first number of a narrative series such excitement is indispensable. The best compliment I can pay to Katherine Lauderdale takes the form of apparent paradox. It satisfies its reader, and at the same time leaves him hungry.

A policy of non-committal is safe, and there would be perfect safety even in committing oneself to the statement that A Daughter of Music is a novel of exceptional ability and force. It is this, undoubtedly; but it is more than this: it is a book characterised by something which is very like genius. The moorland solitude, with its single journeying figure, on which the curtain rises, and the wayfarer's welcome to Heather Don took one reader back at once to hours of boyish entrancement at Wuthering Heights; and, to the close of the third volume, a spell like that of the strange story of Heathcliff and Edgar and Catherine was upon him. Still, there are differences between A Daughter of Music and the masterpiece of Emily Brontë, which are not less important than the obvious resemblances. They are both books of sombre power and passion; but in the more recent one there is manifest an instinctive and well cultivated aesthetic sense, which gives a new charm, though it was the very absence of this sense which left Emily Brontë free for the relentless realism that arrests and holds the imagination. A Daughter of Music is the story of the conflict of two men for dominance over a woman, and of the conflict in the woman herself between soul and sense, or, as she puts it, between the demands of her "life" and of her "nature." Rhoda Wichelow, with her sphinx-like Leonardo face, has loved since childhood Paul Garnet, the sole companion of her moorland isolation, and in him has found full satisfaction. Then into her life comes Anthony Dexter, with his potent magic of music, which stirs her sense, and something deeper than her sense; and the new spirit which the music evokes challenges to mortal conflict the old content and fidelity. Some of the battles in the campaign are magnificent examples of imaginative realisation—notably the scene in the twilight at Fanelands Hall, where Anthony calls to Rhoda in the stormy seductive voice of the organ, and Paul, holding her back by sheer force of will, wins what seems a decisive victory. It is decisive for a time; and though a day comes in which Anthony has his victory, it is a short-lived affair. Still it lives on, with fateful consequence, in Rhoda's clouded and empty life—a life lived in the shadow of a curse which she sees in course of fulfilment, as Anthony Dexter's son and heir reveals himself as one of those to whom the terrible music is the very breath of being. The story of how through the curse comes redemption and reconciliation, must be read in the pages of a novel which ought not to be ignored by any lover of work which is as beautiful as it is powerful. I am so ignorant of G. Colmore that I do not know whether the name should be prefixed by Mr., Mrs., or Miss; but I do know that A Daughter of Music has impressed me more strongly than I have been impressed by any story of its order for a long time.

There are doubtless worse novels than A Great Temptation; but Miss Dora Russell is really at home only among plots, murders, and mysteries, and when she dispenses with these elements of interest she is almost dull. Sir Ralph Woodland is not so wicked as he might have been, and for this relief much thanks; but his folly is so great that a little more wickedness of the kind expected from a baronet would be preferable. He falls head-over-heels in love with Laura Ingram, in whose goodness he has every reason to believe, yet he listens with fatuous credulity to the slanders of another girl, whom he has every reason to suspect; and without a word he cuts Laura, leaving her destitute, and, so far as he knows, friendless. Then, when the poor girl, broken down by despair, marries the worthy George Gifford, the baronet reappears, and sets himself to the high-minded task of endeavouring to make her his mistress. Laura resists her would-be seducer, but he manages effectually to spoil the life of the man to whom she owes everything; and the conclusion of the whole matter is that Gifford is removed by a convenient attack of typhoid fever, in order that his widow and her baronet may be virtuously happy ever after. A Great Temptation is a poor thing. A novel may be lifelike without being edifying; but when it is unedifying without being in the least lifelike, there is very little to be said for it.

There is some fantastic originality in the literary manner of The Recipe for Diamonds. It is not like the ordinary conventional story, but the points of difference are not altogether points of advantage. The book seems to have been written in high spirits and also in a hurry, and one gets the impression that, when Mr. Hyne made his beginning, he was not at all sure about his ending. The opening of the story—so far, at any rate, as its plot is concerned—is the purchase of a MS. volume, which turns out to be the private diary of that famous dabbler in things occult, Raymond Lully. Among the entries is a reference to a formula for crystallising wood carbon; and the story is devoted to the search after this recipe for diamonds, which has been inscribed on the wall of a cave in the Island of Majorca. The narration of the quest which is to ensure wealth beyond the dreams of avarice has some farcical humour; but it is a humour which suggests the crackling of thorns under a pot. The peculiar quality of Mr. Hyne's story is a random, ineffective cleverness.

In a tale of simple invention and adventure, mere novelty counts for much; and Mr. Standish O'Grady's Lost on Du-Corrig has more of freshness and originality than have been found to be in a book of its kind for many a long day. The strange disappearance of the two Irish lads, who vanish without leaving a clue behind them, is a motive rich in possibilities of exciting narrative; and these possibilities are admirably utilised in the skilfully wrought story of the underground adventures of John and Edward Freeman. When, as here, a good idea and a good style are combined, we have a good book.

The sketch of Madame Suzanne, who traffics with society women as a purchaser and vendor of discarded costume, provides Needs Must with a bright, fresh opening; and, if the author could have maintained her level, the book—which, as it stands, is not bad—would have been better. It has vivacity, which counts for much, but it is deficient in shapeliness, which counts for something; and it therefore leaves the reader not wholly satisfied. The practice of beginning a story from three or four points is an irritating one, and in other respects the arrangement is very faulty. Still, the narrative has movement and sprightliness, which have to be set against its faults, and to which the writer does injustice by a meaningless title. The fitting title would have been "The Green Diamond."

It is impossible to award to The New Areadia any warmer praise than that implied in the remark that it is a well-meant and by no means ill-written book. The success of Mr. Edward Bellamy's Looking Backward has been rather unfortunate, inasmuch as it has been the means of inspiring various writers—and Mr. Tucker is one of them—with the belief that it is an easy thing to combine the preaching of sociological dogma and the writing of entertaining fiction. So far from being easy, it is one of the most difficult things in the world; and that Mr. Tucker should have failed to overcome the obstacles in the way to success is hardly a thing to be wondered at. That he has failed is certain; but various chapters in the book seem to indicate that, with less weight to carry, he may come nearer to the front. JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

SOME VOLUMES OF VERSE.

Songs without Notes. By Lewis Morris. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

SINCE the days when poetry first began to be published, and to render the singer gold for his song, few writers have touched the lyre to greater profit than Mr. Lewis Morris. Perhaps it is hardly fair to put money before merit, since reward has, strange as it may seem, followed close upon desert. The days have gone by when bards issued masterpieces at prices which sank lower and lower. Fitzgerald and Horne, to consider modern authors only, would not suffer disappointments to-day. It would appear that the national ear is pricked up in hope of a sonnet or ballad. Perhaps it is recognised that in these hardware times there is sufficient temptation for the Muse of England to pack off to less noisy parts. However it may be, there never was a period so favourable to poets. In consequence multitudes come, and many are chosen. We suppose that Mr. Morris can fall into carelessness with easy feelings. His circulation is large; he has a hold upon the affection of the people; one or two indifferent hooks would be insufficient to damage him beyond redemption. Very few readers are critics, and for the thousands it is enough that the name of Lewis Morris appears on the title-page. Professional reviewers, on the contrary, marking the depreciation of the song, rage furiously, in many cases forgetting that they also have written some verses that are not exceedingly glorious. Truth to tell, Mr. Morris in his present volume has fallen far below the standard of Songs of Two Worlds. Occasionally we have come upon verses which bear traces of inspiration, and scattered here and there are fine lines which some of the raging reviewers would be elated by if they had happened to pen them; but candour compels us to assert that, for the most part, Mr. Morris has been content with work which does him no particular honour. Surely in this author's poetical history there was a time when his ear was truer! One of the most remarkable declensions from merit in Songs without Notes is the bewildering fall of the accents. We do not ask for a penny-in-the-slot kind of regularity, but nothing is more irritating than to suffer, as any sensitive reader must suffer when perusing the following verses:

"'Twas a beautiful morning in Spring,
The laburnums, the lilacs showed fair,
Blue irises blossoming,
And a bustle of life everywhere.

"Now before and above him they dart,
With short flights and encouraging calls;
Now the poor pupil harmlessly falls,
Engrossed in his partly learnt art."

"Partly learnt art" should have been avoided. To drive home our point, we intend to give two more examples of ugly carelessness. The first is from "Anarchy," the second from "On an Empty Cage":

"Then the masquers go wearily home,
And the corpse to the surgeons, and yet
The thought comes, 'Twas a century since
That they killed Marie Antoinette."

"And thou, where art thou? Did swift fate Snatch thee? A fruitfull allegory,
Thy song, thy flight, thy open gate.
Say, was it better to be free?"

After putting forward these specimens, we are not afraid of being accused of captiousness. They do not become the author of the many beauties in Songs of Two Worlds; but it must not be assumed that the old excellence is utterly missing. "The Voice of Spring" is lovely nearly throughout; the lines to Tennyson are marked by true feeling; "The Hymn of Hilbert" is very cleverly written. We cannot end without quoting "For a Children's Holiday." It will be seen at a glance how the last line but one in the second stanza ruins the flow of the piece:

"Ye to whom wealth lends wings
To bear you from clime to clime,
To treasures of beautiful things—
Palaces, ministers sublime,
Snow mountains and pine-circled lake,
And the purple of summer eases—
Think, think of poor children, and take Compassion on these.

For in stifling courts they are pent
Through the fugitive freshness of June;
Not for them are her roses sent,
Nor her nightingales' passionate tune,
Nor the keen scent of newly mown hay,
Nor the flowing tide's blossom of yeast;
Let these poor rhymes secure them at least
One ineffable day."

It cannot be said that his love for humanity—a quality not too visible in modern verse—has deserted Mr. Lewis Morris. Unfortunately, his book in other respects is distinctly inferior to his former work, and its publication at such a time as the present is not an act of wisdom.

Cuckoo Songs. By Katharine Tynan Hinkson. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.)

The buyers of verse have so many lyrists calling for their shillings that the task of spending what money they have to dispose of has become one of no inconsiderable difficulty.

It is plain that some bards must pine unbought. Bookshelves and pockets have their limits. Obviously those who produce capital verse, correct in form, moderately melodious, but owing too great a debt to earlier singers, must be prepared for the limbo of unregarded things. Verse that is distinguished by some private excellence—that has a novel outlook, a peculiar atmosphere—is sure of acceptance. Of course a ballad cannot compete in popularity with bacon; but there happily survives that intellectual body of men and women who diligently search for, and secure when found, the mental sustenance derived from poetry. Not one of these can afford to pass by Cuckoo Songs. In these short poems, so fresh, so fragrant, so blossomy, there is that very peculiarity of atmosphere which we have just claimed to be necessary to success. Mrs. Hinkson does not only offer us song: she gives us melody in league with a certain quality which is not easily defined. It eludes analysis, as it should do. We are content to think it that kind of Irish magic which, in an intensified degree, governs Mr. W. B. Yeats. Mrs. Hinkson is a lover of birds, and, on the whole, she sings of them delightfully. In one or two instances she has missed her chance. It is impossible not to think of the query about the leopard's spots when the poetess exclaims:

"O my blackbird might grow pale,
Just to hear the nightingale."

It has been written, in essence: thou shalt not envy thy neighbour's ode, thou shalt not envy thy neighbour's sonnet, nor his ballad, nor his quatrain, nor anything that is his. Despite commands so comprehensive and stringent, we cannot help envying the authorship of this quaint poem, "Maggie":

"I love the sweet linnet, the lark, and the thrush,
And the gold-throated blackbird with a song in each bush;
The finch and the robin, I love every one,
But not the pied magpie that's walking alone.

"For whether you're going your sweetheart to meet,
On business or pleasure, in market or street,
To church or to chapel, a bad sign it is
If you meet that one magpie a-taking his ease.

"But if it should chance you to see that ill sight,
First look well around you to left and to right;
For if he's companioned, the two are for mirth,
And three for a wedding, and four for a birth.

"Yet if he's alone show not wrath to the bird,
A little politeness, I've heard it averred,
Will please men and magpies; so throw not a stone,
But lift your hat kindly, and bow, and pass on.

"Bow once, twice and thrice, and the bird, I've heard say,
Will return you a curtesy, both merry and gay.
And this is a charm, sirs, that, well understood,
Will take away bad luck and bring you the good.

"Now all ye sweet lovers, I've told ye my charm
The magpie's bad luck to evade and disarm.
And I wish you in due time two magpies for mirth,
And three for a wedding, and four for a birth."

It would be improper not to state that Mrs. Hinkson occasionally allows herself a liberty in rhyming that is most antagonistic to the pleasure of a reader. Sometimes, too, her verse halts, and she is not careful to separate similar sounds. For instance,

"I marvel with much awe O'er all the Lord hath made."

But a handful of blemishes could not spoil Cuckoo Songs.

The Poems of Thomas Gordon Hake. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.)

The contents of this handsome volume have been selected by Mrs. Meynell; and the same lady has prefixed a few critical remarks that are finely fitting, if once it be granted that Dr. Hake's poetical position is as important as his editor would have us believe. We, perhaps from some fault of temperament, have never been much moved by the utterances of the writer under review, nor are we persuaded to depart from this judgment by Mrs. Meynell's selection. Dr. Hake was certainly influenced by Wordsworth, and, we feel, influenced for the bad. Following an evil example, he soon lost the power of discriminating between details fit for statement in verse, and details better left unregarded. As a consequence, he began to deliver himself of ineptitudes, exactly as Wordsworth too often did. In the volume before us there are two instances that are surely sufficient as witnesses to our contention. This is poor:

"Or give him apples for his lunch,
That he loved leisurely to munch."

And so is this:

"At times he walks upon his head;
A form of prayer for daily bread."

"The Cripple" is a poem that suffers greatly from this kind of painful particularising. A few vivid touches could present a more moving picture than is brought before the mind by Dr. Hake's too facile verses. Surely the writing of such lines as are comprised in the stanza quoted below can give no pleasure to the writer. The artificer can experience no joy in seeing it take shape:

"As a wrecked vessel on the sand,
The cripple to his mother clung;
Close to the tub he took his stand,
While she the linen washed and wrung;
And when she hung it out to dry
The cripple still was standing by."

And the next verse begins with "When she went out to char"! The fact of the matter is that Dr. Hake chose subjects unfitted to his powers. In his pen there was not the magic to weave round simple subjects words that surprise and haunt. He wrote a few splendid poems, and many in which nobilities of thought and expression appear; but no poet of any pretensions flaunts his inequalities so wilfully, unless we except the bard who taught him to transgress, by name William Wordsworth.

The Kestrel's Nest. By Alfred Cochrane. (Longmans.)

Mr. Alfred Cochrane is that rather rare avis, an athletic literary man. When the same individual can turn a ballad, and send down a wicked "yorker" or "bailer," any sensible third person must rejoice at the marriage of brains with biceps. The Kestrel's Nest is a volume of light verse of a most entertaining kind. The early part of the book could not be improved, so felicitous is it in choice of subject and treatment. Not Mr. Andrew Lang himself has surpassed some of Mr. Cochrane's delightful ditties. Merry and melodious, they abound in the right allusions, the happy turns, the captivating refrains. Calverly, Lang, Stephens, and Cochrane, are fit mates to stand side by side on our bookshelf.

NORMAN GALE.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE Syndics of the Cambridge University Press have arranged for the publication of an historical series, under the general editorship of Mr. G. W. Prothero, of King's College. The volumes will be of moderate size, and will be adapted to the requirements of University Extension students as well as of more advanced readers. The first volume, The Revolutionary and Napoleonic Era, 1789-1815, will be by Mr. J. H. Rose, of Christ's College; this will be followed by The Europeans in India, by Mr. H. Morse Stephens, and by a History of Germ-from 1815 to 1871, by Mr. J. W. Headlam, of King's College. Other volumes will be announced shortly.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will publish a collection of the addresses delivered during the past ten years at the annual meetings of the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching. The addresses were delivered by the Duke of Argyll, Mr. Goschen, Mr. John Morley, Bishop Westcott, Prof. Jebb, Sir James Paget, Prof. Max Müller, Canon Browne, and Lord Playfair.

THE Prolegomena to Tischendorf's critical edition of the New Testament, on which Dr. Caspar René Gregory has been working for the last eighteen years, is now complete. The work contains a full account, brought up to date, of all the existing sources of the Greek text, of the Vulgate and other Latin MSS., of the Syriac Tradition, and of the Aethiopic, Coptic, and Gothic Versions. The London publishers are Messrs. Williams & Norgate.

MR. JOHN MURRAY will shortly add an entirely new volume to his series of English Handbooks, dealing with the three counties of Herts, Beds, and Hunts. It will be illustrated with maps and plans.

HALM's pathetic play "Griseldis," which founded his reputation as a dramatist, is about to be published by the Clarendon Press, with annotations and introductions by Prof. Buchheim. The editor will include a critical analysis of the drama with its Arthurian background, and a sketch of the author's life and works, besides the story of Griseldis, based on the versions of Boccaccio and Petrarch, together with a general account of the literary treatment of the subject from Chaucer to our own days.

MR. DOUGLAS FRESHFIELD, with the assistance of Mr. Mummery, Mr. Woolley, and others, has in preparation a Climber's Guide to the chain of the Caucasus between Kasbek and Elbruz. It will contain a time-table of routes from England, with cost, &c., and a selection of routes to the mountain centres from the chief towns on both sides of the chain, as well as such details as to the topography of each district and the expeditions already accomplished as can be collected from mountaineering journals. Four district maps will be given, and probably a few outlines from Signor V. Sella's panorama. As two of the maps, originally produced for the Geographical Society have been taken off the stone, the edition will necessarily be limited to 150 copies. It is hoped that the book will be issued in the spring of 1895.

MESSRS. W. HODGE & Co., Glasgow, have in the press a volume of poems by Mr. Alexander Falconer, entitled Scottish Ballads and Pastorals.

THE forthcoming number of the Century will contain the story of a hypnotic experiment, by Mr. Frank R. Stockton, entitled "The Magic Egg"; and an account of an ascent of Mount Ararat, by the writers of "Across Asia on a Bicycle."

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. are now printing a revised edition of the Citizen Reader, by Mr. H. O. Arnold Forster. The first edition of this work was issued in 1886, and the sale has now reached a quarter of a million copies.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER announce a cheap edition of My Ducats and my Daughter, by the Rev. Hay Hunter and Mr. Walter Whyte; and an English edition of a book on practical religion, by Dr. J. R. Miller, of Philadelphia, entitled A Help for the Common Days.

WEDNESDAY, June 6, has been fixed as the date of the dinner to be given to Mr. George Smith by the contributors to the Dictionary of National Biography. Mr. Sidney Lee, the editor, will occupy the chair.

A COMMITTEE of old Wykehamists, pupils of the late Bishop of St. Andrews, has been formed for erecting a monument to his memory in Winchester College. Subscriptions are limited to one guinea. Any who may wish to contribute are requested to write to the Rev. W. E. C. Austin-Gourlay, Kineraig, Winchester.

PROF. ROGER DE GOEIJ, formerly of Liège, will deliver a course of six lectures in French, on "Eminent Women," at Messrs. Brinsmead's Concert Room, Wigmore-street, on Wednesdays and Saturdays at 3.30 p.m., beginning on May 26. The series will include—Philippa of Hainault, Jeanne de Montfort, Joan of Arc, Margaret More, Mistress Hutchinson, Lady Fanshawe, Charlotte de la Trémouille Countess of Derby, Rachel Lady Russell, and Grisell Hume.

MISS E. H. HICKEY will read a paper on "The Poetry of the Hon. Roden Noel" before the Royal Society of Literature, on Wednesday, May 23.

THE twenty-fourth Fascicule of the Archives Historiques de la Gascogne is the first volume of "Audijos, La Gabelle en Gascogne," edited by A. Communay (pp. xv. 246). The work contains the history of three revolts against the Gabelle, or salt-tax: that of Bayonne, under Richelieu; that of the Landes, under Mazarin; and that headed by Audijos himself, under Colbert. The historical and economical importance of these documents is manifest.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

PROF. SAYCE is leaving Egypt this week, and hopes to be in England by the end of the present month. He will deliver a public lecture at Oxford, on June 14, upon "The Last Chapter in the History of Cuneiform Decipherment."

Two amendments have been introduced into the statute establishing a school of English at Oxford: one making the social history of England an obligatory subject of examination, the other being of a technical nature.

THE question of the status of demonstrators, which recently came up for settlement at Oxford, is the subject of a recent report of the Council at Cambridge, who recommend that:

"All appointments of demonstrators and professors' assistants receiving their stipend or any part of it from the university shall be made by the respective professors with the consent of the vice-chancellor; each appointment shall be for a limited period to be fixed by the professor at his discretion on making the appointment, the period in no case to exceed five years; the demonstrator or the assistant in each case being eligible for reappointment at the end of the period, and being removable during the period by the professor with the consent of the vice-chancellor."

MR. H. J. MACKINDER, reader in geography at Oxford, has been elected to a studentship at Christ Church, held on condition that he acts as principal of the University Extension College at Reading.

MR. H. B. CLARKE, Taylorian teacher in Spanish at Oxford, has been elected to a Fereday fellowship at St. John's, for which natives of Staffordshire enjoy a preference.

MR. F. T. PALGRAVE, professor of poetry at Oxford, will deliver on Friday next the last of his course of lectures on "The Influence of the Renaissance Movement on English Poetry," dealing specially with Milton.

THE Rev. J. Legge, professor of Chinese at Oxford, announces two public lectures, to be delivered on May 22 and 29, upon "The Li Sào and the Life and Character of its Author, Ch'ü Ping."

DR. MACALISTER, professor of anatomy at Cambridge, announces three public lectures on "Physical Anthropology." The subjects specially dealt with will be: the methods of anthropometry; the races of Ancient Egypt—in the course of which lecture a mummy will be unwrapped and examined; and the races of Western Europe.

AT the annual meeting of the Society of Historical Theology, held at Oxford last week, Prof. A. B. Bruce delivered an address on "The Trustworthiness of the Historical Foundation of Christianity," and Prof. Percy Gardner read a paper on the "Descensus ad Inferos," which was followed by a discussion.

AT the annual meeting of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, held on Wednesday of this week, Prof. Ferguson, of Glasgow, was to contribute "Biographical Notes on J. F. Viganì, First Professor of Chemistry in the University of Cambridge."

MR. JAMES BRYCE has been nominated by the crown to be a fellow of the University of London, in the room of the late Lord Hannen.

PROF. WILLIAM KNIGHT, of St. Andrews—who has been very active lately in publication—has collected all the Rectorial Addresses delivered at the University of St. Andrews during the last thirty years. (A. & C. Black.) It forms a handsome volume of 450 pages, bound in the scarlet that distinguishes the students' gowns, and adorned on the cover with the three antique university maces. There is also an introduction, giving details about the history of the rectorial office, which was—so to say—thrown open in 1858. The first rector elected under the new system was Colonel Mure, of Caldwell, the erudite historian of Greek literature. But, unfortunately, he did not accept the office; as was the case also in later years with Mr. Ruskin and J. R. Lowell. It appears that Robert Browning was approached by the students on no less than three occasions. But St. Andrews has reason to be proud of those who have filled the office. From John Stuart Mill she obtained the most thoughtful and original utterance on the subject of liberal education that has been heard in our time; while Dean Stanley and Mr. J. A. Froude each delivered a couple of stimulating addresses. Other names are Lord Selborne, Lord Reay, Mr. A. J. Balfour, Lord Dufferin, and Lord Bute. At the end is printed a list of rector's prizes, from which we learn that the present civil lord of the Admiralty was successful with an essay on the following subject, set by Mill: "On the Sources of Fallacious Thinking, and on Opinion insufficiently grounded in Fact, which lie in the original Constitution of the Human Mind; and on any Modes of fortifying the Mind against the Tendencies thence arising."

ORIGINAL VERSE.

ON A BUST OF PSYCHE.

(Museo Nazionale, Naples.)

From dark and false and faithless Thessaly

There came a tale of truth and love and light,

There came two fairy forms more exquisite

Than any sung by the Homeridae;

Not clothed in words by the Athenian Three,

Nor rapt to heaven by Pindar's eagle flight,

But seen in watches of a winter night

By spinning wives with children at their knee.

The sophist heard that tale and interwove

A texture wrought from crime and wantonness

With the one purple patch of Psyche's love.

A sculptor, too, in art's declining hour,

Saw and had grace more sweetly to confess

The new ideal born of sorrow's power.

ALFRED W. BENN.

OBITUARY.

THE REV. DR. RICHARD MORRIS.

THE small band of scientific philologists in this country has suffered an irreparable loss by the death of Dr. Richard Morris, distinguished alike for his work in Early English and in Pali. For more than two years he had been prostrated by an incurable and distressing illness, which he bore with characteristic fortitude, nursed only by his devoted wife. He died on Saturday, May 12, at the little railway-side hamlet of Harold Wood, in Essex. He was buried on Thursday at Hornchurch.

Though a Londoner all his life, Richard Morris was (we believe) of Welsh descent. He was born at Bermondsey, in 1833, and educated at the Battersea Training College. Of his early years, we know little more than can be gained from the titles and dates of his published works. But it is certain that he was, in the main, self-educated, being stimulated to work at MSS. in the British Museum and elsewhere by the example of his life-long friend, Dr. F. J. Furnivall. In 1871, he took orders in the Church of England, his title being a curacy in Southwark. About the same time he became lecturer in English at King's College School. In 1875, he was appointed to the head-mastership of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys, at Wood Green, in Middlesex, which post he held for about sixteen years. At no time did he receive the advantages of university education, or of university endowment. His diploma of LL.D. came from Lambeth, having been given him by Archbishop Tait in 1870. Four years later, Oxford honoured itself by conferring on him the honorary degree of M.A. When his health was already broken, Mr. Gladstone granted him a pension of £150 on the civil list, which he enjoyed for little more than twelve months.

His very first publication shows the character of his early studies. It was a treatise on The Etymology of Local Names (1857). This was followed by a small volume of Lectures on the Excellency of the Bible (1858). Then, after an interval, began his long series of contributions to the Early English Text Society, which lasted through the sixties and the seventies. It is needless to enumerate the titles here. All alike are models of editorial conscientiousness, being marked by absolute fidelity in the transcription and collation of MSS., and by most illuminating introductions. The severity of his labours during this period was varied by one or two lighter tasks. In 1866, he edited Chaucer, in six volumes, for Bell's Aldine edition of British poets (second ed. 1891), which remained the standard text until the appearance this year of the Oxford Chaucer of his friend and fellow-worker, Prof. Skeat. And in 1869, he edited Spenser for Macmillan's Globe edition, to which Prof. J. W. Hales contributed a memoir.

This connexion with Messrs. Macmillans led Dr. Morris into a new department of literature, where he was destined to show that a philologist can make money—if he pleases. He began, indeed, his series of educational works with one that is by no means elementary, though it has been hardly less successful on that account. This was his Historical Outlines of English Accidence (1872), which was the first attempt in England to explain the development of the language on historical and scientific principles. It has been reprinted some twenty times, and is now (we understand) being thoroughly revised for a new edition by Dr. L. Kellner and Mr. Henry Bradley. Two years later (1874), he brought out Elementary Lessons in Historical English Grammar, and in the same year a Primer of English Grammar, from both of which—it is pleasant to know—tens of thousands of boys and girls have learnt their earliest knowledge of their own tongue, which they will never need to unlearn.

Scarcely had Dr. Morris struck out this remunerative line, when he deliberately turned aside to devote the remainder of his life to what is probably the least appreciated of all the branches of philology—the study of Pali, the sacred language of Buddhism. In this case, the stimulus came from his intimacy with Prof. Rhys Davids, the founder of the Pali Text Society. For that Society, Dr. Morris has edited portions of some four texts—more, indeed, than any other single contributor. But he did not confine himself to editing. His familiarity with Early English caused him to take a special interest in the language, as standing midway between the ancient Sanskrit and the modern vernaculars, and as branching out into various dialects, known as Prakrits. These relations of Pali he expounded in a series of letters in the ACADEMY, which were invaluable not only for their lexicographical facts, but also as illustrating the historical growth of the languages of India. The very last work he was able to complete was a paper on this subject, read before the International Congress of Orientalists in London in September, 1892. Unfortunately, he could not himself correct the proofs of this paper, as printed in the Transactions.

Of Dr. Morris's private character, we can hardly trust ourselves to speak. Though eminently qualified to shine in social intercourse, he seemed rather to shun publicity. But to his intimate friends he unlocked his heart. To a sober countenance not unlike that of his own Chaucer, he added a kindly eye and a hearty laugh. In the company of those he liked, he was the merriest of good fellows. To the last week of his life, when not racked by pain, he kept up his interest in the welfare of his studies and of his friends. All who knew him loved him; for he could never bring himself to speak an unkind word.

J. S. C.

PROF. HENRY MORLEY.

WITH the death of Prof. Henry Morley, English letters have lost one of the noblest of men, one of the most earnest and effective of teachers and zealous of students. Prof. Morley was a pioneer and a veteran in what is still a very young branch of serious study in this country. The good work that he has done of late years in bringing the best literature of England within the reach of all who care to read it, has in great measure caused the world to forget how much he did in earlier years for the systematic study of English literature and language. In the days when the chairs of Anglo-Saxon at Oxford and Cambridge were sinecures, when the possibility even of a serious study of modern philology or modern literature had not entered the minds of other scholars on this side of the Channel, Prof. Morley was lecturing to classes of fifty students, at King's College, on English language and literature, and was commencing his English Writers. It is hard for the younger generation to think themselves back to the time when Horne Tooke represented the high-water mark of English philology in this country; but it was in those days that Henry Morley induced the University of London to make Anglo-Saxon a compulsory subject for those taking English in the final examination. When he was appointed to the professorship of English language and literature at University College, in 1865, it was worth £150 a year; when he resigned this post, he had raised its value, without the aid of endowment, to three times that sum, and had grown to be more popular with, and beloved by, the students of every department in the college than often falls to any one man's lot. It is no exaggeration to say that he was the life of the place; and those who know the college best are aware that it is only now beginning to regain the high ideals and corporate life which it ran near to completely losing on his resignation. University College, as an institution, owes as much to his energy and strength of character as to any of its individual students, and the future will bring this truth with increasing clearness before us. To him is in chief measure due, to quote only one instance, the admission of women to the college on equal terms with men—a noble and bold stroke of policy, which was undoubtedly needed at the moment, whatever we may think the ultimate solution of the problem involved will be.

But the greatest of his work is that which still lives in the lives and work of those who were his students; for Henry Morley was a great teacher. Greatness as a teacher consists not merely in accuracy of scholarship, wideness of grasp, and the power of training students to appreciate and strive after these things; but it lies as much, and even more, in that enthusiasm for his subject and sympathy with average men and women, which enables the teacher to lift the student almost insensibly above the depressing atmosphere of failure that chokes the solitary worker when he is least able to resist, and inspires him with hope, if not belief, in his ultimate success. Herein lay the genius of Prof. Morley; and it is no derogation of it to confess that it was genius of the moral, quite as much as of the intellectual, order. He had faith in men, faith in England, faith in its literature as the highest expression of its mental life. This once recognised, the work of his own life and the principles underlying his criticism become clear and consistent. It was as impossible for him to neglect the moral aspect of a literary work, or to think it of minor importance, as it is for Ruskin to judge a picture or a building out of all relation to motive and tendency.

Henry Morley was born in Hatton Garden in 1822, being the son of a doctor. He was educated at the Moravian school, Newwied, and at King's College, London, of which he was later elected a fellow. He practised for four years as a doctor at Madeley, in Shropshire; but in 1849 he abandoned medicine and established a school at Liscard, Cheshire, which was to be governed not by punishment, but by love. An account of the practical success of this method, under the title "School Keeping," was published in Household Words, and reprinted in his Early Papers and some Memories (1891). This time of bold endeavour was also that of deepest gloom and severest trial, the grim realities of which only his nearest and dearest have been privileged to know. In 1851, he determined after some hesitation to give up the school and accept a post under Dickens, upon the staff of Household Words. With this publication and with the Examiner, of which he was editor during its best days, he was connected for several years. In 1857 he was appointed lecturer in English to the evening classes at King's College; and his great success in this sphere, together with the reputation which his English Writers (1859-60) had brought, won for him his professorship at University College, which he held until 1890. In 1878 he was elected also professor of English at Queen's College, London, and was made the next year hon. LL.D. of Edinburgh University. From 1870-75 and 1878-83 he was examiner in English in the University of London. From 1882-90 he was principal of University Hall; and he held the positions of chairman of the council of College Hall, Byng Place, and senior warden of the Society of Apothecaries at the time of his death, on May 14.

His literary work as a writer and editor is too voluminous to be detailed here. His first important work, Palissy the Potter (1852), and his Life of Clement Marot (1871), are still the standard biographies of those two great Frenchmen. His well-known First Sketch of English Literature was first published in 1873; and he began in 1887 the reissue of his English Writers, which was planned to be finished in twenty volumes, ten of which, bringing the history of English literature down to the death of Elizabeth, have appeared. A portion of vol. xi. exists, we believe, in MS.; and it is to be hoped that, at least, his account of Shakspeare, who had been his life-long study, will be found to be complete.

There are few men who have lived a life fuller of work and usefulness, few men whose death has caused an aching void in so many hearts; but the profound faith he had in "the unsearchable dispose of highest Wisdom" makes it seem almost a treason to our love to mourn his loss. We must perforce believe—

"Some griefs are medicinable; that is one of them,
For it doth physic love."

H. FRANK HEATH.
T. GREGORY FOSTER.

HONORARY DEGREES AT CAMBRIDGE.

THE following are the speeches delivered on May 10 by the Public Orator, Dr. Sandys, in presenting Prof. Carl Theodor von Inama-Sternegg, president of the Imperial Statistical Commission of Vienna, for the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws; and Herr Edward Grieg, composer and pianist, for the honorary degree of Doctor of Music:

"Quem nuper eo anno decorare volebamus, quo Thamesis nostri in ripa tot gentium legati de salute publica deliberabant, eum hodie anno eodem, quo Danubii sui in margine concilii eiusdem sedes designata est, auspiciis optimis praesentem salutamus. Adest 'egregie cordatus homo,' quem Augusta Vindelicorum, olim 'splendidissima Raetiae provinciae colonia,' inter filios suos numerat, quemque tribus deinceps in doctrinae domiciliis munere functum Academicum, tredecim abhinc annos urbs illa regia, Vindobona, honoris causa ad sese vocavit. Ibi imperii totius civibus enumerandis praeposuit, et senatus ordini superiori adscriptus, non modo provinciam sibi creditam tam praeclare administavit, ut census Austriaci restitutur appellaretur, sed etiam opum publicarum scientiam cum historiae studiis feliciter coniunctum librorum serie perpetua illustravit. Quid dicam de opere eruditissimo quod Germaniae historiae oeconomicae enarrandae destinavit? Quid de disputationibus subtilissimis gentium complurium in concilio, sive Vindobonae, sive Romae, sive Londini denique habitis? Quid de tot scriptis, sive de legibus agrariis emendandis, sive de civium numero computando, sive de aliis rebus plurimis, quae hodie ne summam quidem attingere possumus? Tot certe rerum argumenta infinita ne diutius exsequar, monent verba illa Aristotelea, quae viri tanti labores, circa numerorum praesertim computationem occupati, in partem optimam interpretantur:—ἀνδὲς καὶ ἄγρωστον τὸ ἀπειρὸν περιλύνει δὲ ἀριθμὸν πάντα.

"Artis musicae antistitem insignem, anno proximo desideratum, Scandinaviae ab litore hodie salvum ospitemque advenisse vehementer laetamur. Etenim huic imprimis acceptum rettulimus, quod gentium Borealiarum carmina popularia etiam inter nosmet ipsos, atque adeo ubique terrarum, nota sunt. Ipsum Apollinem, Musarum magistrum, Hyperboreorum gentem mitem et innocuam quetannis libenter invisisse dicitur; ibi Pindarus testatur non abesse Musam, sed ubique puellarum choros cum lyrarum et tibiarum concentu celebrari, laurus denique aureae crines epulantium fronte coronari. Apollinis autem ministri huiusce auxilio trans regionem Boreae flatibus vexatam, trans Scandinaviae tractus remotos nivibus obrutos, carminum exaudimus varietatem suavissimam, atque inter saltantium choros etiam absentes velut ipsi interesse videmur. Talium certe virorum impulsu et instinctu dum cerda nostra quasi fervore novo inspirantur, statim, velut Veris adventu, 'solvitur acris hiems'; 'nec prata canis albicant pruinis'; 'functaequo Nymphis Gratiae decentes alterno terram quatunt pede.' Ergo Apollinis ministrum Borealem laurea nostra hodie merito coronamus."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BAUMANN, O. Durch Mexsiland zur Nilquelle. Berlin: D. Reimer. 24 M.
BORMANN, E. Das Shakespeare-Gedächtniss. Leipzig: Bormann. 20 M.
COGORDAN, G. Joseph de Maistre. Paris: Hachette. 2 fr.
FROENIUS, H. Die Heiden-Neger des ägyptischen Sudan. Berlin: D. Reimer. 9 M.
GEFFROY, G. La vie artistique. 3e Série. Paris: Dentu. 5 fr.
MERLINI, S. Seggio di ricerche sulla estira contro il villano. Turin: Loescher. 5 fr.
MONCEAUX, P. Les Africains: étude sur la littérature latine d'Afrique. Paris: Lecène. 3 fr. 50 c.
SAMUELS, D. V. Der Bibliothekar. St. Petersburg: Schmitzdorff. 4 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- ANALECTA hymnica medii aevi. Hrg. v. G. M. Draves. XVII. Hymnodia Iberica. Leipzig: Reisland. 7 M. 50 Pf.
HIESCHKE, K. Prolegomena zu e. neuen Ausgabe der Imitatio Christi. 3. Bd. Erweis der Autorschaft des Thomas aus dem Inhalte u. aus den Handschriften der Imitatio. Berlin: Habel. 8 M.
JAHN, A. Anecdota graeca theologiae. Gonnadii archiepiscopi Cyprioti dialogus Christiani cum Iudaeis. E codice Bernensi DLXXIV primum edidit et adnotavit A. J. Leipzig: Deichert. 6 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- GENOLES, H. G. Beiträge zur Rechtsgeschichte Bayerns. 4. Hft. Leipzig: Deichert. 5 M.
JAHNBRUCH, F. Schweizerische Geschichte. 19. Bd. Zürich: Fäst. 6 M.
LEGAND, A. Lettres de l'Empereur Manuel Paléologue. 1er fasc. Paris: Weller. 12 fr. 50 c.
LENOTRE, G. Le vrai chevalier de Maisen-Rouge (A. D. J. Gonze de Rouville 1761–1814). Paris: Didier. 3 fr. 50 c.
MASPERO, G. Catalogue du musée égyptien de Marseille. Paris: Marpon. 4 fr.
SICARD, L. Les Evêques pendant la Révolution. Paris: Lecoffre. 8 fr.
WINTLER, U. e. römischen Landweg am Walensee. Mit sprachgeschichtl. Exkursen. Aarau: Sauerländer. 1 M. 40 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE, ETC.

- FESCA, M. Beiträge zur Kenntnis der japanischen Landwirtschaft. II. spezieller Thl. Berlin: Parey. 15 M.
HAORN, J. G. Synopsis der höheren Mathematik. 2. Bd. Geometrie der algebraischen Gebilde. Berlin: Dames. 30 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- MÜLLER, D. H. Epigraphische Denkmäler aus Abessinien nach Abklatschen v. J. Th. Bent. Leipzig: Freytag. 5 M.
SIBAWAHKI's Buch üb. die Grammatik. Uebers. u. erklärt v. G. Jahn. 3. Lfg. Berlin: Beuther. 4 M.
SÖRER, I. Anthologium recensuerunt C. Wachsmuth et O. Hense. Vol. III. Berlin: Weidmann. 20 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A PRIMITIVE DISARRANGEMENT OF ST. LUKE IV. 23, 24.

Oxford: May 11, 1891.

These verses cannot have stood originally in the same order in which they are given in our present text, which is supported by all MSS. and Versions. We are here in the presence of a primitive disarrangement of the text. It is, however, easy to restore the original order. In v. 22—which runs: "And all bare Him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of His mouth. And they said, Is not this Joseph's son?"—the admiration which the inhabitants of Nazareth profess for His gracious words is qualified by the limited regard they entertain for His person. Hence they say, "Is not this Joseph's son?" Our Lord's reply is obviously given in v. 24, and not in v. 23: "And He said, Verily I say unto you, no prophet is acceptable in his own country." In the rejoinder of the townsfolk, the last words of our Lord's reply are taken up and given a pointed and personal application: they virtually say, "This is your country; do here what you have done at Capernaum, and you will be regarded accordingly"; or, to use the Evangelist's words (v. 23'), "Whatsoever we have heard done in Capernaum, do also here in thine own country." After this, v. 23' follows, and forms a natural transition to v. 25: "Ye will certainly say unto Me this parable, Physician, heal Thyself." 25. "But of a truth I say unto you, There were many widows in Israel in the days of Elijah," &c. Thus, the townsfolk, our Lord replies, would have Him heal Himself—i.e., raise Himself out of the limited esteem in which they held Him—by some deed of wonder such as He had wrought in Capernaum. But this (v. 25), He urges with all emphasis (Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν), was impossible. The prophet can only go where he is sent (v. 26): he can only do that which he is appointed to do (v. 27).

In order to render more obvious the incomparable superiority of the text now restored to its original order, I will give it side by side with the later transposed, but still universally accepted, text.

St. LUKE iv. 22-26
(Received Text).

"22. And all bare him witness, and wondered at the words of grace which proceeded out of his mouth: and they said, Is not this Joseph's son? 23. And he said unto them, Doubtless ye will say unto me this parable, Physician, heal thyself: whatsoever we have heard done at Capernaum, do also here in thine own country. 24. And he said, Verily I say unto you, No prophet is acceptable in his own country. 25. But of a truth I say unto you, There were many widows in Israel . . . 26. And unto none of them was Elijah sent," &c.—(Revised Version.)

St. LUKE iv. 22-26 (as it should be arranged).

"22. And all bare him witness, and wondered at the words of grace which proceeded out of his mouth: and they said, Is not this Joseph's son? 24. And he said, Verily I say unto you, No prophet is acceptable in his own country. 23' (And they said unto him) Whatsoever we have heard done at Capernaum, do also here in thine own country. 23' And he said unto them, Ye will certainly say unto me this parable, Physician, heal thyself. 25. But of a truth I say unto you, There were many widows in Israel . . . 26. And unto none of them was Elijah sent," &c.

Subsequently to my discovering the true order of the text, my friend Mr. Morfill pointed out to me St. Matt. xiii. 54-58; and my friend Mr. Carlile, of University College, drew my attention to St. Mark vi. 2-4, as confirming this restoration of the text.

R. H. CHARLES.

"LA SECONDA MORTE." INF. I., 117.

Stanhoe Grange, Norfolk: May 8, 1894.

At the beginning of the Inferno, Virgil tells Dante that he will accompany him through hell, where he shall hear the shrieks of despair of the ancient spirits as in their agony they "proclaim (or 'cry upon') the second death":—

"Trarrotti di qui per loco eterno,
Ove udirai le disperate strida,
Vedrai gli antichi spiriti dolenti,
Che la seconda morte ciascun grida."

Inf. i., 114-117.

The meaning of the last line in this passage is much disputed, one of the difficulties being the interpretation of the expression "la seconda morte." Most commentators take it to signify total annihilation. Some looking to Rev. ii. 11; xx. 14; xxi. 8, understand it to refer to the state of the damned after the final end of temporal things.

It is interesting to note that Boethius makes use of this same expression, "the second death," in the De Consolatione Philosophiae, in a passage which has been glossed by Chaucer. I quote from the version of the latter as given by Prof. Skeat in Vol. II. of the Oxford Chaucer:—

"Deeth despyseth alle heye glorie of fame: and deeth wrappeth to-gidere the heye hevendes and the lowe, and maketh egal and evene the heyeste to the loweste. Wher women now the bones of trewe Fabricius? What is now Brutus, or stierne Catoun? The thinne fame, yit lastinge, of hir ydel names, is marked with a few lettres: but al-though that we han known the faire wordes of the fames of hem, it is nat yeven to knowe hem that ben dede and consume. Liggeth thanne stille, al outrely unknowable; ne fame ne maketh yow nat knowe. And yif ye wene to liven the longer for windo of your mortal name, whan o cruel day shal ravisho yow, thanne is the seconde deeth dwellinge un-to yow. GLOSE. The first deeth he clepeth heer the departinge of the body and the soule; and the seconde deeth he clepeth, as heer, the stinginge of the renown of fame." Book II. Met. 7 (p. 49).

It may be observed that Pietro di Dante gives just the opposite interpretation in his comment on the above-quoted passage of the Inferno. He says: "Allegorice pravi et vitiosi mortui sunt quodam-modo in fama, et haec est prima eorum mors; secunda est corporalis."

PAGET TOYNBEE.

TRANSYLVANIA AND HUNGARY.

Budapest: May 6, 1894.

It is a curious, perhaps an unhappy coincidence, that, while to-morrow, Monday, May 7, the trial is to begin at Rolozsvar which will decide whether it is allowable by law to describe Transylvania as a non-Hungarian land in which Hungarian laws are, or at least ought not to be, of force, yesterday, May 5, the Kisfaludy Society held an extraordinary meeting in honour of the centenary of the birth of Baron Nicholas Josika, the inventor, so to say, of the Hungarian historical novel. The president of the society, Paul Gyulai, himself a Transylvanian, delivered an address on the occasion which, in few but lively words, defined the position of Josika in Hungarian literature as the one who gave expression to the living historical tradition of the Transylvanian aristocracy, who did not require, like the Hungarian aristocracy, to be reconverted to the Hungarian nationality, because they had never lost it. It is just this fact that, in certain important points, especially as to the social position of the aristocracy, Transylvania was more Hungarian than the so-called mother country, Hungary Proper, which makes the present attempt to separate Transylvania from Hungary so peculiarly painful to those who know and understand Hungarian history.

ARTHUR J. PATTERSON.

THE "SHIELD WALL" AT HASTINGS.

London: May 16, 1894.

I am sure you will allow me, in justice to myself, to correct at once Mr. Archer's statement that I have "modified" my view as to the "shield wall" at Hastings. I have, on the contrary, throughout accepted the description of it given by Mr. Freeman, and adopted by his friend and disciple Mr. Hunt (see the current English Historical Review, pp. 225-230). It is their view, as I have shown, that Mr. Archer persists in rejecting.

Nor can I be under any "misapprehension" as to Mr. Oman's verdict; for I have simply quoted his own words. After my attack on the "palisades," he substitutes the words "around the impenetrable shield wall" for "around the impregnable palisades" in his account of the battle. His readers may be fairly left to draw their own conclusion.

J. H. ROUND.

THE TWO MM. DE HEREDIA.

Paris: May 12, 1894.

Allow me to rectify a singular error in the otherwise so remarkably well-informed article of Mr. William Sharp about Villiers de l'Isle Adams in your last number.

Mr. Sharp writes in a note: "Of all unlikely men, he had for one of his rivals [as a candidate for municipal honours] the newly-elected 'Immortal,' M. Jose Maria de Herédia." Now this same confusion of persons has been at the root of most of the articles (I remember chiefly one, dated from Paris, in the Daily News) written in terms of astonishment, if not of scandal, in the London press after the election of M. Jose Maria de Herédia to the Academy.

The mystery is very simple: there are two MM. de Herédia, not even connected; I believe, by the farthest blood-community. The one is the poet—the last man in the world to concern himself with politics; the other is an ex-radical municipal councillor of Paris, sometime deputy and even minister of public works in one of the innumerable ephemeral combinations under the late unlamented régime of "republican concentration." This last gentleman, one of the ordinary butts of H. Henri Rochefort's so-called wit, was nicknamed by him, on account of his mulatto (we say more politely, creole) origin, Chocolade. Now, M. Jose Maria de Herédia is of the purest blue-blooded Castilian descent, and he has nothing at all in common—except a name—with the politician.

FRANCIS DE PRESENSÉ.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- SUNDAY, May 20, 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "The Compromise of 1871," by Mr. J. H. Muirhead.
 MONDAY, May 21, 8 p.m. Aristotelian: Symposium, "The Nature and Range of Evolution."
 8.30 p.m. Geographical: "A Journey in the Hadramaut, Southern Arabia," by Mr. J. Theadore Bent.
 TUESDAY, May 22, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Modern Microscope," I., by the Rev. W. H. Dallinger.
 7.45 p.m. Statistical: "Statistics of Litigation in England and Wales since 1859," by Mr. John Macdonell.
 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "Recent Types of Ferry-Steepers," by Mr. Andrew Brown; "The Birkenhead Ferry-Boats," by Mr. C. Jones.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Decorative Art in connexion with Elementary Education," by Mr. Selwyn Image.
 WEDNESDAY, May 23, 4 p.m. Egypt Exploration Fund: Ordinary General Meeting.
 8 p.m. Geological: "The Stratigraphy of the Libyan Desert of Egypt," by Capt. H. G. Lyons; "The Geology of South-eastern Africa," and "The Occurrence of Dolomite in South Africa," by Mr. David Draper; and "The Geology of British East Africa, I. The Glacial Geology of Mount Kenya," by Dr. J. W. Gregory.
 8 p.m. Folklore: "The Omens of the Things and their Relation to European Folklore of Birds and Beasts," by Mr. F. Sessions; "The Sacred Wells of Mao," by Mr. A. W. Moore; "Manx Proverbs," by Mr. G. W. Wood.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Liquid Fuels," by Mr. G. Stockfleth.
 THURSDAY, May 24, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Egyptian Decorative Art," I., by Prof. Fiinders Petrie.
 4.30 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Commerce of Siam in Relation to the Trade of the British Empire," by Mr. C. S. Leckie.
 8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: Discussion, "Cost of Electrical Energy," by Mr. R. E. Crompton.
 8 p.m. Literature: "The Poetry of the Hon. Roden Noel," by Miss E. H. Hickey.
 8.20 p.m. Antiquaries.
 8.30 p.m. Royal Historical: "The Educational Organisation of the Mendicant Friars in England," by Mr. A. G. Little.
 FRIDAY, May 25, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "New South Wales," by Mr. J. Inglis.
 9 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Development of the Astronomical Telescope," by Sir Howard Grubb.
 SATURDAY, May 26, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Stage and Society," I., by Mr. E. W. Lowe.
 3.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.
 4 p.m. Zoological: "Sketches in Geographical Distribution," II., by Mr. F. Beddard.

SCIENCE.

Two Great Scotsmen: The Brothers William and John Hunter. By George Mather, M.D. (Glasgow: Maclehose.)

DURING the past two centuries a brilliant array of Scotsmen have gained renown in London in medicine. Beginning with Dr. Arbuthnot, the friend of Pope and Swift, and ending with the late Sir Andrew Clark, this roll of fame includes many notable names; but, perhaps, not one has obtained such world-wide repute as did the two remarkable brothers, William and John Hunter. Yet, strangely enough, despite their reputation alike in medicine, art, and literature, they have been suffered to lie neglected, so far as official and exhaustive biography is concerned. The death of the survivor of these two eminent men took place in 1793, and the first attempt to preserve a connected narrative of their lives was intended as a centennial memorial, for, though just issued, the volume bears the date of 1893. It is true that the names of the Hunters will be found in numerous biographical dictionaries, that William Hunter was the subject of a volume written by S. F. Simmons immediately after his death, and that John Hunter's life was written by his brother-in-law, Sir Everard Home, and also by Jesse Foote in 1794. But Dr. Mather has been the first to bring together in one volume the events in the lives of the two brothers, and to show how closely they were united in their pursuits. His book is a most interesting one, despite a tendency to diverge from the main subject on the very slightest provocation. Nevertheless, this very discursiveness, and the comparative absence of technical and professional details, will make the volume all the more enjoyable to the general reader. But in common fairness to the future students of his book, Dr. Mather should have supplied an index.

No Scotsman is worth considering, however great his personal gifts and attainments may be, unless he can boast of "a lang pedigree." Accordingly, Dr. Mather traces back the origin of the Hunters to some dim period before the Norman Conquest, and hints that their ancestors came over with the Conqueror. The name appears in its Latinised form of Venator in the Inquisition made by David, Prince of Cumberland (afterwards David I. of Scotland) regarding the Bishopric of Glasgow, circa 1120. The Hunters of Polmood, in Peebles-shire, are said to have been settled there in the time of Malcolm Canmore; but as Dr. Mather only quotes a nonsensical and spurious charter in support of this statement, it may be dismissed with a smile. The Hunters of Hunterston in Ayrshire, however, come within the range of credible history; and it seems likely that the two brothers, William and John, could claim descent from this race, through the branch settled at Calderwood in Lanarkshire. It is certain that their father, John Hunter, was laird of Long Calderwood, a small estate about seven miles from Glasgow, at the beginning of the eighteenth century. His wife was the daughter of John Paul, Treasurer of the city of Glasgow; and though the family was not wealthy, the laird was, in Scottish phrase "bein," or well-to-do. Ten children were born of this union, five of whom survived infancy. William Hunter was the seventh child, and John Hunter was the youngest of the sons. Dorothy, one of the daughters, was married to Prof. Baillie, of Glasgow University, and became the mother of Dr. Matthew Baillie, and of Joanna Baillie, the poetess, the intimate friend and correspondent of Sir Walter Scott.

William Hunter was born on May 23, 1718, at the house of Long Calderwood.

Having received the rudiments of his education at the parish school, he matriculated at Glasgow University in November, 1731, his intention being to study for the church. For some reason this purpose was abandoned, and he was an unsuccessful candidate for the post of schoolmaster at East Kilbride, near his ancestral home. In 1736 he became acquainted with William Cullen, then a young physician in practice at Hamilton, and afterwards famous as Professor of materia medica at Edinburgh; and this friendship directed Hunter's attention towards medicine as a profession. After a short course of study under Dr. Alex. Munro, at Edinburgh, Hunter set out for London, and began his career as assistant to Dr. Smellie, a Lanarkshire doctor who had gained much renown as an obstetrician. Hunter's acquaintance with Robert Foulis, the well-known Glasgow printer, had supplied him with letters of introduction to many men of note in London, and he became associated with Dr. Douglas, who was then preparing his elaborate work on anatomy. Here William Hunter found a congenial sphere, and so speedily did he display his capacity in the preparation of anatomical specimens that he was appointed dissector at St. George's Hospital. In 1746 he began a course of lectures on anatomy, which proved so successful that his name was carried even to the continent as an authority on his special subject. His practice as a surgeon was chiefly confined to obstetrics; and in 1762 he was appointed Surgeon-Accoucheur to Queen Charlotte, and had the privilege of ushering into the world her first son, afterwards George IV. In the course of his study he had made and collected a vast number of anatomical preparations, and he conceived the idea of founding an Anatomical Theatre where these might be utilised for teaching purposes. He offered to build and endow such an institution, provided the Government would grant him a site; but Lord Bute's ministry was either too parsimonious or too impecunious to make this concession, and thus the magnificent Hunterian Museum was lost to London. Hunter built at his own expense a theatre and museum in Great Windmill-street in 1770, and here his splendid collection of preparations—books, manuscripts, pictures, coins, and medals—remained till his death. By his will he bequeathed these ultimately to Glasgow University, and a special building was erected for them in the College Green at a cost of £12,000. When that university was removed to Gilmore-hill, provision was made for the Hunterian Collection, though for years the coins and medals, many of them unique, have been sequestered from the students for whose use they were bequeathed. A stupid proposal was recently made to sell the collection of coins—the wonder and envy of all European numismatists—so that funds might be obtained to found a chair of history; but the protest of the press was so loud that the project has been abandoned. William Hunter's death took place suddenly on March 30, 1783, when in the sixty-fourth year of his age. He lies buried in St. James' Church, Piccadilly, beside two other eminent physicians, Thomas Sydenham and Richard Bright, his predecessor and his successor.

The early career of John Hunter differed greatly from that of his elder brother. He was ten years younger than William, having been born on February 13, 1728. In his boyhood he displayed that disregard for conventionality which marked all his life. He refused to attend school or to devote himself to literary study of any kind; and, unlike most Scottish youths, he was unable to read or write when he was seventeen years of age. His time was spent in roaming the fields, studying the secrets of nature at first hand. One of his sisters had made an unfortunate marriage with a dissipated cabinet-maker in Glasgow; and for the purpose of saving the wreck of his brother-in-law's business, John Hunter removed to that city, and began to work at the bench. His efforts were unavailing, and the failure of the firm threw him out of employment. He intended to enlist in the army; but having heard of the success of his brother William in London, he determined to try his fortune in the metropolis. William Hunter willingly gave him occupation in the preparing and mounting of his specimens, and here his deftness as a workman made him of great service. John Hunter soon became deeply interested in the study that was thus thrust upon him. The dissecting-rooms, the museums, the conversations and instructions of his brother and of the enlightened men he gathered round him, awakened faculties hitherto dormant. As if conscious of his own great destiny, he stepped forward at once, and entered on that course of research and discovery which he continued with unabated ardour to the day of his death—a period embracing forty-five years. He had gone to London a raw youth in 1748, and he saw that his early neglect of education must be atoned for. In 1755 he entered St. Mary's Hall, Oxford, as a gentleman commoner; but he could make no headway with Latin and Greek, and soon gave up the experiment. So strenuously had he devoted himself to practical anatomy that his health broke down in 1761; and he sought change of scene by taking an appointment as army-surgeon, spending two years in active service, and making many valuable discoveries regarding gunshot wounds. On his return to London he began practice as a surgeon in Golden Square, but his progress was slow. His marriage to Anne, sister of Sir Everard Home, in 1771, was of some assistance to him, for she formed a kind of minor salon of literary and scientific men, being herself a poetess of some reputation. Meanwhile John Hunter was gradually forming that marvellous anatomical collection which is now under the care of the Royal College of Surgeons. It is said to have cost him £70,000, and to have been acquired by the Government for £15,000—an outlay the expediency of which no one has called in question. At his house at Brompton (now Earl's Court) he formed a private zoological garden, which was one of the wonders of his time. His eccentricities led him to be regarded as insane; but the scientists, in view of the great discoveries he made, admitted that there was method in his madness. He could not bear contradiction, and his irascible temper brought about his sudden death. In October, 1793, he had been thwarted at a meeting of the governors of St. George's Hospital, and on leaving the room hurriedly, he dropped down and expired without warning. He was buried in the vaults under St. Martins-in-the-Fields. When these vaults were being cleared out in 1859, Frank Buckland devoted himself to the search for John Hunter's body, and found it at last, after he had examined 3,600 coffins. The remains were then honourably re-interred in Westminster Abbey.

Dr. Mather has written a most interesting account of these two eminent Scotsmen, though he has not contributed much new matter to the materials that were formerly available. There are still unexplored sources of information that would well repay examination. The Marquess of Lansdowne has several unpublished letters written both by William and John Hunter, and there is a MS. account of John Hunter's "Arrangement of the Animal Kingdom" among the MSS. belonging to the Earl of Ashburnham. But the most valuable for biographical purposes would be the series of letters written by John Hunter, and now in the possession of Mr. Alfred Morrison, not one of which seems to have been examined by any of Hunter's biographers. The following is a transcript of one of the letters in this collection (imperfectly quoted by Dr. Mather), which very clearly indicates the character of the writer. It must have been written a few months before his death:

"DEAR SIR,—I rec<sup>d</sup> the favour of your Letter. I never show my collection to anyone but in the months of May and October. If your friend is in Town in October (and not a Democrat), and you will apply for a ticket, he is welcome to see it; but I would rather see it in a blaze like the Bastille than show it to a Democrat, let his country be what it may."

The concluding portion of Dr. Mather's volume is occupied with a survey of the work accomplished by the Hunters, and with quotations from the eulogies pronounced upon them by British and continental scientists. The book as a whole fully vindicates the claim made in the title, that these were "Two Great Scotsmen."

A. H. MILLAR.

SCIENCE NOTES.

AT the Royal Institution next week, the Rev. W. H. Dallinger will begin on Tuesday a course of three lectures on "The Modern Microscope: an Instrument of Recreation and Research"; and Sir Howard Grubb will deliver the Friday evening discourse, on "The Development of the Astronomical Telescope."

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ELIZABETHAN. —(Wednesday, May 2.)

FREDERICK ROOERS, Esq., vice-president, in the chair.—Mr. J. A. Jenkinson read a paper on Shakspeare's "As You Like It," considered with special reference to the immediate source of the story: viz., Lodge's Rosalynde. He began by quoting the passage from Mr. Swinburne's Notes on Shakspeare, in which, with exceeding courtesy, the brilliant poet critic refuses to discuss this play, basing his refusal on the ground that there was not enough complexity to call for analysis, and that there was no room for any difference of opinion concerning Orlando and Rosalind. The lecturer hoped it might not be taken as a proof of his own in-rushing folly if he ventured to disregard this lofty precept and example. He might plead that Orlando and Rosalind, although they were the chief characters, by no means exhausted the whole interest of the play, that his object and method were different from Mr. Swinburne's, and that the latter had himself contrived to say incidentally concerning this play two or three new and striking things, which were, more or less, open to question. Prompted by a hearty admiration of the play itself, the lecturer had set himself to inquire and to ascertain as far as possible what were the various forces and influences, direct or indirect, which contributed to its production. He found that the structure of the play was not simple, but compound, being formed by a skilful and happy combination of romance and pastoral. This suggested that, for an adequate understanding of this play, it was desirable to take at least a bird's eye view of the whole field of medieval heroic romance and of all previous pastoral poetry; and this he had endeavoured to do for his own instruction. He had particularly concerned himself with the Charlemagne cycle, which appeared to have been in the minds of both Lodge and Shakspeare, as the former referred to "the twelve peers of France," and the latter named the hero's father Roland, the hero himself by the later and Italian form Orlando, and his elder brother Oliver. Orlando had been the hero of several epics, of which the most noteworthy were Boiardo's "Orlando Innamorato," and Ariosto's "Orlando Furioso." Such epics were full of the spirit of knight errantry, and abounded in heroic deeds of valour and wonderful adventures, generally undertaken in quest or in defence of some lady fair. The ladies themselves, too, were often brave and adventurous, donned masculine attire as pages, and even armour as knights, and did battle sometimes for, sometimes against, their ardent lovers, the closed helmet of each combatant preventing mutual recognition until the proper dramatic moment. In these romances, moreover, time and place were vague or incorrect and inconsistent, while the natural history, the mineralogy, the astronomy, and the natural philosophy were merely conventional, and, from our post-Baconian point of view, ludicrous and absurd. The heroic cycles were succeeded in France by another great romance of a lighter and daintier kind: viz., the "Romance of the Rose," in which the object of search is not a lady, but a rose; this rose, however, is meant to represent a lady, and the other allegorical personages, who aid or thwart the lover in his quest, represent the various incidents with which a lover would meet. Possibly this romance might have suggested to Lodge, or to Spenser, who had previously used it, the name of Rosalind, the etymology of which, however, was uncertain. Lodge's novel, the lecturer thought, was a Euphuistic imitation of these old romances in the ground-work of his story, with little or no satire of his sources. In the play, however, whilst an earnest and humane purpose was equally discernible, it looked as though Shakspeare had attempted something like a playful parody of the subjects of heroic romance; and it was even possible that Charles, "the bony priser of the duke," was a deliberate vulgarisation of Charles the Great. With regard to pastorals, the chief thing to be noted here was that learned pastoral poetry, from Theocritus and Virgil down to Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar, though often graceful and beautiful, was highly artificial in subject or form, or both, and was also frequently allegorical. Among post-Renaissance pastorals might be mentioned Marot's French eclogue of "Pan and Robin," closely copied by Spenser in the 12th Eclogue of his Kalendar, the Spanish eclogues of Garcilaso de la Vega, and such Italian pastorals as Tasso's Aminta and Guarini's Pastor Fido. Sir Philip Sidney's Arcadia, according to Prof. Morley, "has literary interest as the first important example of the union of pastoral with heroic romance." Lodge imitated or repeated this combination; but in the pastoral portions of his novel he retained to some extent the artificiality of the conventional pastoral, and made his French shepherds quote Latin. Shakspeare retained the combination, but abandoned the conventional style; and his shepherd characters give utterance to no ideas or language absolutely impossible to their class. Referring to the probable date of composition as 1599 or 1600, the lecturer drew attention to the transitional character of the play. The date stood between two great centuries, and marked not only the middle of the period of Shakspeare's authorship, but the 35th year of his age, when he had attained what Dante called "the summit of the arc of life." The predominant tone of the play was decidedly joyous and even merry; but the bitterness of the song, "Blow, blow, thou winter wind," and the melancholy of Jacques seemed, if they were nothing more, to be at least premonitions of the darker periods of "Hamlet" and "Measure for Measure." In the lecturer's opinion, this play was also an interesting connecting link between those medieval romances to which he had referred and the modern novel; and he proposed now to consider Shakspeare as story-teller rather than as dramatist. He noticed that Mr. Hall Caine had recently confided to the Urban Club the opinion that the great magical power and the superiority of Shakspeare's plays was due to his possession of the novelistic instinct as distinguished from the dramatic, and that, had he lived to-day, he would have used the novel as a vehicle of expressing his great thoughts. The lecturer declined, at present, to endorse this opinion, which, coming, as it did, from a novelist, reminded him of the old spelling-book story, "There's nothing like leather." Still, he was himself profoundly impressed with Shakspeare's power as a story-teller; and whenever he re-read one of the plays he always found himself intensely interested in the story, almost as much so as if he were reading it for the first time. The lecturer then proceeded to discuss the story with reference to its immediate source or sources. It was generally admitted that Lodge obtained the hint for his story of the old knight and his three sons from the "Coke's Tale of Gamelyn," a metrical tale or ballad, formerly attributed to Chaucer, and certainly belonging to his period. This ballad was a simple, savage story, evidently one of the Robin Hood cycle, and its spirit might be summed up in a line from Tennyson's "Foresters": "We dealt in the wild justice of the woods." Most critics thought Shakspeare owed nothing to this story, and had probably never seen it, because it was not printed when he wrote his play. An English ballad, however, that was accessible to Lodge was probably also accessible to Shakspeare; and his play contained some indications that he had consulted the old ballad, and conformed to it in a few slight particulars where Lodge had departed from it. But in the main Shakspeare adhered to Lodge's novel, and followed the story so closely that, except for the important new characters added by Shakspeare, the play might be regarded as a dramatised version of the novel. The points of resemblance need not be dwelt upon, as they were obvious enough; but there were several points of difference which, comparatively unimportant in themselves when considered separately, nevertheless when taken together were found to possess a cumulative force of considerable magnitude, and to these he would now call the attention of the meeting. He did not offer this part as entirely new work, for it was commenced some years ago by Mr. Stone for the New Shakspeare Society, but the present lecturer had carried it much further. The changes made by Shakspeare were classified as variations (1) in names, time, and place, (2) in plot, as regards several details, (3) in characters, (4) in diction and style. This comparison comprised the greater portion of the paper, and the result was shown to be that, even where Lodge and Shakspeare used the same material, the modifications introduced by the latter produced an effect of greater moderation, humanity, probability, truth to nature, and ideal grace and beauty. Shakspeare's principal new characters, Jacques and Touchstone, were then briefly referred to, as affording a pleasing relief to the romantic-pastoral portion by contrast with the lovers and with each other. The play was said to teach two great lessons—(1), courageous and cheerful self-adaptation to environment; (2), Love, in its highest and most inclusive sense, is the conqueror and the reconciler.—The discussion after the reading of the paper was both interesting and lively. Some of the speakers thought that the comparison between Lodge and Shakspeare was a waste of time, and others thought that the writer's parody theories were too fanciful, and savoured too much of German criticism.

ANGLO-RUSSIAN LITERARY SOCIETY, IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.—(Tuesday, May 14.)
E. A. CAZALET, Esq., president, in the chair.—Mr. Alexander Kinloch, hon. secretary, gave a lecture on "The Russian Language." In his introductory remarks, he stated that the study of Russian had, until the last few years, been very discouraging, in consequence of the cumbersome and involved methods adopted by grammarians; but at the present day there were commendable Russian Grammars and Conversation Manuals published in England. No excuse now existed for us to ignore the importance of a language spoken by more than one hundred million people inhabiting one-seventh of the world's area. The lecturer divided his paper into two heads. The alphabet was compiled by Cyril and Methodius in the ninth century. The foundation was the Greek alphabet, but they also introduced characters from Hebrew, Armenian, and Coptic. The alphabet took the name of Kirilitsa from its chief compiler, and remained in use until the eighteenth century, when the letters were altered by Peter the Great to their present form, though church books are still printed in Kirilitsa. The first schools were established by Prince Vladimir at Kiev. The first attempt at literature was made by the priesthood in imitation of the florid Byzantine style. Ilarion, the Metropolitan of Kiev (1051), and Luke Gidiata, bishop of Novgorod (1036), wrote sermons. Nestor, the chronicler, also appears about this period. The progress of education advanced in Russia with the spread of Christianity, and all writings to the middle of the twelfth century were ecclesiastical. The first sample of secular writing appeared in the middle of the twelfth century: "The Book of Instruction," by Vladimir Monomach, a reigning prince. Then came the invasion by the Tartars, which almost extinguished the flickering life of an awakened education. Kiev was abandoned and lost its former importance. The historical life of Russia was thenceforth concentrated in Moscow. It is only in the seventeenth century that attempts are made to produce original narratives from subjects of genuine Russian life; and the youthful Tsar, Ivan the Terrible, presides at an ecclesiastical commission to enact rules and precepts for the social life of the people. The most important of these enactments was the "Book of the Hundred Chapters," to regulate the service of the Church, and the establishment of what may be called national schools. After exposing the fallacious intricacies of some of the systems for teaching the language and contrasting them with comparatively simple and entertaining methods, the lecturer illustrated the graphic force and musical intonation of the language, which, under proper guidance, he said, lends itself pleasantly to a student with a correct ear and a concentrated mind. Nothing is more striking than the grace, beauty, and naïveté of the Russian popular songs; and to enable the audience to judge for themselves, a Russian lady gave representative songs: "The Red Saraphan," by Varlamoff; "Ah, vi Sainy mæe Sainy," by Vilboz; "Pessnia Yamshtika," by Lazarev. The Russians have a great future, and are every year pushing to the front. They are destined some day to divide with us the main portion of Asia, and our frontiers will one day become contiguous. In order to interpret properly the Eastern question, we must know the Russian mind, the Russian language and literature. To the statesman and soldier this knowledge is a necessity.—The president, Mr. Brayley Hodgetts, and Mr. Wilson made some comments, and the thanks of the meeting were conveyed to the lecturer.

FINE ART.

DISCOVERIES AT KOPTOS.

BELIEVING that the dynastic Egyptians had entered the Nile valley by the Koser-Koptos road, I applied to M. de Morgan for permission to excavate at Koptos, in hopes of finding some trace of the immigrating race. That permission was readily granted, and I cannot thank M. de Morgan too much for the manner in which he has facilitated my work in every way possible.

In eleven weeks I completely turned over every yard of the temple site of Koptos, and learned far more of the earliest Egyptians than all that was known before. The prehistoric results are unique; and the historical remains include the works or names of thirty-five kings, the most continuous series known on any site, extending from the IVth Dynasty to the third century, A.D. The following are the principal results in chronological order:—

Prehistoric—Portions of three limestone statues of the local god Min (or Khem), about 13 ft. high when complete. These each have a girdle of thongs, like the Ababdeh girdle of the present day; but with a decorated flap hanging down the right side. The figures on the flap are roughly outlined by hammer-work, with much spirit, but as simply and naively as on the bone cave carvings of Europe, which they much resemble. The statues themselves are merely shaped monoliths, with half developed arms, legs grooved out like a Greek "island figure," and a head with gross ears, whiskers, and no face; the features were probably supplied by an attached wooden mask. The whole affair is quite barbaric, and far more akin to the stone age of Europe than to anything known in Egypt. These figures were found buried, like many other sculptures, beneath the foundations of the Ptolemaic temple. There is no age of Egyptian work known, from that period back to the IVth Dynasty, when any carving in the least like this was executed. These figures show a gradation in skill and age, indicating that they were successive; and hence their use covered a long period, and they cannot have been the product of any brief wave of barbarism. Moreover in two points—the indication of the origin of the hieroglyph of Min, and the attitude differing from all known statues of Min—these works show that they belong to an age which was already past in historical times. The carvings on them represent the fetish pole of Min, decorated with a feather and a garland, and hung round with sawfish and pteroceras shells. Such a derwish pole is akin to what is now seen in the Red Sea region. And the figures of animals—the ostrich, elephant, sawfish, and shells—all point to the immigrants having arrived there from the south of the Red Sea. A closer agreement with what was expected could hardly have been devised.

I—IIIrd Dynasty. Pieces of pottery statues and relief work were found in the earliest part of the temple. These are of careful finish, and were presumably the best products of their age, being offered in the temple. Details of these show them to be earlier than any of the historical stone statuary; and such modelling in pottery explains the rise of Egyptian art, without its leaving any permanent trace before its bloom in the IVth Dynasty. A period of pottery also explains all the peculiar conventions of the stone sculpture. IVth Dynasty. Part of a large alabaster vase of Khufu was found in the town, doubtless from temple furniture. VIth Dynasty. Part of an inscription of Pepy I., and two slabs with figures of Pepy II. XIth Dynasty. A large quantity of sculptures of the temple of Antef V. (Ra-nub-kheperu) were found, laid face down for a later pavement. They indicate a brick temple faced with stone. There is not a single piece of temple sculpture of this dynasty in Europe. A long decree of Antef V. was found, deposing the prince of Koptos for treason, and elevating a new princely family. XIIth Dynasty. Portions of very delicate relief sculptures of Amenemhat I., and sunk relief sculptures of Useresen I.; also the greater part of the temple door jamb of Useresen I. with very fine sculpture; also a door jamb in red granite. Not a single slab of temple sculpture of this age was hitherto known. Of Amenemhat III. there is a colossal vulture, weighing about a ton, but headless. XIIIth Dynasty. Of Sebekhotep V., I brought part of a stele, naming a new queen and two new princesses. Scarabs of Mer-nefer-ra and of Apepa, were obtained from diggers in the town. XVIth Dynasty. Of the king Rahotep, only known by a few scarabs and a posthumous tale, we found portions of a large stele, showing that he restored the temple. XVIIth Dynasty. Tahutmes III. entirely rebuilt the temple. His foundation deposits I cleared out carefully: in one pit were about 200 vases, thirteen alabaster vases inscribed, many bronze tools inscribed, and corn grinders, beside beads, scarabs, &c. Many blocks of his temple sculpture were found, and most of his foundations remain. XIXth Dynasty. Sety I., appears on a small sphinx. Of Ramessu II., there is a fine life-size group of the king seated between Isis and Nebhat, carved in red granite, and in fair condition. It belongs to the earlier part of his reign, and is of good work. The weight is about three tons. Part of a long stele recounting the offerings made to Ramessu from all lands is of interest. Other steles of this age were found. Menenptah's name also appears in the temple. XXth Dynasty. A large granite stele of the twenty-ninth year of Ramessu III.; and the scene of a limestone stele of Isit, daughter of Ramessu VI., and of an unknown queen, Nubkhesdeb. XXIrd Dynasty. A pillar of Osorkon I. (?). XXVth Dynasty. Sculpture of Psamtik II., and the lower part of a small chapel of Aahmes II. XXXth Dynasty. Part of small obelisk of Nekhthorheh.

Ptolemaic. A wall of Ptolemy Soter; a long inscription of an official under Philadelphos, who rebuilt the temple—110 cubits long and 40 wide, agreeing with the foundations now found. Part of a statue of Euergetes. Sculptures of Ptolemy IX. and XIII.

Roman. Temple sculpture of Augustus, Tiberius, Claudius, and Nero. Greek inscriptions of Galba, Domitian, Caracalla, Elagabalus, and Quietus. Some of the Greek inscriptions are of interest, especially one found just before I arrived, giving the customs tariff on persons and goods from the Red Sea, under Domitian.

Of uncertain but early date we found flint flakes and pieces of knives scattered on every square yard of the primitive soil that we uncovered. The first settlement was on a rise of yellow clay, washed out of the Hammamat valley, and deposited as a fan in the Nile valley. Large quantities of pottery of the early settlement, and wells, were also found.

It is remarkable, in one spot, and in so short an excavation, to have found such an extensive historical series; the barbaric statues, and the rise of modelling in pottery, have opened an entirely new chapter of Egyptian history, and given us a greater advance than anything since Mariette's uncovering of the art of the old kingdom.

I have been much assisted by a new student, Mr. Quibell, who is now finishing the packing and transport of the collection; his last letter says that the 150th package is done, and more yet await him. M. de Morgan most kindly relieved me of the transport of the heavy statues, &c., as they were going to the Ghizeh Museum.

I hope to have an exhibition of the sculptures and objects which come to England, during the four weeks of July, at University College, Gower-street; and I shall illustrate the finds by photographs at a lecture there on the 26th of this month, which will be open to the public (Saturday, 2 p.m.).

I may add that I purchased, in Cairo, the longest Greek papyrus known; it is in several hands, but all the forty-four feet of it refer to the subjects of the administration of the royal oil estates under Ptolemy III. Though broken, it will give much light on the administrative details, in the recital of decrees, by-laws, and fines, and the area of the estates in each nome. The Craven scholar, Mr. Grenfell, who was with me for some time studying excavation, will edit this papyrus on his return to England.

W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE following exhibitions will open next week: that entitled "Fair Women," at the Grafton Galleries; two religious pictures—"Peace, be still," by Herr D. A. Wehrschmidt; and "Passing to Eternity," by Mr. A. E. Emslie—at the Fine Art Society's, in New Bond-street; and a portrait-picture of "Royal Ascot," painted by Mr. J. Vincent Gibson, at McLean's Gallery, in the Haymarket.

An exhibition of the drawings by Mr. A. D. M'Cormick, to illustrate Mr. Conway's book on Climbing in the Himalayas, will be open at Clifford's Inn Hall during the whole of next week.

MR. THEODORE STANTON will contribute a paper on M. Tissot's illustrations of the Gospels to the June Century, which will be illustrated with reproductions of the pictures; Mr. Timothy Cole will continue his illustrated articles on the old Dutch masters, with Adrian Van Ostade for his subject.

A NEW edition of A Manual of Decorative Composition for designers, decorators, architects, and industrial artists, by Henri Mayeux, architect to the French Government, revised by Mr. Walter Millard, will be issued by Messrs. J. S. Virtue & Co. in a few days.

AT an extra meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, to be held on Monday next, Mr. J. Theodore Bent will present a preliminary report on his archaeological expedition to the Hadramaut, Southern Arabia, some of the spoils of which were exhibited at the recent conversazione of the Royal Society.

PROF. W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE will begin next Thursday a course of three lectures, at the Royal Institution, on "Egyptian Decorative Art."

ON Tuesday next, Mr. Selwyn Image will read a paper before the Society of Arts, on "Decorative Art in connexion with Elementary Education."

MISS KINGSLEY will deliver a course of six lectures on "French Pictures and Painters of the Nineteenth Century," at the Queen's Hall, Langham-place, on Fridays at 5 p.m., beginning on May 25. The lectures will be illustrated with valuable paintings and drawings, which have been specially lent from private collections.

DURING Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of next week, Messrs. Sotheby will be engaged in selling an exceptionally fine collection of Greek coins, belonging to Mr. Robert Corfræ, of Edinburgh, which has been formed by judicious purchases at important sales, both in this country and on the continent, during the last thirty-five years. The catalogue has been most carefully compiled, and is rendered permanently valuable by a series of eleven colotype plates.

THE STAGE.

It certainly can no longer be written of us Englishmen, in the phrase of André Chénier, that we are admirers of ourselves alone and ridiculous detractors of other men's genius. The London stage, at this season, is absolutely full of foreign importations. At Daly's Theatre, to Miss Ada Rehan there has succeeded Eleonora Duse. At not less than three of the lighter playhouses, "la Loie Fuller"—with her orchid and pansy dance, and the coloured illuminations which made them "sit up" very straight, we believe, even at the Folies Bergères—appears every evening. At the Empire, Yvette Guilbert, of whom some further account may be offered anon, sings the songs of the Chat Noir, and others of what, in the language of The Earthly Paradise, may be described as "outland" type. And, to crown all, Sir Augustus Harris has brought over, to the Princess's Theatre, an extraordinary "mimodrame," of which Mr. Wedmore sent us an account last year when he happened to see it at a remote and little-known theatre in one of the suburbs of Paris. "Jean Mayeux," in which, as in all pieces of this description, from "L'Enfant Prodigue" downwards, the music counts for much, and supplies in some measure, by its expressiveness, the absence of dialogue, has nothing of the fairylike or fantastic character of its most distinguished predecessor. It is, as we are told, simply realistic, or, at most, a mixture of realism and melodrama. The first act, with the "bal des Gigolettes"—"Gigolette" is not a dictionary word, but it is none the less intelligible—is the best of the three. The second act is telling, though melodramatic, and the third is comparatively commonplace, and, to say, truth, a little wearisome. But no doubt those are right who advise the would-be students of French life—of the life of the "residuum" or "submerged tenth" especially—to miss on no account the opportunity of a singular experience.

Even melodrama, it would now appear, must be taken from the French if it is to be lastingly successful. We do not forget "The Silver King," which is altogether English, and has certainly never been a failure; but what recent melodrama has approached the triumph of the old "Deux Orphelines"? Mr. Oxenford's adaptation, or translation it may be called, is now again presented in London, the Adelphi Theatre being, under the Gatti management, the scene of the exploit. The revival has been received with signal favour; and it is but just to declare that never have the principal or the most sympathetic characters been presented, as a group, so effectively. Mr. Rignold and Mr. Cartwright are "past masters" in the craft which at the Adelphi it is theirs to practise. Miss Marion Terry lends such lights and shades to the performance of the more pathetically placed of the two heroines, as have never before been utilised in the rendering of this agreeable yet melodramatic character. Miss Marion Terry's art is indeed astonishing, and from all but the closest observers it is successfully concealed—nothing but nature is apparent. At a time in her career when too many an actress—sure of the public favour—rests satisfied with old laurels, this skilled and sympathetic artist puts her utmost endeavour into each fresh impersonation. While Miss Marion Terry is at the Adelphi, a visit to that theatre can hardly be the occasion for a misspent evening. Again, the character of the second orphan has the fullest justice done to her by a young actress, Miss Ellia Jeffreys, heretofore chiefly recognised as a very smart actress of comedy at the Criterion. Miss Ellis Jeffreys has made a remarkable hit in a line that one must suppose is practically new to her.

MUSIC.

OPERA AT COVENT GARDEN.

G. PUCCINI's "Manon Lescaut" was produced on Monday, the opening night of the season. Everything new in the shape of opera now comes from Italy—Mascagni, Leoncavallo, Puccini, and, one must also say, Verdi. It has been proved over and over again that an opera to be successful must have a good libretto: the inanities of the story of the "Magic Flute," and the obscurities of that of "Euryanthe," have stood in the way of some of the finest music ever written by Mozart and Weber. Puccini's libretto may not be altogether satisfactory, but it is clear and strong. Everyone is supposed to be acquainted with the pathetic story of Manon; but one need not have read a line of the quaint old French novel to understand that, in the first act, the passion of youth triumphs over the purse of old age; that, in the second, Manon has become fickle; that afterwards she repents, but that the very excess of love leads her to dishonesty and degradation, and, finally, to a miserable death. It seems a pity that the opera should be long: not, perhaps, as compared with Meyerbeer or Wagner, but long by the side of such works as "Cavalleria" or "Pagliacci." It seems scarcely worth while to have lengthened "Manon" by the death scene in America of the last act. The act itself contains some of the composer's best dramatic music; but after the sombre yet exciting scene at Havre, it comes as an anti-climax. If only the last two acts could have been compressed into one! The character of the music is similar to that of the libretto; there is a certain crudeness and patchiness about it, but it is full of life and strength. The composer has really something to say, and has said it to very great, though not to the best, advantage. At present he is too strongly influenced by Wagner and by others to display his full individuality. The influence of Wagner is specially marked, not so much in the use of representative themes, as in phrases and melodies which recall "Die Meistersinger," "Tristan," and "Siegfried": as, for example, the music in the first act when Manon descends from the coach, or the opening of the "Intermezzo." All this is quite natural: any attempt to disguise or evade it would be absurd. In some of the love strains there is, perhaps, more stretto than strength, and, at times, the full tone of the orchestra conceals weak points in the music. But against any shortcomings we get ample indemnification. There is undoubted individuality in Puccini's music, and he has instinctive dramatic power: the latter is evident from his striking effects of contrast—in his stage effects, his music, his very pauses, and, notably, in his orchestration. Of the four acts, the second and fourth appear to us the strongest. The brightness and piquancy of the opening scene of the second act are irresistible, while the love duet between Manon and Des Grieux is a masterpiece of concentration and gradation: the fine, broad phrase at the close, afterwards heard with imposing effect at the end of the third act, and with tender expression in the fourth, ought alone to ensure the success of the work. The music of the last act is admirable: it is appropriate to the situation, and produces its effect in a quiet unostentatious manner. Of course, in a modern opera an "Intermezzo" is indispensable. Puccini, however, gives to his a distinct dramatic meaning: the coda, with its orchestration, is original and impressive. Signorina Olga Olghina impersonated the heroine with considerable success: she has a pleasing flexible voice. Signor W. Beduschi as Des Grieux acquitted himself remarkably well: his voice is of incisive quality, and he sings with taste and judgment. Signor A. Pini-Corsi was effective as Lescaut, and Signor V. Arimondi was good in the small part of Geronte. Signor Armando Seppilli conducted with marked intelligence and vigour.

On Tuesday evening Gounod's "Faust" was given, with Mlle. Simonnet as the Marguerite. She sang and acted well, but her reading of the part was a little too dreamy: she made one think of her Angélique in "Le Rêve." M. Albers sang the part of Valentine for the first time: his voice, of good sympathetic quality, seemed, however, somewhat veiled. The Mephistopheles of M. Plançon, is very good, but, at moments, a little overdone; but there is no fault to find with him in this respect at the close of the third act. J. S. SHEDLOCK.

RECENT CONCERTS.

ON Saturday afternoon, May 12, Master Josef Hofmann gave the second of three pianoforte recitals at St. James's Hall. It was in 1887, when he was only ten years of age, that he made his appearance at the Princes' Hall, and by his wonderful playing attracted much attention. Since then he has studied with Rubinstein, and his technique is now prodigious: it may be doubted whether Rubinstein at seventeen was more wonderful. The programme commenced with Handel's Suite in D minor, which was rendered with much spirit, though, perhaps, not altogether à la Handel. Hofmann then played, in a brilliant manner, some exceedingly clever and difficult variations of his own compositions. His reading of Chopin's C Minor Nocturne was, on the whole, good: when he is twice seventeen he will probably play it twice as well. He also performed Chopin's B minor Sonata: the Scherzo was given with the utmost delicacy, and the Finale with great vigour. His rendering of Liszt's charming Waldesrauschen was excellent, and in some pieces by Rubinstein he showed his wonderful command of the keyboard. He has announced a very ambitious programme for his last recital to-day.

Miss Maud MacCarthy, aged ten years, made her first appearance as violinist at the Princes' Hall on Tuesday afternoon. She was heard in Bach's Sonata for violin and clavier; and her reading was pure, intelligent, and artistic. She afterwards played De Beriot's showy "Scène de Ballet," with great taste and wonderful vigour. And as a last piece she gave Swendsen's "Romance," which she rendered in a beautifully calm and expressive manner. Great allowance must be made for the young artist, who as yet does not perform on a full-sized instrument; but her reading of Bach shows that she understands what she plays, and, what is still more important, feels it. The total absence of trickiness or show in her playing is most marked: she seems as if she were, for the time, completely under the spell of the music. She gives undeniable promise of becoming a great artist, but we have our doubts as to whether she would be a successful wonder-child; for that she is too simple. She has not been forced in any way, and she is no less delightful as a child than she is fascinating as a player. Her mother, Mrs. MacCarthy, deserves praise for her selection of songs; we will take another and a more favourable opportunity of judging her as a vocalist. Mrs. Hirschfeld played short pianoforte solos, and Miss Mary Carmichael accompanied with her usual care and intelligence.

Miss Agnes Bartlett gave a very interesting concert at the small Queen's Hall on Wednesday evening. The programme commenced with a pianoforte Trio in G minor (Op. 30), by M. René Lenormand, a composition of considerable merit. The first movement has pleasing subject-matter, and the workmanship is clever and clear. The pensive slow movement is exceedingly attractive, and so also the bright Scherzo with its two well contrasting Trios. The Finale is not on the same high level. It was well performed by Miss Bartlett and MM. Wessely and Gullrein. M. Wessely played a pleasing Adagio by M. Lenormand, accompanied by the composer. Miss Bartlett rendered in her best manner some highly ingenious and effective variations by Tchaikowsky. Miss Louise Philipps was the vocalist.

The concert given at the Queen's Hall, on Thursday afternoon, to commemorate the seventieth anniversary of the establishment of the Royal Academy of Music, attracted a large audience. The programme contained works by composers who were, or had been, connected with that institution; and all the performers were students, past or present. The selection of music and executants, a difficult matter, was well managed; to render justice to all was manifestly impossible. The occasion was of general musical interest, but especially so to those who wished to follow the rise of the Royal Academy of Music, and its present progress under Dr. A. C. Mackenzie.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

NOW READY. In One Vol., super-royal 8vo, 738 pp., cloth, gilt top, 31s. 6d. net.

CLIMBING AND EXPLORATION IN THE

By WILLIAM MARTIN CONWAY, M.A., F.S.A., F.R.G.S.,
Vice-President of the Alpine Club, formerly Roscoe Professor of Art in the University College, Liverpool.

KARAKORAM-HIMALAYAS.

With nearly 300 Illustrations by A. D. McCORMICK, and a Map.

J. J. JUSSERAND'S NEW WORK.

PIERS PLOWMAN, 1363-1399, a Contribution to the History of English Mysticism. By J. J. JUSSERAND, Author of "English Wayfaring Life," &c. Photogravure Frontispiece and 25 other Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 12s.
Also a FINE EDITION on Japan paper, demy 8vo, vellum binding, gilt lettered, 21s. net.

TIMES.—"M. Jusserand has once more made English literature his debtor by his admirable monograph on Piers Plowman.....It is a masterly contribution to the history of our literature, inspired by wide study and rare delicacy of critical appreciation."

S. R. CROCKETT'S POPULAR WORKS.

THE RAIDERS. By S. R. CROCKETT, Author of "The Stickit Minister," &c. Fourth Edition. Cloth, gilt top, 6s.

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"Of capital merit."
MORNING POST.—"A strikingly realistic romance."
ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"Indubitably a fine work."

THE STICKIT MINISTER, AND SOME COMMON MEN. By S. R. CROCKETT. Fourth Edition. Cloth extra, 5s.

SPEAKER.—"Full of strength and charms. Humour and pathos mingled with delightful effect."
BRITISH WEEKLY.—"A book of extraordinary merit."

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

THE HOUSE OF LORDS: a Retrospect and a Forecast. By THOMAS ALFRED SPALDING, LL.D., Barrister-at-Law. (Forming the New Volume of "The Reformer's Library.") Large crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Mr. Spalding is a conspicuously well-informed and severely judicious writer."

NEW VOLUME OF "THE INDEPENDENT NOVEL" SERIES.

TIME AND THE PLAYER. By LEWIS HAINAULT. Demy 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

GLASGOW HERALD.—"The book is one of the most striking that have come in our way for some time."

A FAIRY TALE FOR YOUNG AND OLD.

MISS MACKARELL SKYE. By HERBERT S. SQUANCE. Illustrated by A. D. McCormick. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

BOOKSELLER.—"A charming tale rendered additionally attractive by Mr. McCormick's pictures."

THE AUTONYM LIBRARY.—A COMPANION to "THE PSEUDONYM."

VOL. I. JUST READY.

THE UPPER BERTH. By F. MARION CRAWFORD. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

SPEAKER.—"If the 'Autonym Library' keeps up to the pitch of excellence attained by this first volume, its success is assured."

MARK RUTHERFORD'S NEW NOVEL.—THIRD EDITION.

CATHARINE FURZE. 2 vols., cloth, 12s.

ATHENÆUM.—"Mark Rutherford is a writer of extraordinary force."
TIMES.—"Both in treatment and in style 'Catharine Furze' recalls Miss Austen's novels.....A close comparison would not result unfavourably to Mark Rutherford."

LIMITED EDITIONS.

ALLEGRETTO. 250 Copies, numbered. Small fcap. 4to. Illustrated. 5s. net.

BRAND. By HENRIK IBSEN. A New Translation by F. E. GARRETT. Printed on Hand-made Paper, with a Photogravure Frontispiece.—A Limited Edition of 250 Copies, each numbered and signed, 10s. 6d. net.

TWO NEW "PSEUDONYMS."

Paper, 1s. 6d. each; cloth, 2s. each.

THE HON. STANBURY, and Others. By Two.

SPEAKER.—"Distinctly clever.....Maintains the well-deserved reputation."
SHEFFIELD TELEGRAPH.—"Charmingly written and intensely pathetic."

THE SHEN'S PIGTAIL. By Mr. M——.

SCOTSMAN.—"The tales have a strong and original interest."
SCOTTISH LEADER.—"Written with grace and vigour."

THE MERMAID SERIES.—NEW VOLUME.

THE COMPLETE PLAYS OF RICHARD STEELE. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by G. A. AITKEN.

Photogravure Portraits of Richard Steele and Colley Cibber. Pos. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. Also, an Edition de Luxe, printed on hand-made paper, bound in buckram, gilt top, price 10s. 6d. net.

GLOBE.—"This is a model edition and a boon to students of the drama. Mr. Aitken has done his work well, with patience, and judgment."

THE ADVENTURE SERIES.—NEW VOLUME.

FAMOUS ADVENTURES AND PRISON ESCAPES OF THE CIVIL WAR. Edited by GEORGE W. CABLER and Others. Large crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 7s. 6d.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Everywhere the book pulsates with 'thrills' such as the adventurous seek, but love the more when they are wedded to truth in a union of power and literary grace."

DRAWING-ROOM DUOLOGUES. By F. M. SIMPSON. With 8 Illustrations by Maurice Greiffenhagen. Cloth, gilt top, 6s.

Fcap. 8vo, paper covers, 1s.

VIGNETTES. By G. E. HODGSON.

CONTENTS:—"The Reformer; Sarah Ann; Underground Workers; Dorothy; Making the Empire; Among the Sand-Dunes."

NEW VOLUME OF "THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."

SOUTH AFRICA

(The Cape Colony, Natal, Orange Free State, South African Republic, and all other Territories South of the Zambesi).

By GEORGE M. THEAL, of the Cape Colonial Civil Service.

Maps and Illustrations, Large Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1151.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MAY 26, 1894.

Price 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S NEW PUBLICATIONS

NOW READY.

By the Author of

"AN ENGLISHMAN IN PARIS."

MY PARIS NOTE-BOOK.

In 1 vol., demy 8vo, price 14s.

Contemporary France, with the never-failing interest of the period since 1855, is mirrored in the pages of this book with the intimate, and at the same time universal, knowledge only possible to a man of the world, whose acquaintance with human nature is aided by his skill in noting the salient features both of circumstances and of men.

THE ROMANCE OF AN EMPRESS— CATHERINE II. OF RUSSIA.

From the French of K. WALISZEWSKI.

A New Edition, in 1 vol. With Portrait. 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"This book is based on the confessions of the Empress herself. Few stories in history are more romantic than that of Catherine II. of Russia, with its mysterious incidents and thrilling episodes; few characters present more curious problems."—Times.

NEW LIBRARY NOVELS.

THE

POTTER'S THUMB.

By FLORA ANNIE STEEL.

Author of "From the Five Rivers," &c.

In 3 volumes.

SECOND EDITION JUST READY.

A DAUGHTER OF MUSIC.

By G. COLMORE. In 3 vols.

"A novel of exceptional ability and force. It is this, undoubtedly; but it is more than this: it is a book characterised by something very like genius. 'A Daughter of Music' has impressed me more strongly than I have been impressed by any story of its order for a long time."—Academy.

NEW ONE-VOLUME NOVELS.

THE STORY OF

A MODERN WOMAN.

By ELLA HEPWORTH DIXON. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"Miss Ella Hepworth Dixon has inherited no small share of her father's literary gifts, and she adds to it a faculty of observation and a constructive and narrative skill which are of considerable promise. As to the story itself, Miss Dixon is to be commended for having given a delightful touch of novelty to her treatment of the subject."—Grographic.

By SARAH GRAND. Price 6s. each.

OUR MANIFOLD NATURE.

With a Portrait of the Author.

THE HEAVENLY TWINS. IDEAL: A Study from Life

THE COUNTESS RADNA. By

W. E. NORRIS. A New Edition, in 1 vol., price 6s.
"Mr. Norris is a remarkably even writer. And this novel is almost as good as any other for studying the delicacy and dexterity of his workmanship."—Times.

THE HOYDEN. By Mrs. Hun-

GERFORD, author of "Nor Wife Nor Maid." A New Edition, in 1 vol., price 3s. 6d.

"This is too good a book to damoise with conventional words of praise. The plot is well constructed and interesting, and the stage is not too crowded with actors."—Vanity Fair.

The New Review.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

Some of the Contributors to the JUNE number:

MADAME ADAM.

THE REV. DR. ADLER, Chief Rabbi.

WALTER BESANT.

BJÖRNSTJERNE BJÖRNSSON.

HALL CAINE.

I. ZANGWILL.

The Rt. Hon. JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN.

SARAH GRAND.

MRS. EDMUND GOSSE.

J. KEIR HARDIE, M.P.

THOMAS HARDY.

W. MARTIN CONWAY.

MRS. LYNN LINTON.

MAX NORDAU.

OLGA NOVIKOFF (O.K.).

LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

THE BARONESS VON SUTTNER.

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

HON. MRS. FORBES.

The New Review.

JUNE.

SECRETS of the COURT of SPAIN (II.)

A SHORT STORY. By the Author of

"A LUCKY SIXPENCE."

Messrs. HUTCHINSON'S NEW BOOKS

VOL. I. READY THIS DAY.

MEMOIRS

TO SERVE FOR

THE HISTORY OF NAPOLEON I.

From 1802 to 1815.

By his Private Secretary, Baron CLAUDE FRANÇOIS DE MENEVAL. The Work completed by the addition of hitherto Unpublished Documents. Translated and Annotated by ROBERT H. SHEARD. In Three Volumes, demy 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top (about 1,400 pages, with Autograph Letters and Photogravure Portraits. 18s. per Vol.

*. The English Edition has been fully annotated by Mr. Sheard with a view of making it more intelligible in regard to certain events which, by lapse of time, have become partly obscured.

Vols. 2 and 3 will be published immediately.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "STILL LIFE OF THE MIDDLE TEMPLE."

MIDDLE TEMPLE TABLE TALK;

with the Genesis of Shakespeare's Plays. By W. G. THORPE, F.S.A., a Barrister of the Society. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, with Photogravure Portrait of the Author. 15s.

"He has a copious fund of anecdote and a lively vein of humour."—Times.

"Will keep many a busy man up late to finish it."—SCOTSMAN.

THE GREEN BAY TREE. A Tale of To-day. In 3 vols. By W. H. WILKINS and HERBERT VIVIAN.

PUNCH says:—"It is all smartly done. No flapping on any page of the three volumes, with here and there powerfully delineated episodes. Those who live in London society to-day will fancy they recognise familiar faces flitting through the book."

The NATIONAL OBSERVER says:—"The Green Bay Tree" is sure to flourish. It has the elements of success. It is a new venture in a field that lacks workers—the field that was Disraeli's, and it has the Disraelian quality, the vivacity and sparkle, to say nothing of a spice of the engaging impudence of the young Disraeli. The verve and go of the social portraiture and the effectiveness of a few dramatic scenes of a variety and vivacity that are most refreshing, and there is undeniable vigour and cleverness in the movement and talk."

J. FOGERTY'S NEW NOVEL.

A HUNTED LIFE. In 3 vols. By the Author of "The Countess Irene," "Juanita," &c.

[This day.]

HENRY CRESSWELL'S NEW NOVEL.

A PRECIOUS SCAMP. In 3 vols. By the Author of "A Modern Greek Heroine," "A Wily Widow," &c.

[Next week.]

Next Week a TWELFTH and CHEAP EDITION of
A YELLOW ASTER. By Iota. In Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. (Completing Seven-eighth Thousand.)

MISS MILNE and I. By Mannington CAFFYN. Fourth Edition. In cloth gilt, 2s. 6d. In picture boards, 2s.

NEW STORY OF INDIAN ADVENTURE.

THE TEMPLE of DEATH. By EDMUND MITCHELL. In Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, with Frontispiece, by G. H. Edwards, Esq.

"The unfolding of the plot never flags, and the action is continually intensified until the final climax is reached. The incidents are thrilling, and the local colouring admirably interwoven with the narrative. Chronicled in so convincing a style that few people who are well launched into the book will want to leave it unfinished."—ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

BY PROFESSOR F. HARALD WILLIAMS.

CONFESSIONS of a POET. By the Author of "Twixt Kiss and Lip," "Women Must Weep," &c. In Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

"The versification is smooth, flowing, correct, and sometimes even splendid. Some of the shorter pieces are simply charming."—GLASGOW HERALD.

NEW VOLUME OF HUTCHINSON'S SELECT NOVELS. A MARRIAGE CEREMONY. By Ada CAMBRIDGE. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 8d.

"Brightly written, with a really original plot, well-sketched characters, touches of humour, and unforced pathos. We congratulate Miss Ada Cambridge on her latest work."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

HUTCHINSON & Co., PATERNOSTER ROW.

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

SWIRBURN'S NEW VOLUME OF FORMS, by E. D. A. MORRHEAD	429
SARVAY OF INSPIRATION, by ARCHDEACON CHREYHAM	430
A FRIEND OF MARIE ANTOINETTE, by F. T. MARZIALS	431
COLLEGE GYMNASTICS, by J. G. C. MINCHIN	432
RUSCHMAN'S SIDE LIGHTS, by PERCY ADDLESHAW	433
NEW NOVELS, by GEORGE COTTEWELL	434
POWER BOOKS OF ANCIENT HISTORY	435
NOTES AND NEWS	436
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	437
OBITUARY: EDMUND YATES, by F. W.; KOLOKOTRONIS, by MRS. EDMONDS	437
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	437
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	438
CORRESPONDENCE—
"Amorlette," by Prof. H. Frank Heath; Dante's "Seconda Morta," by Dr. Richard Ounett; "Old Heidelberg," by Sir Monier Williams; "Persephone and other poems," by K. McClell Clark	438
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	439
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	439
TWO IRLANDIC BOOKS	439
CORRESPONDENCE—
Prof. Asa Gray, by W. Everett	439
SCIENCE NOTES	440
THE ROYAL ACADEMY, II., by CLAUDE PHILLIPS	441
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	442
"MONKEY" AT THE GARNIER	442
"VERDI'S" FALSTAFF, by J. S. SHEPLOCK	442
RECENT CONCERTS	443

POPULAR WRITERS OF FICTION

Wishing to secure the most extensive COPYRIGHTED PUBLICATION obtainable in the United States, Canada, and elsewhere, should communicate with P. F. COLLIER, 521, West Thirtieth Street, New York City.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS

115, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S &amp; BADDELEY'S

TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.

New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

PREPARING.

CATALOGUE of an interesting collection of Antiquarian, Architectural, Classical, and Miscellaneous BOOKS published in the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries, from the Radcliffe Library, OXFORD, ON SALE by R. H. BLACKWELL, 80 and 81, Broad Street, Oxford.—Gratis.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS &amp; NORGATE,

Importers of Foreign Books,

11, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,

AND

20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,

FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,

45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET

(Opposite the British Museum).

Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.

Catalogues on application.

PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,

&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, South Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C. are prepared to undertake the Printing and Publishing of first-class Newspapers, Magazines, Books, Catalogues, Pamphlets, Prospectuses, Articles of Association, Minutes of Evidence, &c., in the best style. Their offices are fitted with the latest improvements in Rotary and other Machinery, the most modern English and Foreign Type, and they employ none but first-class workmen. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 253. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

TO AUTHORS AND EDITORS.

NORTHERN

NEWSPAPER

KENDAL SYNDICATE,

Supplies high-class short and serial fiction; bright sketches; articles on general subjects.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of NORTH WALES, BANGOR.

In connection with the Day Training Department (for Men and Women) to be opened next October, the Council are about to appoint a LECTURER IN EDUCATION and MASTER OF METHOD, at a salary of £250 a Year. Fifty printed copies of each application and set of testimonials to be received on or before Tuesday, June 5th, by the Registrar, J. E. LLOYD, M.A., from whom all information may be obtained.
May 26th, 1894.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dundee, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Tralee, &c.
For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

ROYAL IRISH ACADEMY.

Applications for the Academy's TODD PROFESSORSHIP of the CELTIC LANGUAGES, which will become vacant at the end of the current Session, must be sent in to the SECRETARY of COUNCIL before the 15th of June, 1894.
All particulars regarding the Professorship can be obtained from the TREASURER of the Academy at the Royal Irish Academy House, 19, Dawson-street, Dublin.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, London.

FOUNDATION SCHOLARSHIPS. AN EXAMINATION for filling up about 20 VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 4th SEPTEMBER NEXT.—For information, apply to the BURSAR, St. Paul's School, West Kensington, W.

HIGHER CAMBRIDGE, Froebel and advanced Examinations.—STUDENTS PREPARED in Classes connected with North London Collegiate School, under Miss BISS's superintendence. Arrangements made for boarding in neighbourhood.—Address Miss TOPPIN, 145, Camden Road, N.W.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL for BOYS.

Detached House: stands on top of Cliff; South Aspect; Private Playfield; Resident Masters.—Mrs. JAMES MACDONELL, Gorse Cliff, Boscombe Chine, Bournemouth.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best

University or Army Tutor, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEZON, (M.A.), 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon-street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholastic Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers, may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL

PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. SYCAMORE, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—ASSYRIAN

SCULPTURES.—Statuettes of Sennacherib, Assurbanipal, and his Queen. Also reduced Facsimiles of the unique and beautiful "Garden Scene," Winged Human-headed Lion and Bull, &c. Modelled from the famous Nineveh Sculptures, and made in Porcelain (parian). Interesting and faithful reproductions.—"Athenaeum," Oct. 7, 1893. Descriptive Prospectus on application to ALFRED JARVIS (Sole Publisher), 45, Willes Road, London, N.W.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by HOLL, R.A., Oulless, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided and are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: A Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing nearly 70 Miniature Photographs of notable autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

New Pamphlet, "Autotype: A Decorative and Educational Art," free on application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

The New Review.

Contents. JUNE. Price One Shilling.

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT: PAST, PRESENT, and FUTURE.

By the Right Hon. JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN, M.P.

SECRETS from the COURT of SPAIN. Part II.

THE TREE OF KNOWLEDGE.

By Madame ADAM; the Rev. H. ADLER, Chief Rabbi; WALTER

BESANT; BJORNSTJERNE BJORNSON; HALL CAIRN; MRS.

EDMUND GOSSE; SARAH GRAND; THOMAS HARRY; MRS. LINS

LINTON; MAX NORMAN; LADY HENRY FOSBERT; the Baroness

VON SUTTERN; FRANCES E. WILLARD; I. ZANGWILL.

SOME NETOWORTHY HANDS. (Illustrated). By the Hon. Mrs.

FORBES.

OUR PRINCIPLES and PROGRAMME. By the SECRETARY of the ANTI-GAMBLING LEAGUE.

THE CASE for an INDEPENDENT LABOUR PARTY. By J.

KEIR HARDIE, M.P.

SOME REMINISCENCES of KINGLAKE. By OLGA NOVIKOFF.

THE DEVELOPMENT of MOUNTAIN EXPLORATION. By W.

MARTIN CONWAY.

"DEDICATED to JOHN HUNTLEY." (A Short Story). By the Author of "A Lucky Sixpence."

London: WILLIAM HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in

WATER-COLOURS.—The One Hundred and Twenty-first EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, 5, PAUL MALL EAST, from 10 till 6. Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 1s.

ALFRED D. FRIPP, R.W.S., Secretary.

FRENCH GALLERY, 120, Pall Mall.

The 41st ANNUAL SPRING EXHIBITION of PICTURES by British and Foreign Artists, including "The Meeting of the Waters," by J. M. W. TURNER, R.A., and a Collection of Pictures and Studies from Nature by Professor C. HOFFNER, is NOW OPEN. Admission, including Catalogue, 1s.

FOR PUBLICATION BY SUBSCRIPTION.

"THE DIES IRÆ and its TRANS-LATION."

With a Collection of above 200 Versions. Price 7s. 6d.

Subscribers' names to the Author,

REV. C. F. S. WARREN, Longford, Coventry.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND &amp; CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations. Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process for the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and

SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand, at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER;

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

80 to 84, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brumpton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.O

THE WOMAN AT HOME.

DEVONSHIRE HOUSE. By Mary SPENCER WARREN. With Portraits and a splendid series of hitherto unpublished Interiors.
SEE THE

WOMAN AT HOME for JUNE,
which contains also an Illustrated Interview with

LADY BROOKE, the RANEE of SARAWAK. By RAYMOND BLATHWAYT. And a Story by

S. R. CROCKETT—ACROSS the MARCH DYKE: an Idyll of Love in June.
SEE THE

WOMAN AT HOME.

- Profusely Illustrated. Price 6d.
CONTENTS for JUNE, now ready.
1. THE INVESTIGATIONS of JOHN PYM. I.—The Case of Mulrooy's Saga. Fully Illustrated by J. Finnemore.
  2. LADY BROOKE, the RANEE of SARAWAK. An Illustrated Interview. By RAYMOND BLATHWAYT.
  3. BARBARA. By ANNIE SWAN. Fully Illustrated.
  4. A TRAY of DIAMONDS.
  5. DEVONSHIRE HOUSE. By MARY SPENCER WARREN. With a splendid series of Interiors and Portraits.
  6. ACROSS the MARCH DYKE: an Idyll of Love in June. Fully Illustrated. By S. R. CROCKETT.
  7. THE MYSTERY of the MISSING CREW. By HEADON HILL.
  8. A PAGE of CONFESSIONS. By the COUNTESS of WARWICK.
  9. THE PEACOCK GOWN. By LILIAN QUILLER-ROUCH.
  10. BRIDES and BRIDEGROOMS. With Portraits. Original Fashion Designs—Cookery—Dress and Fashion—House Furnishing, &c., &c.

THE WOMAN AT HOME for JUNE.
Price 6d.

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

THE EXPOSITOR.

Edited by the Rev. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A., LL.D.
CONTENTS for JUNE. PRICE 1s.

- THE HIGHER CRITICISM AND THE VERDICT OF THE MONUMENTS.
By Professor Macalister, M.D., F.R.S.
- ST. PAUL'S CONCEPTION OF CHRISTIANITY.
17. THE ELECTION OF ISRAEL.
By Rev. Professor A. B. Bruce, D.D.
- NEW TESTAMENT TEACHING ON THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST. 1. PREPARATORY: THE OLD TESTAMENT AND THE BOOK OF ENOCH.
By Rev. Professor Joseph Agar Beet, D.D.
- THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE. 5. THE DISPERSION AND ABRAHAM.
By Sir J. W. Dawson, C.M.G., F.R.S.
- NEW TESTAMENT NOTES. 1. THE HOLY SPIRIT AS A DOVE. 2. THE SEAMLESS COAT. 3. THE KISS OF PEACE.
By F. O. Conybeare, M.A.
- DR. ROBERTSON SMITH AT CAMBRIDGE.
By Norman McLean, M.A.

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

THE BOOKMAN:

An Illustrated Monthly Journal for Bookreaders, Bookbuyers, and Booksellers.

THE JUNE No. CONTAINS:

- A New Poem by William Watson.
Mr. Charles Cooper of the "Scotsman." With Portrait.
Mr. Swinburne. With Full-page Portrait.
Monthly Report of the Wholesale Book Trade.
New Writers: Mr. BENJAMIN KINN, Author of "Social Evolution."
Reviews of Professor Drummond's New Book, by Professor A. Macalister; Mr. Conway's Hittite Expedition; Christianity and the Roman Government, by Professor W. M. Ramsay; Mr. Stopford Brooke on Tennyson, &c.
And many Articles.

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

EPPE'S COCOAINE.

COCOA-NIB EXTRACT.

(TEA-LIKE.)

A thin beverage of full flavour, now with many beneficially taking the place of tea. Its active principle being a gentle nerve stimulant, supplies the needed energy without unduly exciting the system.—Sold in Packets and Tins, by Grocers, labelled "James Epps & Co., Ltd., Homoeopathic Chemists, London."

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S

LIST.

THE BADMINTON LIBRARY—New Volumes.

YACHTING.

With 56 Plates and 253 Illustrations in the Text by R. T. Fitzhett, G. L. Watson, J. M. Soper, &c., and from Photographs. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. each.

Vol. I.—CRUISING, CONSTRUCTION of YACHTS, YACHT RACING RULES, FITTING-OUT, &c. By Sir EDWARD SULLIVAN, Bart., Lord BRASSEY, K.C.B., C. E. BETH-SMITH, C.B., G. L. WATSON, The EARL of PEMROKE and MONTOMERY, E. F. KNIGHT, the Rev. G. L. BLAKE, &c.

Vol. II.—YACHT CLUBS, YACHTING in AMERICA and the COLONIES, YACHT RACING, &c. By R. T. FITZHETT, The MARQUIS of DUFFERIN and AVA, K.P., G. CHRISTOPHER DAVIES, LEWIS HEARSHOFF, The EARL of ONSLOW, G.C.M.G., Sir GEORGE LEACH, K.C.B., &c.

8vo, 16s. net.

MICRO-ORGANISMS in WATER

their Significance, Identification, and Removal. Together with an Account of the Bacteriological Methods involved in their Investigation. Specially designed for the Use of those connected with the Sanitary Aspects of Water Supply. By PERCY FRANKLAND, Ph.D., B.Sc. (Lond.), F.R.S., and Mrs. PERCY FRANKLAND.

NEW BOOK BY ANDREW LANG.

BAN and ARRIÈRE BAN: a Rally of Fugitive Rhymes. By ANDREW LANG. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

With a Prefatory Memoir by W. E. H. LECKY.

2 vols., 8vo, 21s.

SPEECHES and ADDRESSES of

EDWARD HENRY XVTH EARL of DERBY, K.G. Selected and Edited by Sir T. H. SANDERSON, K.C.B., and E. S. ROSCOE.

Fourth Edition, with Appendix, 8vo, 10s. 6d.

LECTURES on the INDUSTRIAL

REVOLUTION of the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY in ENGLAND. By ARNOLD TOYNBEE. With a short Memoir by B. JOWETT, sometime Master of Balliol College, Oxford.

With Portrait of the Author and 10 Illustrations, &c.
8vo, 10s. 6d.

RECOLLECTIONS of OLD

COUNTRY LIFE. Social, Political, Sporting, and Agricultural. By J. K. FOWLER ("RUSTICUS"), formerly of Aylesbury, Author of "Echoes of Old Country Life."

Illustrated by BEN BOOTHBY.

8vo, 18s.

ON the WALLABY; or, Through the East and Across Australia. By GUY BOOTHBY.

"On the Wallaby" is an Australian expression for "On the March," and is generally applied to persons tramping the Bush in search of employment.

NOW READY, PRICE SIXPENCE.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE—JUNE

THE MATCHMAKER. By L. B. WALFORD. Chapters XXXI.—XXXIV.

THE SPRING of the YEAR. By RICHARD JEFFERIES.

PSYCHE and the POTBOILEES. By MAY KENDALL.

MY FIRST BIG TROUT. By S. A. GEORGE.

FEANKS. (With unpublished extracts from letters of Mary Russell Mitford.) By L. M. P. GAMMON.

FRAGMENTS of CHILD-LIFE. By EDITH H. FOWLER.

CELESTIAL PHOTOGRAPHY. By ALEX. MORRAN.

THE NYMPH of SUMMER. By S. CORNISH WATKINS.

THE UNBIDDEN GUEST. By E. W. HORNUNG. Chapters V.—VII.

AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

NEW YORK: 15 EAST 16TH STREET.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S

NEW BOOKS.

THE JUNGLE BOOK. By Rud-

YARD KIPLING. With Illustrations by J. L. Kipling, W. H. Drake, and P. Frenzeny. Crown 8vo, 6s.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"Mr. Kipling has had the courage to make a style of his own, and, although he has now many imitators, he still proves himself serenely unapproachable in it."

MORNING POST.—"Mr. Kipling's latest tales will give pleasure to old and young."

THE PROTECTED PRINCES of

INDIA. By WILLIAM LEE-WARNER, C.S.I. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"He writes with the widest knowledge of his theme, and his conclusions show much sagacity and statesmanlike moderation."

DAILY NEWS.—"We hope that Mr. Lee-Warner's book may become widely known among his countrymen at home."
TIMES.—"An able treatise on one of the most important and complicated problems of our Indian Empire."

THE COLLECTED WORKS of

THOMAS HENRY HUXLEY, F.R.S. In Monthly Volumes. Globe 8vo, 5s. each Volume.

[THE EVERESLEY SERIES.]

Vol. VIII. DISCOURSES, BIOLOGICAL and GEOLOGICAL.

THE ELEMENTS of META-

PHYSICS. Being a Guide for Lectures and Private Use. By Dr. PAUL DEUSSEN, Professor Ordinarius of Philosophy at the University of Kiel, Germany. Translated from the Second German Edition, with the Personal Collaboration of the Author, by C. M. DUFF. With an Appendix containing an Address by the Author on "The Philosophy of the Vedanta in its Relations to Occidental Metaphysics." Crown 8vo, 6s.

SYSTEMATIC SURVEY of the

ORGANIC COLOURING MATTERS. By Drs. G. SCHULTZ and P. JULIUS. Translated and Edited, with Extensive Additions, by ARTHUR G. GREEN, F.I.C., F.C.S., Examiner in Coal Tar Products to the City and Guilds of London Institute. Imperial 8vo, 21s. net.

THE JOINT STANDARD: a

Plain Exposition of Monetary Principles and of Monetary Controversy. By ELIJAH HELM. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.—New Volumes.

A SON of the SOIL. By Mrs.

OLIPHANT. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE WIZARD'S SON. By Mrs.

OLIPHANT. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

SOUVENIRS of SOME CONTI-

NENTS. By ARCHIBALD FORBES, LL.D. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 416. JUNE. Price 1s.

CONTENTS.

- 1.—PERCYCROSS. By R. D. BLACKMORE. Chapters XXXIX.—XL.
- 2.—A VISION of INDIA.
- 3.—THE BEGINNINGS of the BRITISH ARMY.—I. THE INFANTRY.
- 4.—AN UNFINISHED RUBBER.
- 5.—TROUT-FISHING in NEW ZEALAND.
- 6.—THE WICKED CARDINAL.
- 7.—ONE of the CLOTH.
- 8.—THE CAPE of STORMS.
- 9.—LOUIS KOSUTH. By Professor NICHOL.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

STANDARD WORKS for the LIBRARY

THE HISTORY of the HONOURABLE

ARTILLERY COMPANY of LONDON. Including also a brief History of the American Branch of the Regiment founded at Boston in 1888. By Colonel G. A. RAIKES, F.R.A. 2 vols., with Portraits, Coloured Illustrations, and Maps, demy 8vo, 3s. 6l. each.

THE ANCIENT VELLUM BOOK of the COMPANY.

Being the Roll of Members from 1611 to 1682. Edited, with Notes and Illustrations, by Colonel RAIKES, F.R.A. Demy 8vo, 2ls.

THE ROYAL CHARTER of INCORPORATION GRANTED by HENRY VIII.

also the Royal Warrants, 1612-1889, and the Orders in Council relating to the Government of the Company. Edited by Colonel RAIKES, F.R.A. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE NAVAL HISTORY of GREAT

BRITAIN. By WILLIAM JAMES. In 6 vols., crown 8vo, with numerous Portraits on Steel, 42s.

THE PRIVATE LIFE of MARIE

ANTONETTE. By JEANNE LOUISE HENRIETTE CAMPAN. First Lady-in-Waiting to the Queen. In crown 8vo, 6s., with a Portrait.

THE LIFE of LORD PALMERSTON.

By the Hon. EVELYN ASHLEY, M.P. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, with Frontispiece to each volume, 12s.

THE FRENCH HUMOURISTS from

the Twelfth to the Nineteenth Century. By WALTER BESANT, M.A. 8vo, 15s.

A MEMOIR of the Rev. JOHN

RUSSELL, of Tordown, North Devon. By the Author of "Dartmoor Days," "Wolf Hunting in Brittany," &c. In crown 8vo, with a Portrait, 6s.

RECOLLECTIONS of a LITERARY

LIFE. By MARY RUSSELL MITFORD. In crown 8vo, with Portrait, 6s.

PROFESSOR MOMMSEN'S HISTORY

of ROME to the TIME of AUGUSTUS. Translated by Dr. DICKSON. The POPULAR EDITION. In 4 vols., crown 8vo, 46s. 6d.

*. Also sold separately as follows:—Vols. I. and II., 21s.; Vol. III., 10s. 6d.; Vol. IV., 15s.

THE ROMAN PROVINCES. Being

the History of Rome from Cæsar to Diocletian. By Professor MOMMSEN. Translated by Rev. P. W. DICKSON. In 2 vols., 8vo, with Maps, 36s.

DEAN HOOK: his Life and Letters.

Edited by the Rev. W. R. W. STEPHENS. The POPULAR EDITION. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with Index and Portraits, 6s.

THE LIVES of the ARCHBISHOPS of CANTERBURY. By WALTER FARQUHAR HOOK, late Dean of Chichester. 12 vols., demy 8vo, 49s. Each separately (with the exception of III., IV., VI., and VII.), 15s. The New Series begins with Vol. VI. Vol. XII. is the Index.

THE HEAVENS. By Amedee

GUILLEMIN. In demy 8vo, with over 200 Illustrations, 12s.

THE LIFE of MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS. From the French of M. MIGNET. By ANDREW SCOBLE. With 2 Portraits. 6s.

THE LIFE of OLIVER CROMWELL.

From the French of M. GUIZOT. By ANDREW SCOBLE. Crown 8vo, with 4 Portraits, 6s.

THE HISTORY of the THIRTY

YEARS' WAR. From the German of ANTON GINDELY. By Professor TEN BROOK. In 2 vols., large crown 8vo, with Maps and Illustrations, 24s.

The LETTERS of HORACE WALPOLE,

FOURTH EARL of ORFORD. Edited by PETER CUNNINGHAM, F.R.A. In 9 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits, £5 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

GEORGE ALLEN'S LIST

Will be published early in June.

A NEW WORK BY JOHN RUSKIN.

VERONA, and other Lectures. Delivered principally at the Royal and London Institutions, between 1870 and 1881. Illustrated with Frontispiece in colour and 11 Photogravure Plates from Drawings by the Author. Medium 8vo, cloth, 15s.

This volume consists of five chapters, four of which were prepared by the Author to be delivered as lectures during his tenure of the Slade Professorship at Oxford, and one has been written since his resignation.

The 250 Large-Paper Copies on Arnold's Unbleached Hand-made Paper, with India Proofs of Plates, large post 4to, 30s., are all taken up.

*. The work will be copyrighted and published simultaneously in America by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., New York.

IN THE PRESS

BY JOHN RUSKIN.

LETTERS to a COLLEGE FRIEND, 1840 to 1845. With an Unpublished Essay on "DEATH BEFORE ADAM FELL." Crown 8vo, about 200 pp., cloth, 4s.

There will be 150 Large-Paper Copies on Hand made Paper, large post 8vo, 10s.

IN THE PRESS.

BY WILLIAM JOLLY.

RUSKIN on EDUCATION: being a Series of Articles embodying Mr. Ruskin's views on Education. 160 pp., fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s.

CONTENTS.—Elements in Education—The Training of the Taste in Schools—Moral Education—The New Political Economy, &c.

JUST OUT.

RUSKIN on MUSIC: being Extracts from the Works of John Ruskin. Intended for the Use of all interested in the Art of Music. Edited by A. M. WAKEFIELD. With Facsimile in Colour of Leaf from Antiphonaire of Thirteenth Century from Mr. Ruskin's Collection. Medium 8vo, 163 pp., cloth, 5s. net; half-parchment, 8s. 6d. net.

CONTENTS.—Of the Ideal of Music—Music and Early Influences—Music and Painting—Music and Education—Music and Morals, &c.

JUST OUT.

BY AUGUSTUS J. C. HARE.

Author of "Memorials of a Quiet Life," "Walks in Rome," &c.

SUSSEX. With Map and 40 Woodcuts from Drawings by the Author. Crown 8vo, 250 pp., cloth, 6s.

JUST OUT.

A POPULAR EDITION OF RUSKIN'S

SESAME and LILIES. Containing the two Lectures, "Of King's Treasures" and "Of Queen's Gardens." Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.; roan, gilt edge, 4s.

The price of the larger, complete edition, is 5s., crown 8vo.

ALSO BY JOHN RUSKIN.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. each; roan, gilt edges, 10s. each. Complete with all the Plates.

THE SEVEN LAMPS of ARCHITECTURE.

The 14 Plates for this Edition have been specially prepared from the larger work. Fourth Edition.

ARATRA PENTELICI: Seven Lectures on the Elements of Sculpture. With 1 Engraving on Steel and 10 Autotype Plates.

VAL D'ARNO: Ten Lectures on Art of the Thirteenth Century in Pisa and Florence. With 1 Steel Engraving and 12 Autotype Plates.

ARIADNE FLORENTINA: Six Lectures on Wood and Metal Engraving, and Appendix. With 4 Full-Page Facsimiles from Holbein's "Dance of Death," and 12 Autotype Plates.

LECTURES on ARCHITECTURE and PAINTING. Delivered at Edinburgh in November, 1853. With 15 Full-Page Illustrations drawn by the Author.

Ruskin House, 156, Charing Cross Road,
London.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

WORKS BY CAPT. A. T. MAHAN

Of the United States Cruiser, "Chicago."

2 vols., demy 8vo, Maps and Plans, price 80s.

THE INFLUENCE OF SEA POWER

UPON THE

FRENCH REVOLUTION AND EMPIRE.

Uniform with the above, in 1 vol., demy 8vo, cloth extra, price 18s.

THE INFLUENCE OF SEA POWER ON HISTORY.

"No living writer is so well qualified to do this great theme justice as Captain Mahan, and certainly the true significance of the tremendous events of those momentous years has never been more luminously or more instructively displayed." Times.

8vo, cloth, 6s.

ADMIRAL FARRAGUT.

A Biography, based on family papers, of the great Confederate Admiral, who "attacked regardless of consequences, and never turned back."

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES.

A BAIREUTH PILGRIMAGE.

By EDITH E. CUTHELL.

2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.

SARAH: a Survival.

By SYDNEY CHRISTIAN,

Author of "Lydia."

2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.

The STORY of MY TWO WIVES. By

ONE of THEIR HUSBANDS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

The EMIGRANT SHIP. By W. Clark

RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," &c. New and Cheap Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

READY NEXT WEEK.

REMINISCENCES OF AN INDIAN POLICE OFFICIAL.

By T. C. ARTHUR.

Fully Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

FEDERAL BRITAIN; or, Unity and

Federation of the Empire. By F. P. DELABELLIERE, Fellow of the Royal Colonial Institute, and Author of "The Early History of the Colony of Victoria." With Chapter on "Imperial Defence," by Sir Geo. S. CLARKE, B.E., K.C.M.G. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. Professor Sir J. R. SEELEY says: "Incomparably the greatest question which we can discuss."

DANTE G. ROSSETTI and the PRE-RAPHAELITE MOVEMENT. By ESTHER WOOD. With 8 Photogravure Reproductions of Rossetti's Paintings. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 8d.

"Regarded as an appreciation of the wider significance of the pre-Raphaelite movement, and a critical account of Rossetti's art and poetry, her book is a fresh and luminous contribution to the literature of the subject. The photogravures of Rossetti's pictures in themselves make the book one to be coveted by all who are interested in art."—Times.

AMONG the MOORS. Sketches of

Oriental Life. By G. MONTBARD, Author of "In Egypt," &c. Superbly Illustrated. Royal 8vo, cloth, 16s. LARGE-PAPER EDITION, strictly limited to 100 copies, each numbered and signed by the Author, printed on Japanese vellum, THREE GUINEAS each, net.

"A series of infinitely more vivid and brilliant pictures of Morocco than are to be found in sober and solid works on that dilapidated and crumbling bulwark of Islam."—Scotsman.

PREACHERS of the AGE SERIES.—Two New Vols.

Uniform crown 8vo vols., with Photogravure Portraits, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. each.

By the Rev. E. J. GOUGH, M.A., of Dundee.—THE RELIGION of the SON of MAN.

By the Rev. J. MORLAIS JONES, of Lewisham.—A CUP of COLD WATER.

"Mr. Morlais Jones has the fervour of the best Welsh eloquence. His book is well worthy to take its place with the best of the list."—British Weekly.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, MAY 26, 1894.

No. 1151, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Astrophel, and Other Poems. By Algernon Charles Swinburne. (Chatto & Windus.)

It must be one of the drawbacks of a high poetic fame, that a new volume by Mr. Swinburne scarcely seems new in the full sense of the term. It is not merely that many of these poems have already appeared in print and, presumably, have been read by all lovers of poetry; but that the poet is so thoroughly, so almost monotonously, true to his special manner, his chosen imagery and style, that the reader feels almost every charm in the book except that of novelty. We feel on very familiar ground when we read "On the South Coast," "A Swimmer's Dream," "England: an Ode," "The Monument of Giordano Bruno." The noble words in honour of Browning (pp. 136-42), of Tennyson (pp. 145-52), of the blind poet Philip Marston (pp. 157-73) are characteristic, in the best sense, of the writer; but the circumstances—the "great commonplace" of the death of genius—are hard to treat with original force: they have been too near men's hearts for too long to admit of it. I am not sure that there is not something more unfamiliar, less like the poet's other work, in the wonderful "Ballad of Dead Men's Bay" (pp. 214-21) than in any other poem in the book. The soulless sea-sprite and the ghost of the new-born child that died at its birth bewail their lot, each envying the other's, and each learns what hell may lie in the granting of our wishes; for "The Lord was ware of the keen twin cry

And wroth was he to hear.

"He's tane the soul of the unsaned child
That fled to death from birth;
He's tane the light of the wan sea wild,
And bid it burn on earth.

"He's given the ghaist of the babe new-born
The gift of the water-sprite,
To ride on revel from morn to morn
And roll from night to night.

"He's given the sprite of the wild wan sea
The gift of the new-born man,
A soul for ever to bide and be
When the years have filled their span."

And in a year their cry is louder yet, to have their old lots restored to them. But "The prayer once heard is as God's own word;

The doom once dealt abides.
And ever a cry goes up by day,
And ever a wail by night;
And nae ship comes by the weary bay,
But her shipmen hear them wail and pray,
And a e with earthly sight
The twofold flames of the twin lights play
Where the sea-banks green and the sea-floods grey
Are proud of peril and fain of prey,
And the sand quakes ever; and ill fare they
That look upon that light."

Is not this "a new shiver" for us, in desert places where the sea and land meet, and strange lights seem to twinkle from the rocks?

But I would not be supposed to imply that in the other poems Mr. Swinburne has not added something to his more familiar style. The finest passage in the book—I do not say the finest complete poem—seems to me to be the sixth section of "An Autumn Vision"—(pp. 54-8)—where the dawn and development of Shakspeare's genius is figured as a sunrise over a tempestuous sea. The dark places, the monstrous things, the Regans and Gonerils and Iagos, that he contemplated, are terrible enough, but not so terrible as his sense of love and beauty is triumphant—

"The terror of his giving rose and shone Imminent: life had put its likeness on.
But higher than all its horrent height of shade
Shone sovereign, seen by light itself had made,
Above the woes of all the world, above
Life, sin, and death, his myrlad-minded love.
From landward heights whereon the radiance leant

Full-fraught from heaven, intense and imminent,
To depths wherein the seething strengths of cloud Scarce matched the wrath of waves whereon they bowed,

From homeborn pride and kindling love of home
To the outer skies and seas of fire and foam,
From splendour soft as dew that sundawn thrills
To gloom that shudders round the world it fills,
From midnight murmuring round Titania's ear
To midnight maddening round the rage of Lear,
The wonder woven of storm and sun became
One with the light that lightens from his name.
The music moving on the sea that felt
The storm-wind even as snows of springtide melt,

Was blithe as Ariel's hand or voice might make
And bid all grief die gladly for its sake.
And there the soul alive in ear and eye
That watched the wonders of an hour pass by Saw brighter than all stars that heaven in-spheres

The silent splendour of Cordelia's tears,
Felt in the whispers of the quickening wind
The radiance of the laugh of Rosalind,
And heard, in sounds that melt the souls of men
With love of love, the tune of Imogen."

It would be difficult to express, without using language that might appear exaggerated, my sense of the beauty of this passage; but I have quoted it, also, to show the increasing mastery shown by the poet over a metre so easily made commonplace, so easily made stilted. I have never felt that elsewhere—in, e.g., "Tristram of Lyonesse," he quite avoided the latter fault; but here, it seems to me, the thing is done in perfect measure.

But if challenged to choose the finest complete poem in the book, I should respectfully name "A Nympholept." One turns from it instinctively to Browning's "Nympholeptos," to compare the two poets' treatment of the strange "possession" which the Greeks named so well. The poems are all heaven apart: Browning depicts the utter and absolute fascination of the lover before the silvery calm of the woman who will neither cling to him nor let him go; Mr. Swinburne, the hushed and awed sense of a presence, an immanence of mysterious divinity, in the lonely woodland—that Panicus terror which we have so vulgarised in English by identifying it with mere fright. "A Nympholept" is a master-piece. I cannot think of any other poem that keeps up, to such an almost agonising point, the tension of spiritual emotion: half fear, half curiosity, both divine. No single stanza can produce even a fraction of the effect of the whole; but here is one as a specimen:

"What light, what shadow, diviner than dawn or night,
Draws near, makes pause, and again—or I dream—draws near?
More soft than shadow, more strong than the strong sun's light,
More pure than moonbeams—yes, but the rays run sheer,
As fire from the sun through the dusk of the pinewood, clear
And constant; yes, but the shadow itself is bright
That the light clothes renewed with love that is one with fear."

And next to this, perhaps, one might rank "Loch Torridon"—or (in quite another kind) the lines, "In Memory of Aurelio Saffi," the triumvir of the Roman Republic of 1849—

"He, who held up the shield and sword of Rome
Against the ravening brood of recreant France,
Beside the man of men whom heaven took home
When earth beheld the spring's first eyebeams glance

And life and winter seemed alike a trance Eighteen years since, in sight of heaven and spring

That saw the soul above all souls take wing,
He, too, now hears the heaven we hear not sing.

"He, too, now dwells where death is dead, and stands

Where souls like stars exult in life to be;
Whence all who linked heroic hearts and hands
Shine on our sight, and give it strength to see What hope makes fair for all whom faith make free."

Readers of Mr. Swinburne will not, of course, find anything novel in this enthusiasm; but the emotions of personal friendship and farewell have rarely found more dignified utterance than in the greater part of this beautiful poem. I say "the greater part"; for I am not sure that the outbreak of wrathful satire (p. 178) against the Papal Church is in place, in a poem which deserves to be exempt from odium theologicum. I think one should not curse the devil himself—still less any human beings—over the open grave of a friend. But, however that may be, here at least are words without flaw, over a grave worthy of them—Robert Browning's.

"He held no dream worth waking: so he said,
He who stands now on death's triumphant steep,

Awakened out of life wherein we sleep
And dream of what he knows and sees, being dead.

But never death for him was dark or dread:
'Look forth' he bade the soul, and fear not.
Weep,

All ye that trust not in his truth, and keep Vain memory's vision of a vanished head
As all that lives of all that once was he,
Save that which lightens from his word: but we,
Who, seeing the sunset-coloured waters roll,
Yet know the sun subdued not of the sea,
Nor weep nor doubt that still the spirit is whole,
And life and death but shadows of the soul."

One recognises, after reading that, how far Hesiod went astray, in the latter part, at all events, of his πῶχρος πῶχρῳ φρονέει, καὶ ἀοιδὸς ἀοιδῷ.

E. D. A. MORSHEAD.

Inspiration: Eight Lectures on the Early History and Origin of the Doctrine of Biblical Inspiration, being the Bampton Lectures for 1893. By W. Sanday. (Longmans.)

FIFTY years ago there were probably few subjects less studied in England than those connected with the Canon and the Inspiration of Scripture. At the very beginning of the century Herbert Marsh had called attention to many interesting points in the history of the Biblical books by his translation of Michaelis's Introduction; and it is very remarkable that after this he was elected by the divinity graduates at Cambridge to the Margaret Professorship of Divinity—a fact which seems to show that his views found a good deal of sympathy in that university. But the movement which Marsh began hardly survived to the next generation. The works of Lessing bearing on this subject, which—though brief and fragmentary—show a very clear apprehension of the points at issue, were probably hardly known in England; and Coleridge's Letters on Inspiration, which embody many of Lessing's views, were not published until 1840, in the very height of the Tractarian ferment, when they attracted comparatively little attention. In any discussion on the Church the question of the formation and authority of the Canon could scarcely fail to appear, but it occupied, in fact, no great space in the discussions occasioned by the Oxford Movement; while anything like what is now called the "Higher Criticism" was utterly alien from the thoughts of Newman and his followers. They simply passed it by. Pusey was, indeed, well acquainted with German theology, but he had no sympathy with it in its freer aspect. In short, at a time which is well within my own recollection few students of theology knew anything of the formation of the Canon of Scripture; and while everyone accepted the doctrine of its inspiration, few inquired very particularly what "inspiration" implied.

Now, all this is changed. The "Higher Criticism" is in the air. No reader of any intelligence can avoid it; it meets us not only in set treatises and in learned periodicals, but in ordinary reviews, magazines, and newspapers. The genuineness and authority of the Sacred Books are discussed frankly and openly, and conclusions are arrived at which are not always in accordance with ancient tradition. "Use and Wont" no longer "guard the portals of the house" of Biblical criticism. When these things are so, the momentous question can hardly fail to be asked—What becomes of the traditional view of the inspiration of the Bible? This question Prof. Sanday sets himself to answer in the learned, lucid, and judicious book before us. And the volume is interesting throughout. It nowhere suffers from that indescribable tedium which arises from the author having lost interest in his subject. The arrangement is defended by the author (p. 3); nevertheless, I must confess that the third Lecture seems to me the natural beginning of the book, while Lecture II. appears the proper sequel to Lecture V., and Lecture I. to Lecture VII.

Prof. Sanday's point of view is that of one who accepts the main conclusions of modern criticism on the several Books which compose the Bible; but he does not trot with unhesitating docility after some German guide. While he makes abundant use of German learning, he never relinquishes the use of his English good sense. Speaking of "some of the German scholars whose names deservedly carry the greatest weight in England," he says (p. xii.) that "there are none to whom he is himself more indebted; but he does not wish to impose upon his countrymen by the weight of authority views which do not seem to be borne out by the evidence."

And again (p. 320):

"I yield to no one in admiration for the Germans or in gratitude to them for their great services, of which I have continually availed myself both in these lectures and elsewhere. . . . But still it must be admitted that German criticism has its defects. . . . A book is judged by an unreal and artificial standard, the standard of the nineteenth century rather than the first, of Germany rather than of Palestine, of the lamp and the study rather than of active life."

This is said especially of German criticism of the Acts of the Apostles, but it has a general application. The Germans are good to use, bad to follow: stimulating rather than satisfying. In saying this I by no means disparage the labours of the "advanced" school in Germany. The science of Biblical criticism shares the lot of all sciences. In astronomy, in geology, in physics, where progress is much more readily discerned than in criticism, there are "advanced" thinkers, who propound views, some of which will perhaps in the end be adopted by the great body of scientific inquirers, while many will fall into oblivion. Those which are forgotten by the next generation are not lost, for they have in most cases done useful work in compelling men of science to examine assumptions which may have been too hastily made. It is not otherwise in the case of Biblical criticism. There, too, in the front rank, contending theories struggle together, and the fittest will no doubt survive; but which is the fittest is rarely evident to the generation which produced it. And the critics of the Bible have, for the most part, the disabilities as well as the advantages of division of labour. They have to deal with problems which require for their satisfactory treatment a breadth of culture, a literary instinct, an aptitude for combination, a soundness of judgment, which are not always, or indeed commonly, found in specialists. A Lessing is often a better guide than a Kuenen or a Holtzmann.

As Prof. Sanday's book is an inquiry into the inspiration of the Bible, it almost of necessity involves the question, What is the Bible? How did certain Books come to occupy a perfectly unique position in the Church? On this question so much light has been thrown by recent publications, especially by Zahn's elaborate work on the Canon of the New Testament, with Harnack's criticism of it, that it very much needed the re-examination which the Bampton Lecturer has given it. The notion of a "Canon," a list, that is, of books of paramount authority, is one which the Christian Church inherited from the Jewish. As Prof. Sanday says (p. 4), "The process of the forming of a Canon of the New Testament is really the process by which the writings of the New Testament came to be placed on the same footing with those of the Old." He therefore examines in Lectures III. and IV. the growth of the literature; in Lecture V. the formation of the collection of Sacred Books which we call the Old Testament; and in Lecture II. the reception of this collection in the Christian Church of the first century. He then repeats the same inquiry for the New Testament. In Lectures VI. and VII. we have described for us the process by which the Gospels and Acts, the Epistles and the Apocalypse, came into being, and in Lecture I. the growth of a Canon of Christian writings in the early Church, analogous to the already existing Jewish Canon. Lecture VIII. is a general summary of the results arrived at. It will be seen that there is in this much more than a discussion of the formation of a Canon of Scripture. Lectures III., IV., VI. and VII. belong rather to the category of what is commonly called "Introduction"; and I do not know that there is anywhere to be found an account of what is now commonly believed as to the age and authorship of the Sacred Books better adapted for the use of intelligent lay people than that contained in these Lectures. The same may be said of the summary of the history of the Canon in Lectures I. and II.

The conception of Inspiration, of "men enrapt by the Holy Spirit speaking from God," is also found from the most ancient times in the Jewish Church. At the time of the formation of the Church of Christ the Jewish Scriptures were described as "inspired by God," and were constantly appealed to by our Lord and the Apostles as of the highest authority. So it has ever been in the Church. And within the first two centuries of Christianity the same epithets came to be applied to the writings which we now call the New Testament. But "inspiration" has not been formally defined by ecclesiastical authority; probably it admits of no exact definition. Its meaning and extent are therefore still subjects of discussion among theologians. Prof. Sanday states thus (p. 127) the leading questions regarding it:

"If [the Bible] is the record of a real communication from God to man, by what processes has that communication been made? How has the necessary contact between the Spirit of God and the spirit of man been established? What are its extent and limits? These are the questions which we are to set ourselves, so far as our analysis will carry us, to answer."

It would carry me beyond all reasonable limits if I were to attempt to give an account of all the valuable suggestions which Prof. Sanday has made on this subject: it must suffice to say that he is everywhere clear and candid, as well as devout and reverent. The leading thought which he elaborates is, that we must not bring our ready-made conception of inspiration to the Bible and apply it as a test: we must gain our conception of inspiration from the phenomena which the Bible itself presents, and we must be content with something short of absolute definition. In his own words (p. 422):

"Few other literatures put forward the claim which the Bible puts forward—to be a direct communication from God. And there are some who would absolutely deny this claim as made by any other religion, and absolutely affirm it for the Bible. But the one thing which history and criticism do disprove is this idea of absoluteness in all its forms. The methods of God's Providence are not of this character: this all white, that all black; here nothing but light, there nothing but darkness. Even in things evil there is a soul of good, and even upon things good there is a touch of imperfection."

This is sound and wise. The passion for defining the indefinite has been in all ages of the Church the fruitful parent of heresy. It is always those who are least conscious of the greatness of a subject who are most ready to define it.

Prof. Sanday tells us in his preface that, of the ten months which elapse between the election of the Bampton Lecturer and the delivery of his first lecture, three were rendered useless to him by illness; and that his time for preparation was yet further curtailed by his holding a "double office with double duties." His Lectures certainly show no sign of haste or carelessness; such of the very numerous citations as I have verified are correct, and bear out the statement in the text, which is by no means the case with all citations. But it is deeply to be regretted that the only chair in Oxford which is specially devoted to the exegesis of the New Testament should be so slenderly endowed that its occupant is induced to hold with it a college tutorship as a means of increasing his income. Another Oxford professorship of exegesis is endowed with a canonry in a distant cathedral, so that the holder must undertake alien—and perhaps distasteful—duties. If these anomalies admit of remedy, a remedy ought certainly to be applied.

S. CHEETHAM.

A Friend of the Queen (Marie Antoinette—Count de Fersen). From the French of Paul Gaulot. By Mrs. Cashel Hoey. (Heinemann.)

THERE was distinct room for a Life of Count Fersen. Some fifteen years ago, his grand nephew, Baron de Klinckowström, published two fairly large volumes, containing extracts from his "papers"—fragments of a diary, correspondence private and diplomatic, letters to and from Marie Antoinette—all, or nearly all, of value and interest, but constituting rather materials for history, Mémoires pour servir, as the French say, than an organic book. The Life of Count Fersen was still to write.

And it was a life well worth writing. He was born on September 4, 1755, of a family occupying very high rank in the Swedish nobility. At the age of fifteen, according to the custom of those days, he left home to study arms in foreign countries—visited Brunswick, Turin, and Strasburg, came to Paris towards the end of 1773, was introduced to Madame la Dauphine, passed over to London in the following spring, and had the honour of being presented to George III. George was very far from being the blockhead of Whig tradition, but he was no conversationalist. "He spoke to me," says Fersen, "though in a very low voice, for that's his custom. As he has only three or four subjects of conversation, he is afraid people will overhear him asking the same question of everyone." The Queen, Fersen found to be "very gracious and very amiable, but not at all pretty"; nobody, I take it, found Queen Charlotte pretty. In the summer of 1778 he was back in Paris, and went to Versailles to pay his respects to the royal family. "The Queen, who is charming," he writes to his father, "said when she saw me, Ah! this is an old acquaintance." She won his heart. Did he win hers? Of course scandal said so, for scandal was ever ready to beslime Marie Antoinette. That she entertained a very sincere and, in truth, a very well deserved regard for the young Swedish noble, may at once be admitted. He was different from the frivolous exquisites of the French Court—had perhaps less sprightly gifts of manner, but certainly possessed much more solid qualities. And then he did not appear before her as a beggar. Some persons, we are told, murmured at the preference which she showed to foreigners. "How can I help it?" she replied, "they ask nothing of me." As to this particular foreigner, the Swedish ambassador, Count Creutz, wrote to his sovereign on April 10, 1779:

"I must confide to your Majesty that the young Count Fersen has been so well received by the Queen, that several persons have taken umbrage at it. I own that I can't help thinking she had a liking for him: I have seen signs of it too certain to be doubted. The young Count Fersen has behaved in the matter with admirable modesty and reserve, and his determination to go to America is specially to be commended. By absenting himself he disarms all dangers, but it evidently required firmness beyond his years to resist such an attraction. During the last few days before his departure, the Queen could not take her eyes off him; when she looked at him they were full of tears."

The ambassador's own eyes were sharp—so sharp that they probably saw more than there was to see. But in truth the story here told is not hard to read. The young fellow conceived a chivalrous affection for the beautiful and gracious young Queen—she was but twenty-four—the birth of whose first child had only served to whet the anger of her enemies. She would have been less than woman if she had not appreciated a devotion so disinterested and pure. But, in such a hostile atmosphere, all kindly personal interest, anything like real friendship between the two, was scarce possible. Calumny stood there argus-eyed and open-mouthed. So Fersen went off, as ardent young France was then doing, to fight freedom's battles in North America. He remained away, mostly in irksome inactivity, but seeing some war service, till the summer of 1783.

On his return to Europe he was well received. The French Government, at the request of the King of Sweden, conferred upon him the appointment of "proprietary colonel" of the regiment entitled Royal Suédois, and also gave him a pension of 20,000 livres—a pension reduced in 1788, and altogether discontinued in 1791. At the same time he was holding rank in the effective army of Sweden, and thus divided his services between the two countries. In September, 1789, he was at Valenciennes with his regiment, and gives a terrible picture of the disorganisation of the French army. On the 4th of the following month he accompanied the royal family on its disastrous entry into Paris—he had probably, earlier in the day, seen the Queen stand forth alone, affronting death, on the balcony of Versailles. "God preserve me from ever seeing again so sad a spectacle as I have seen on these two days"—the 5th and 6th—he writes to his father. But sadder days and sadder spectacles were yet in store. Matters were going from bad to worse. In February, 1791, he writes again to his father:

"I am attached to the King and Queen, as, indeed, I ought to be, seeing the very kind manner in which they have always treated me, so long as they could do so, and I should be odious and ungrateful if I abandoned them now that they can do nothing for me, and that I have the hope of being useful to them. To all the marks of kindness they have showered upon me, they have added yet another flattering distinction: that of confidence."

It was not misplaced. To the day of Marie Antoinette's death he forebore to spend no effort, to dare no peril, in her service. It is poignant to watch the dark tragedy of her end, reflected, as it were, in his memoranda and letters.

M. Gaulot is too prone to regard Fersen's devotion to the Queen as the outcome of a vulgar intrigue, and to conclude, when passages in the correspondence have been obliterated, that the words struck out were words of love. This seems to me, I confess, to be an entire misconception of the relations between the two: a total mis-reading of Fersen's character. We all remember that passage of superb eloquence in which Burke speaks of the Queen:

"Little did I dream that I should have lived to see such disasters fallen upon her in a nation of gallant men, in a nation of men of honour and of cavaliers. I thought ten thousand swords must have leaped from their scabbards to avenge even a look that threatened her with insult. But the age of chivalry is gone."

Not altogether. It lived on in this Swedish noble.

His own end was horrible and tragic. He was torn to pieces at Stockholm on June 20, 1810, torn to pieces by the populace in some fit of blind and ignorant fury; and died, so it is said, with words of forgiveness on his lips.

Brilliant as a writer he was not. Extracts from his letters, diaries, despatches, are not as gems ready for the biographer's setting. But his life is a good one to read.

FRANK T. MARZIALS.

The Gypsy Road. By G. A. J. Cole. (Macmillans.)

MISS MURIEL DOWIE has told us of her holiday in Galicia, Mrs. Joseph Pennell of her holiday in Hungary; and now Mr. Cole follows suit with an account of his tour upon wheels from Myslowitz round by Selmeczbanja (the famous mining centre), and back through Bohemia to Coblentz. A pleasant journey pleasantly told. But where is Myslowitz? Mr. Cole shall say:

"The three great empires meet there with a display of parti-coloured posts; and standing here in Prussian Silesia we may realise the artificiality of modern frontiers, which are no longer lines of natural necessity, but of force. That narrow strip of meadow acts as a necromancer's circle, traced invisibly on the ground: the fiercest of spirits may hardly break it through. Turning from the Russian woodland, we look over into Austria on the right; and, as curious strangers, we may ask the people on either hand the name of their country and their race. 'We are Poles,' they answer. Poland is a living name upon the frontier: you may call it West Galicia or what you will, but one country stretches for them from Warsaw to the far Karpathians. Freedom, it may be, on the one hand, centralised bondage on the other; will enthusiasm or despair be first to break the line?"

Mr. Cole and his friend, the "Intellectual Observer," rode on their bicycles by Arvavírálja, "a name for poets and for kings," across the mountains to Garam-Szent-Benedek, which stands on the Hungarian Plain. They then turned west and, crossing Moravia, entered Bohemia. For the next fifty pages we are in "untamed Bohemia," until at Eger the bicyclists pass the frontier, and "by a little stream" behold the blue and white Bavarian posts. The concluding chapter, called "The Last Divide," takes us to Coblentz, where our journey on the Gypsy Road is brought to a close.

There is no padding in this book: on the contrary, when we have read its 168 pages, we ask for more. We breathe the fresh air of heaven as freely as the writer did upon his bicycle. Mr. Cole has a delightfully breezy style. He has a distinct gift for seizing the picturesque and placing it before us in the briefest possible phrase. But having appreciated the merits of the book, we may be permitted to point out some of its blemishes. Among these we do not reckon its title. It may be a misnomer; but if we owe to it the charming dedication, censure would be ingratitude.

"The gypsies played;
And some remembered how they heard
Such strains when Kossuth's armies stirred;
And some eyes filled with tears, and some Smiled at the memories that come
Like petals from the roses blown."

Such lines as these are worth a thousand correct titles. Mr. Cole is too true an artist not to distinguish between gipsy music and the gipsy. The one is a poem; the other is squalor itself. His only reference, we believe, to the Romany is far from flattering. "We almost tremble," he says, "to see the spotless Slovak children playing in the same roads and sitting on the same fence-rails as those veritable imps of darkness." He also compares, not inaptly, gipsy children running across the grassy slopes, when travellers are in sight, to "colliers scenting a stranger in the Highlands."

Mr. Cole is a sound geologist, a charming verse writer, and a true artist; but we cannot commend his history. The gordian knots of history are scarcely to be loosened as we jog along—"circulando." Mr. Cole's history has a suspicious look of being picked up from guide books and newspapers. What can possess our author not to see the distinction between men so dissimilar as Klapka and Görgei?

"On Klapka in Hamburg and Görgei pensioned at Klagenfurt, survivors of this bitter whirlwind, the mind dwells thoughtfully to-day. The one man went on slaying, and is for ever the 'hero of Komorn'; the other closed the struggle quietly, and is a name one does not care to breathe beyond Vienna."

"Closing the struggle quietly" is a curious synonym for treachery. But our bicyclist-moralist is one to whom all soldiers, be they Washington or Suvorov, Hoche or Napoleon, are equally objectionable. He goes on to say: "The facts of war are so intensely barbarous that a time may come when we shall cease to distinguish between soldiers." Further on he again shows his prejudices in a characteristic passage:

"Bohemia is just now in the unfortunate stage when crime shelters itself behind a national policy. It is not always remarked, as Dr. Johnson would say, that criminals, when they attack classes rather than individuals, show praiseworthy qualities of organisation, and should receive at least some of the credit given to Cromwell, or Frederick, or Napoleon, in the corresponding stages of their careers. The successful general, moreover, is supported by government funds and a vast majority of public favour; your struggling revolutionary has not even the aid of a policeman."

Quite so; and if the revolutionary had the aid of a policeman, our two friends might not have reached their destination as smoothly as they did. It is somewhat ungrateful to extenuate anarchy while enjoying all the advantages of civilisation. But Mr. Cole, we feel sure, writes from the abundance of a generous heart. To him all the world is akin, even the Anarchist. Of the political warfare now being waged in Bohemia the two bicyclists heard something more than the distant rumbling. They arrived at Planany and went to the best inn. They were told there was no room for them. The house was so large that it seemed impossible it could be full. However, there was no help for it, and they turned to the second best inn. Here, too, they met with the same refusal, which was repeated when they went to the worst inn. They then felt that there was something underlying this. Fortunately they came across an old general merchant, to whom they explained that they were English, and by whom they were brought back to their old acquaintance, the best inn. The moment the fact was explained to the host that they were not Germans his change of attitude was instantaneous. "Oh, come in, you shall have two beds; you shall have anything you like—the best room in the house. We had taken you for Germans. Natürlich we do not speak German to Germans." "We were twenty-eight miles from Prag, and Bohemia has had seven hundred years of German rule. Austria Felix has not always imparted her felicity."

The illustrations of Mr. Edmund H. New (presumably "the Intellectual Observer"), are to be commended. We welcome this little book as an addition to what may be called the library of the wayfaring man.

J. G. C. MINCHIN.

Side Lights. By James Runciman: with Memoir by Grant Allen, and Introduction by W. T. Stead. (Fisher Unwin.)

JAMES RUNCIMAN was so unique and distinguished a personality, his writing so faithful a mirror of his peculiar merit as a man, that no apology is needed for the publication of this book. Among his friends his memory is so certain a possession that he scarcely seems to have gone from them; and the large numbers to whom his vigorous work appealed will be glad to have in more permanent form the words of their comforter, adviser, and friend.

In Side Lights, we have Runciman almost at his best. Whether we agree, or disagree, with his opinions and his virile criticisms on men and books, it is impossible not to be charmed by the man who utters them. Nor is it a matter of surprise to us that for his old associates the magnetism he exercises being of such irresistible quality, his very faults take the semblance of virtues.

Mr. Grant Allen contributes a memoir, written with a beautiful restraint and sympathy; reminding us that Mr. Allen, too, is an artist in words when he chooses. Of Mr. Stead's preface the vigour will be cordially recognised; but there are blemishes in the matter of taste and ill-natured attacks—directed, apparently, against those who do not read The Family Herald—that could have been spared very easily.

James Runciman, the man "of rare power and tenderness, and such sadly human weakness," was his own teacher. Like so many men who have won a reputation for themselves in the republic of letters, he gained, by indomitable energy and perseverance, a foremost place among the journalists of his day. His "hack" work, even, had about it a quality rarely found in ordinary newspaper articles. Born at the tiny Northumbrian hamlet of Cresswell, he came to Greenwich at eleven, and when still quite young, began his career as a teacher at the North Shields Ragged School. The same strength and determination that characterised his literary work, were prominent in his methods of teaching and keeping order among his scholars. Here is an amusing story of him as schoolmaster, to the recital of which Mr. Allen adds that "he tackled journalistic obstacles in the same spirit."

"A parent, who fancied he had a grievance, burst furiously into the school room one day, and startled its quietness with a string of oaths. 'That isn't how we talk here,' said Runciman, in his quiet way. 'Will you step into my room, if you have anything to discuss?' Another volley of oaths was the reply, and the unwary parent added that he wasn't going out, and nobody could put him out. Runciman was not the man to allow such a challenge of his authority and prowess to be issued before his scholars and to go unanswered. Without another word, he took the man by the coat collar with one hand, by the most convenient part of his breeches with the other hand, carried him to the door, gave him half a dozen admonitory shakings, and chucked him down outside. Then he returned and made this cool entry in the school log-book:—"Father of boy—came into the school to-day, and was very disorderly. I carried him out and chastised him."

There is no doubt that the hardships Runciman so bravely endured in early life, and the large knowledge of human nature and character he acquired as a master in a London board school, gave to his writings that strong common sense and sternly tender sympathy that so distinguishes them. In this volume, for example, he touches on a variety of topics: on death, on letter writing, on books, on the sea, on scoundrels, on the hopeless poor; and on each subject he writes easily, simply, and with a wisdom not to be gained from books. Moreover, his intimate relations with the lower classes, out of which he was himself sprung, and from which his hardly acquired culture did not estrange him, made it easy for him to write in a manner easily understood of the simplest. These essays, contributions to the Family Herald, in which journal he acted as "father confessor and general director," were the result of his careful study of the sort of advice the correspondents to that paper required. Had they little or no literary value, they would be useful as magnifying glasses placed over the mind of a class for whom we care, or, at least, of whom we know, too little.

Like all great workers, Runciman's anger against shams is terrible: he refuses to see that there is any room in the world for the man or woman who desires only "to exist beautifully." Affectation of every sort was the red rag that flaunted him into madness; and literary affectations he despised most of all. "We are too clever to be in earnest, and the expenditure of earnestness on such a subject as literature is regarded as evidence of pedantry, or folly, or both." He loved best the older, great, and unaffected masters; for modern readers and "weary blasé skimmers of books" he has scant courtesy. With that penetrating insight, which so often enabled him to probe to the heart of things without the encumbrance of logical formulæ, "Byron," he says, "is a little out of fashion now, alas! and yet what a thinker the man was." And again, "the flippant devourer of books can neither be wise, nor strong, nor useful; and, it is his tribe who have discredited a pursuit which once was noble, and of good report."

There is the same quality of suggestion, and the same unerring stroke on the head of the nail, in every other topic he touches. What could be a wiser saying than this? "In many respects it is a good world; but it might be made better, nobler, finer in every quarter, if the poor would only recognise wise and silent leaders, and use the laws which men have made in order to repair the havoc which other men have made."

But perhaps the most noticeable attribute of these papers is their courage. It is harder to be a coward after reading the "Little Essay on Failures." He is continually impressing upon his readers that the most serene and happy people are those who have been "through the valley of the Shadow of Tribulation." He is continually quoting familiar anecdotes of great men, of Gordon, Disraeli, Byron, Napoleon, adding a new charm by his manner of telling them, to prove the truth of his favourite assertion, "no great work has ever been done save by those who have met with bitter rebuffs and severe trials at the beginning of their career." But his pity for those who suffer is evident, constant, sincere.

No work was too mean for Runciman to do that was honest work. The fine gentleman of literature would not have found in him a pleasant companion. He set himself resolutely to do thoroughly whatever came to hand, and the result was that many were better for having known him. "Is your great Sheikh dead?" the Arabs asked, on hearing that Lord Beaconsfield was no more. Runciman's work may be no permanent addition to the literature of his country: it is, perhaps, only glorified "journalism"; but it is better to have done as he did than to trickle down the centuries in sonnet or rondeau. Among the writers of to-day, at any rate, a great Sheikh has lately died.

PERCY ADDLESHAW.

NEW NOVELS.

Eve's Apple. By M. Dean. In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

A Woman's Whim. By Mrs. Diehl. In 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)

Esther Waters. By George Moore. (Walter Scott.)

Our Manifold Nature. By Sarah Grand. (Heinemann.)

A Cluster of Nuts. By Katherine Tynan (Mrs. Hinkson). (Lawrence & Bullen.)

Horace Chase. By Constance Fenimore Woolson. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

Whiff! By Henry Newill. (Ward & Downey.)

BESIDES possessing really strong interest as a story, Eve's Apple is an excellent picture of the manners and events of a time when the old nobility of France gave way, socially and politically, to the rushing tide of bourgeois, nouveaux riches, and sheer talent as opposed to everything else—the time immediately after the first acts of the Revolution. The chief persons concerned in the story are a fascinating and inimitable young girl, Vivienne de Roseambeau; her aunt, the sweet wife of a wicked spouse; a neighbouring Duke, in love with this unfortunate lady; Vivienne's brother René; a certain Republican colonel; and last, but by no means least, a brilliant, powerful, selfish young Republican, Tancred Salvy. The plot, which is no secondary matter, opens with the arrest of Vivienne and her brother for a small skit called "The Black Butterfly," written by one of them and published by the other, and highly offensive to the tender susceptibilities of the Republic. After this, events, emotions, scenes follow one another rapidly, leaving no space for a dull moment between. The reader's joy or anger responds in spite of him to those feelings, as they are experienced by the people in the book. It is immaterial whether the book be true to history or not: it is at any rate true to human nature, and to those fine specimens of it that were to be found among the haute nobilité even in that stilted and artificial time. And true it also is to the ironies and pitifulnesses of life, as they occur in wise and simple, in fine folk and plain. But perhaps a less exigent writer would have given that gallant and upright soldier, Olivier St. Mandé, one moment of gratification.

The true flavour of the fruit in A Woman's Whim has no forerunning promise in the early chapters. A rather stereotyped aristocratic widow, "a revolting daughter" (by name Teresa), a clergyman who dominates the mother and would like to dominate the daughter too, a lover who "traverses" the shrubbery in his hurry to find his Teresa, are not inviting. But by-and-by, when Teresa has got her way and gone to town to study for the operative stage, you find new characters drawn for you with decided skill and insight into the ways of men. Later still come scenes of real passion and passages of some power. Perhaps there is everywhere a little too much insistence on trifles. One might be trusted to remember from time to time that Teresa's plaits were golden, and that her lover's face was dark and handsome. But these small things will not prevent the enjoyment of a genuine romance of love and fate by readers who prefer that kind of fiction, and do not care for much character-moulding. Though Teresa is the heroine, and well drawn after her kind, the men are the strongest feature in the book in the way of delineation. Lord Himley, who "discovers" tenors and prime donne, the oily Lora, and the handsome, gifted, and withal honourable Alfieri, are distinctly good.

Esther Waters is a strong book—strong as a piece of portraiture, and as a picture of unromantic life among a class avoided by the ordinary novelist. Mr. George Moore has always taken his own way in the matter of subject and mode of treatment, and his way has sometimes run counter to the prevailing taste. Here, again, he has gone according to his own liking, and in this instance he has clearly vindicated his choice by fidelity of workmanship and excellence of motive. There was nothing extraordinary in Esther's career. It was just such a life as any domestic servant may have to live in one's own town and street. Nor had Esther any hand in the shaping of her fate. It all happened to her because she chanced to be what and where she was. A grain's weight in the balance at the beginning might have made a vast difference; but though life is full of chances, its certainties are terrible. Following Esther through her varied experiences—squalid for the most part, and almost unrelieved by any gleam or breath of real gladness —one marvels at the intimate description by which they are all made so intensely actual. Whether Mr. Moore depicts the little cook-and-butler-ruled oligarchy of a better-class kitchen; or the patient toil-worn existence that is lived by suffering women in the houses of the coarser poor; or the hopes, and fears, and anxieties of racing men, gentle and common, with their train of "bookies" and betting men and boys; or the routine and callousness of hospital life; or the somewhat grim righteousness of the Plymouth Brethren—in all he writes with knowledge vivified by sympathy, and sympathy directed to the ends of art. But in the name of art one is bound to add that here and there a truer sense of proportion would have ensured a more powerful effect. There are many details that could well have been spared—details which detract from the weight or prominence of larger interests.

A sort of protesting preface, which surely cannot apply to more than the first two stories in the volume, opens Our Manifold Nature. But Sarah Grand need not concern herself overmuch about editorial limitations and the obliquities of critics. Her chief subject—the true emancipation of women—she has so effectually made her own that it will advance in her hands, whatever the outer barbarian may say. The creator of Ideala and Evadne is no mere story-teller. Her men and women, more especially perhaps her women, are anything but puppets. They all help forward that work of cleansing, clearing, uplifting, and strengthening the place and part of women in the family and in society which has so long needed to be done. Fiction is better able to further this work than any other form of literature, and the first two or three of these stories are material aids to it. But, despite Sarah Grand's protest, one feels that Evangeline's final attempt at effect—in "The Yellow Leaf"—was foreign to her nature. Eugenia, the heroine of the next story, is an admirable type of girl: healthy in mind and body, honest with herself (a rare virtue) and to all the world. The bewilderment and final discomfiture of Brinkhampton, the worn-out man of fashion, who thinks to recruit his fortune and rehabilitate himself by graciously taking Eugenia to wife, are excellently well managed. Of the other stories, "Ah Man" is good, and "Boomellen," a small slap at heredity, is rather striking.

Charming, tender, haunting—these are the words that best describe one's impressions of Mrs. Hinkson's Cluster of Nuts—sketches, as she calls them, among her own people,

"Kindly Irish of the Irish, Neither Saxon nor Italian."

There is no plot in any of the stories, but each is a graceful and tender outline of some phase of Irish character. The child-like gaiety and equally childlike surrender to sorrow, the selfless love, the unsophistication, which are all characteristic of the Irish peasantry where the agitator has not wrought his work among them, fill the book with a strange fascination from cover to cover. Pathetic most of the stories are: some in a vague and undisturbing way, some with a sharp and sudden sadness. "Shameon" and "A Spoilt Priest" are examples of the latter kind. Shameon was poor and thriftless, and he came of a bad race on his father's side. The story is told by an old-time lover of his mother, and could there be a truer Irish note than his explanation of the cause of her death?

"They said it was consumption she died of, my brown little girl; but it wasn't, it was silent contempt. When she found out what he [Shameon's father] was an' she had adored him, the love went back on her heart an' killed her."

The exquisite brevity and truth of this one little sketch is remarkable, even among so many others that charm. "A Spoilt Priest" tells of a young man whose iron-hearted mother forced him into the priesthood, and how he fell in love and tried for once to oppose her will—with what result Mrs. Hinkson's own words alone can show.

Of studies of women the late Miss Woolson's Horace Chase is full, and they are all good. From "His Grand," the still young and elegant mother of grown-up children, and the meek Miss Billy, who languishes in vain for the senator Achilles Larue, to the stern sculptress who cultivates the art of smoking on principle, and Lilian Kip, the "sweet fool"—the woman born to marry, who has already disposed of two husbands and makes her adieux to the reader hand in hand with the next, and to the heroine herself—there is not one whom you could wish away or wish better drawn. The men are also well described, but they do not live as the women do. The fine reserve with which the character of the self-made Horace Chase is drawn is admirable. Not one word of praise or blame does the writer give him, and it is only at the end that his true nobleness shines suddenly out, and he stands revealed—an honourable, high-souled man, money-getter though he was. As a story pure and simple the book is too long, and in parts there is too much detail; but where the scene is stirring, the writing becomes terse, and no effect is frittered away by minuteness.

The morals of Whiffs are irreproachable—which is saying much in these days—but the style and punctuation are very faulty. These defects are, in some degree, atoned for by more or less humour, and by a certain amount of dramatic skill in the last of the stories. GEORGE COTTERELL.

SOME BOOKS ON ANCIENT HISTORY.

Ancient Ships. By Cecil Torr. (Cambridge: The University Press.) It is not inappropriate that the historian of Rhodes should write about ships, and the present volume is but an instalment of a larger work which Mr. Torr has in preparation, a history of ancient shipping between 1000 B.C. and 1000 A.D. The character of the ships themselves makes a convenient section, and may well be published separately. Even as a separate section the topic is full of interest. The vivid realism of Mr. Kipling's "Finest Story in the World" can hardly be expected in a treatise where every sentence has to be guarded and every page is full of the technical terms of dead languages; but Mr. Torr writes with clearness and vivacity, and he keeps well in sight those sources of interest which spring from dealing with practical things and from the connexion of his subject with history. The history of Mediterranean lands can never be long forgotten by one who studies ancient shipping, and Mr. Torr is laying the foundation of a very important contribution to the understanding of the great naval struggles which determined who should be the master of Mediterranean waters. That oars should be "the characteristic instruments of navigation" was due to the nature of that sea; and even when "the nations of Western Europe filled the Mediterranean with sailing vessels of the types they had devised for voyages on the ocean," oars were still employed on large Mediterranean vessels, and galleys driven by slaves were in use almost till the days of steam. Another thing which stimulates interest in ancient ships is the obscurity of some of the problems connected with their structure. Mr. Torr has taken the right road in trying to solve these problems by going back to the original authorities and trusting to no modern writer. The moderns have slavishly copied each other, and it was necessary that texts and drawings bearing on ships should be verified. Mr. Torr's own illustrations seem to be very careful copies of ancient designs, and it is refreshing to think how many hereditary errors have now been eliminated from the subject. Mr. Torr begins with the oars, their number and ordering, and he has probably said all which in the present state of our knowledge it is safe to say about the arrangement of the banks. He is wisely cautious about a perplexed matter; but still perhaps he goes too far in combining a passage of Orosius (6.19) with one of Plutarch (Ant. 64), and concluding that Orosius allows a foot of freeboard for each bank of oars. Orosius may have done so, but it is not clear; and the inferred distribution would hardly give room for the rowers. Their comfort would, of course, be little considered, but they must have had room to move to the best advantage. Moreover, the inference excludes the possibility of some of the oars being worked from the decks, or from a projecting gallery along the ship's sides. We really know so little for certain that we cannot say this was not done. From the dimensions, tonnage, and materials of the vessels, Mr. Torr goes on to the structure of the hull and to that very important weapon of offence, the ram. Like modern ships of war, a trireme was liable to have its ram spoiled by use. The shock of collision wrenched the ram off, and started the timbers. The ram had a wooden core, sheathed with bronze, and perhaps a more solid weapon would have worked better, but it hardly rests with moderns to say. We are not sure that the scandit acratas vitiosa navis cura and neque decedit acrata triremi cura of Horace should be referred to this structure. It seems to be a question of the rich man's yacht, and what have yachts to do with rams? Mr. Torr makes a practical suggestion here (pp. ix., 63):

"The ancients saw their way to . . . reinforce the ram by a series of auxiliary rams above, which not only increased the damage to an enemy, but also protected the stem from being crushed against her sides. Such devices as these, which proved of service in antiquity, would certainly be worth a trial on modern ships."

Next come anchors, cables, steering-gear, and rigging. "In every age and every district of the ancient world the method of rigging ships was substantially the same." Military tops are represented on the masts of Egyptian and Asiatic war-ships of about 1000 B.C. (Figs. 6-8), and reappear on Byzantine war-ships; but in Greek and Roman vessels of war the masts were lowered during an engagement, and therefore no military tops were carried. The various types of ships are carefully distinguished by Mr. Torr (Appendix), and technical terms of their structure are explained. The terms of manoeuvring are, we suppose, reserved for another part of the work. The footnotes quote authorities in full. The careless reader who passes by the notes will lose quite half of the value of the book: they contain so much matter and such wealth of literary illustration, and clear up so many passages in our texts. In a note on p. 71 there is a curious suggestion about Lucian's Verae Historiae, l. 42, καὶ γὰρ ἀγκύραις ἐχρῶντο μεγάλαις, ὀλλύσαις, καρτεραῖς — "Apparently, some metal was known as ὀλλας, for ὀλλανος cannot here refer to glass." But is it not only Lucian's fun? Excellent as the notes are, one or two little points slip out of sight between them and the text, and are not cleared up. For instance, what is a carchesium? Mr. Torr has much to say about it, and the reader may make a shrewd guess at what the word means, but we cannot find that it is actually explained anywhere. But, take it on the whole, Mr. Torr's essay is as useful as it is interesting. He has read for his subject widely and decided judiciously, having, apparently, practical knowledge of seamanship. We look forward to his wider work.

Gesammelte Abhandlungen. Von E. Curtius. Band I. (Berlin: Hertz; London: Williams & Norgate.) Every lover of the study of antiquity must welcome the republication in convenient form of those essays of Prof. Curtius which deal with old Greek life. It would not be easy to find elsewhere a collection of papers on classical subjects so various, so profound, and so interesting; and some of the essays at least have not till to-day been easy to come at. It does not need the preface, with the remark that the author wishes to see his essays collected "before he ends his day's work," to recommend them to all who take any interest in his topics. The studies here reprinted have not been altered, except occasionally in form. The collection falls into four parts. Part A, "Antiquarian Essays," begins with the account of Greek roads and road-making, originally published in 1854. This paper is really wider than its title, broadening out into a great deal of cognate matter, on inns and on other aids to peaceful intercourse. Among other passages incidentally cited and explained is the Frogs of Aristophanes, 113, where the word ἐκροπῆς has given some trouble. Prof. Curtius explains it, with great probability, as combining two senses: it is the spot where a road branches off from the main road, and where (also) the way is widened so that carriages could wait and pass each other—something analogous, we suppose, to the metals doubled here and there on our tramways. Another essay in this group is on the water supply of Greek towns. But the author's knowledge overflows, like the springs he writes of, and we have to thank him for much side-information. He points out how astonishingly much the Greeks knew of their own springs and rivers, comparing, as they did, remote waters in temperature, colour, or taste: how Pausanias ignores the mountains, but lingers by the streams and fountains of his route. All this information Prof. Curtius seems to have rediscovered or combined. But the essay would be one-sided if taken alone. It must be read along with a paper in Part B, "History and Topography of Hellas," on the dykes and dams of the Minyai (1892). Water was a foe as well as a friend to the Greeks; and when we think of Phaedrus and the Ilissos we must remember too the floods of Lake Copais. The task of draining this lake has been entrusted to a French company; and the work, which promises economic results in the future, has already disclosed a system of ancient earthworks and canals above and below ground, which speaks of a great state in ancient times. That state was, no doubt, Orchomenos, and K. O. Müller's speculations on the Minyai are in part verified. The works are of peculiar interest as being works of peace, whereas fortified places are of far more frequent occurrence on the sites of ancient life in South Europe. Legend would have it that Herakles stopped the channels and drowned out the people of Orchomenos; and now we know that there really was a great water-system, and may infer that the hostility of Thebes struck a deadly blow at the prosperity of her neighbours. The whole thing is illustrated by a good coloured map. No one paper shows Prof. Curtius' high literary gifts better than the picturesque account of Ephesian history and politics, part of which, at least, our readers will have seen in Altertum und Gegenwart. Group C is given up to Attica and the studies out of which the author's Stadtgeschichte von Athen grew. The three essays of Group D are contributions to "Greek Onomatology," and deal with the names of promontories, rivers, and persons. The profound significance which attached to a name is illustrated from a hundred points of view, and with a wealth of material which soon turns what seemed trivial or fanciful into solid fact, by incorporating it as one member of an enormous series. But we are not sure that we quite seize the author's thought, when he draws our attention to "a Dorieus as leading the anti-Athenian party at Thurii, an Athenagoras heading the Athenian party in Syracuse." The names were, of course, appropriate to the rôles; but either the connexion was accidental, or the insinuation must be that the men were made leaders for their names' sake. But it would be pushing a principle—or a superstition—rather far to take for the sake of an omen leaders (not mere figure-heads) whom you would otherwise not select.

Essai sur le Règne de l'Empereur Domitien, par Stéphane Gsell. (Paris: Thorin.) Not very much has hitherto been done toward making a reasonable and probable portrait of Domitian. Partly because the anecdotes of Suetonius and the rhetoric of Juvenal have had the first start, partly because the other evidence for Domitian's reign is scanty and unsatisfactory, it has been found difficult to reconstruct the image of the man and of his administration. The facts that a good deal of the evidence is poetry; that the witnesses are hostile; that Domitian's name was chiselled out of inscriptions; and that he bore the same names (T. Flavius) as his father and brother, have made it hard to get at the truth about him and to distinguish his acts from those of other Flavian rulers. Still, the accumulation of epigraphic evidence has enabled us to go further than was possible for Imhof, writing in 1857. Schiller was in possession of many more constitutional facts, and M. Gsell has worked out yet more fully the political and administrative sides of the portrait. The reign of Domitian was very important to the constitutional history of the early Roman empire. The principate, "an extraordinary magistracy assisted by a sovereign assembly" (the senate) had to be transformed into "an absolute monarchy, supplied with administrative institutions," and "the reign of Domitian marks an important date in this transformation of the dyarchy into a monarchy." Not only did the emperor take to himself that power of filling up the senate which (as Mommsen shows) really made the dyarchy illusory, but he also encroached in various ways on the rights of the senate and the magistrates. It may seem a small thing that he transferred the revenues which the aqueducts brought in from the aerarium to himself: but then he, too, put cursatores in charge of the finances of Italian towns, and thereby weakened the general authority of the senate over Italy. The importance of these acts is cumulative. Moreover, Domitian accepted titles which proclaimed him a master and a god. The reasons for his encroachment, M. Gsell tells us, were two—(1) Domitian saw the incapacity of the senatorial aristocracy, a motive not discreditable to him; but also (2) his character was "proud, jealous, and misanthropic." At all events, he did the work of degrading the senate thoroughly, and, on his death, that body was incapable of resuming its old place: the best men had been executed, and the rest had no experience of public affairs. The senate had been too strong for Domitian to crush it or set it aside at one blow; hence a long struggle and bad blood, and Domitian was driven into underhand ways (even poison) of disposing of his rivals. This is M. Gsell's theory of the reign: it fits many of the facts; parallels could be found for it; and yet we are not convinced of its soundness. We might believe that there was a struggle between two opposed forces and that Domitian took underhand means and perpetrated judicial murder, if we could see that there really was any check on his power, anything which he could not do openly, any real strength in the senate. But when did he or any other of the earliest emperors after Augustus wish for anything within the empire which he could not have or could not do? This is our difficulty about the dyarchy theory. But, given its base or assumptions, M. Gsell has deduced history from it with great skill and clearness; on such other aspects of Domitian's principate as admit of verification he has collected, sorted, and explained the material with all desirable fulness and precision. The chronology becomes clearer under his hands. We can see all that is known of Domitian as the builder, as the giver of games, the religious restorer and persecutor. His careful supervision of provincial government is duly recognised, though we can hardly admit that he "watched better over the administration of the provinces than Nerva did, who wished to humour the senatorial aristocracy." Nerva's government was too short for any such generalisation. M. Gsell enumerates the delatores of the period and traces their careers; but it is curious how little we know of the confidential advisers of the emperors. They cannot have been ordinary men, for the meaning of much of what they advised has only been seen of late years. But what we miss most in the present essay is the character side of Domitian's portrait. He has a curious public record, and we want to know what manner of man he was. The Caesars, from the Dictator to (say) Severus Alexander, offer for study a series of very fascinating and difficult personalities, and we should have welcomed the judgment on one of them of so conscientious and minute a student as M. Gsell. If a man be lord of a state or of a world, his character makes history. M. Beulé did something towards lifting Domitian out of the list of impossible or unmeaning tyrants, when he declared that shame made him fierce and need rapacious, that his failure to obtain real military honours embittered his life. M. Gsell gives a rather uncertain sound as to whether he deserved any military honours at all (C. vi.—by the way, p. 231, on the wars of Domitian, seems to confuse the left bank of the Danube with the right). There remains, too, the possibility that Domitian's nature was poisoned by jealousy of his brother Titus, in whose favour he was dethroned and sent back almost to childhood after he had tasted the sweets of power. M. Gsell, in a passage quoted before, admits jealousy as a factor in Domitian's character, but he does not work the subject out. Also, nothing is said of the emperor's non-Italian (or at least Celtic) ancestry, and yet crossings of races are perhaps seldom without effect on character. But, on the whole, no student of Roman history can afford to overlook M. Gsell's reading of le Règne de l'Empereur Domitien.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE representatives in this country of Mr. R. L. Stevenson have made arrangements to issue a collected edition of his works, which have hitherto been produced by different publishers and in various forms. The total number of volumes will amount to twenty, subdivided into sections, such as Travels and Excursions, Tales and Fantasies, &c.; and the volumes in each section will be numbered separately, so as to allow of the addition of any future works. It is proposed to include articles and papers not hitherto published in a collected form, such as: The Pentland Rising (1866); "The Philosophy of an Umbrella," written in college days; the suppressed "Amateur Emigrant" (1880), giving the author's experiences in the steerage of an American liner; and many unsigned contributions to the Portfolio. Mr. Stevenson is himself revising and re-arranging these miscellaneous papers, though the actual publication will be under the supervision of his friend, Mr. Sidney Colvin. With the exception of some frontispieces, including an etched portrait of the author by Mr. W. Hole, it is intended that the books shall be printed without embellishment, but with the best materials and workmanship that modern resources can supply. A special paper is being made, with R. L. S. for watermark on each page; and it may be that an entirely new type will be cut. The size will be a moderately large octavo, about 6 by 9 inches; and the binding will be in plain cloth (with paper back-titles), resembling in ruddy hue the forty-eight-volume edition of the Waverley Novels. The public subscription will be limited to one thousand copies, each guaranteed by the signature of Mr. Charles Baxter, of Edinburgh, to whom Kidnapped was dedicated. The printers chosen for the work are Messrs. T. & A. Constable; the London agents are Messrs. Chatto & Windus. It is hoped that the first volume will be ready for issue by October.

MESSRS. RIVINGTON, PERCIVAL & Co. announce for early issue The Publishing House of Rivington from 1711, reprinted from various sources, and edited by Mr. Septimus Rivington, illustrated with facsimiles of title pages, &c., of the earliest publications of the firm, in 1715 and 1720, and with portraits of some of the former members.

MR. T. BAILEY SAUNDERS will shortly publish, through Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co., a Life of James Macpherson. The volume contains an account of the publication and influence of the Ossianic poems, and the full story of Macpherson's famous quarrel with Dr. Johnson. The greater number of the letters, never previously printed, have been kindly supplied by the Marquess of Abergavenny, and some are from MSS. in the British Museum; while much of the information is from hitherto unpublished matter. A photogravure of the portrait by Romney forms the frontispiece.

MESSRS. ISBISTER & Co., LIMITED, will publish next week The Message of Israel, by Julia Wedgwood. The volume comes as a supplement to "The Moral Ideal," in which, a few years ago, Miss Wedgwood delineated the spiritual development of the chief nations of antiquity; and its direct object is to show the degree to which the moral purport of the Old Testament is made more clear and intelligible when read in the light of recent Biblical criticism.

A VOLUME of political and social essays will be published by Messrs. Hodder Brothers in a few days, under the title of The New Party, edited by Mr. Andrew Reid. The contributors include the Dean of Winchester, Mr. Grant Allen, Mr. Robert Blatchford (the literary leader of the labour party in the North), the Rev. Charles Marson, the Rev. Dr. Robert Horton, the Rev. Philip Wicksteed, Mr. Keir Hardie, Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace, and Mr. William Tirebuck. Poems are contributed by the Hon. Roden Noel, Mr. R. Le Gallienne, and Mr. Walter Crane. The latter has also designed a frontispiece, entitled "The New Era." Women are represented by Sarah Grand, Evelyn Pyne, Miss Margaret McMillan, and Miss Frances Hicks.

MR. HENRY J. DRANE will publish early next week Lord Rosebery, his Words and his Work, by Mr. Arthur Wallace, a journalist who has closely studied Lord Rosebery's career for twelve years past. Mr. Wallace treats his subject in six different capacities: (1) as man; (2) as Radical; (3) as Municipalist; (4) as Home Ruler; (5) as Imperial Federationist; (6) as Foreign Minister and Premier. The book will be bound in primrose cloth, and will contain a portrait specially drawn by Mr. F. C. Gould.

IN Mr. Fred. A. McKenzie's forthcoming book, entitled Sober by Act of Parliament, which Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. expect to have ready for publication by the end of the month, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain defines his attitude on the compensation question. He has always maintained that dispossessed publicans are entitled to a reasonable recompense, but his ideas of what is reasonable have been considerably modified within the last few years. In 1876, when advocating the buying up of public-houses in order that municipal drink shops might be started, he proposed that the licensed victuallers should have their rights valued at five years' purchase, based on the average profits of the previous three years.

"Further consideration has convinced me," he now writes, "that the method of compensation proposed by me in 1876 would not be the best guide to a fair settlement, and that it would be impossible to ignore the interests of other persons beside the licensed holder. I think now that the best way would be to submit all claims to an official arbitrator, who would be instructed to give for the property such sum as would be given by a willing buyer to a willing seller: in other words, the fair market price."

MR. DAVID NUTT will publish immediately The Lore of Laili and Majnun, a second edition of Jsmes Atkinson's translation from the Persian, edited by his son, Canon Atkinson, of Bolton; The Jesuits in China and the Legation of Cardinal de Tournon, by Canon R. C. Jenkins; Flowers from a Persian Garden, by W. A. Clouston, second and cheaper edition; The Didache and the Apostolic Constitutions, by the Rev. C. H. Hoole; Songs and Sagas of the Norsemen, by Albany F. Major; and Children's Singing Games, collected, edited, and annotated by Alice Bertha Gomme, pictured in black and white by Winifred Smith.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN will publish in the course of the next few months an English edition of Dr. Max Nordau's Entartung.

A NEW novel in three volumes, by Mr. W. Carlton Dawe, entitled The Currency Girl, will be published by Messrs. Ward & Downey on May 28. The book depicts the Australian life of many years ago, when "Currency People" was the name given to those settlers who had been convicts.

A NOVEL, by Miss Meg Dyan, entitled All in a Man's Keeping, will be issued in a few days by Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co.

MR. W. P. RYAN, author of "The Irish Literary Revival," is preparing for early publication a volume of Irish stories and sketches, humorous and legendary, which will appear under the title of The Starlight through the Thatch.

MESSRS. JARROLD & SONS, having purchased the copyright in Mr. Fergus Hume's The Mystery of a Hansom Cab, will shortly publish a revised edition, in cloth, uniform with his recent work, "The Mystery of Landy Court."

MR. T. E. HELLER is preparing an annotated edition of the new Evening Continuation School Code, modelled on his edition of the Code for Day Schools. It will be published by Messrs. Beemrose & Sons.

SOME important additions to Transatlantic magazine literature may be shortly expected. Mr. J. M. Stoddart, well known from his long connexion with the firm of Messrs. Lippincott, has been visiting London and Paris with the view of arranging for the publication in America and England of a monthly magazine and a quarterly review; and he promises to preserve British authors' rights in the United States without any trouble or expense to them.

MME. OLGA NOVIKOFF, better known perhaps as O. K., will contribute to the June number of the New Review "Some Reminiscences of Kinglake," which are calculated to throw a pleasant light upon the character of the historian.

THE June number of Folk-Lore will contain the following articles: "Saga Growth, with special reference to Egil's Saga," by Mr. F. York Powell; "St. Nicholas and Artemis," by Prof. E. Anichkov, of St. Petersburg; "The Roman van Walsewein," by Prof. W. P. Ker; "The Problem of Diffusion," a rejoinder, by Mr. Joseph Jacobs.

A SPECIAL meeting of the Library Association of the United Kingdom will be held at the Royal Colonial Institute, Northumberland-avenue, on Tuesday, May 29, when the librarian, Mr. James R. Boose, will read a paper on "The Library of the Royal Colonial Institute."

ON Monday next, Messrs. Sotheby will sell a collection of autograph letters and historical documents. Most of them are by English men of letters, politicians, and kings; but we may specially mention an important letter of George Washington, and a series of antiquarian communications addressed to Sir Ralph Thoresby.

ON Thursday, the same firm begin dispersing the library of the late Frederick Burgess, of Finchley, the sale of which will occupy four days. Mr. Burgess was well known as an enthusiastic collector of first editions of Byron and Leigh Hunt, of Dickens and Thackeray, of Ruskin, of books illustrated by Cruikshank, of playbills and works relating to the stage, and especially of those additionally illustrated.

ANOTHER auction fixed for Thursday is that of the entire stock of linguistic works of Franz Thimm & Co., late of Brook-street, the auctioneers in this case being Messrs. Pattick & Simpson. The works and copyrights are in all stages: MSS. ready for the press, moulds and stereotypes, sheets in quires, and bound copies. A few bibliographical works and Shaksperiana are included.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE following is the list of those upon whom honorary degrees are to be conferred at Cambridge: The Duke of York, Mr. Alexander Peckover (lord lieutenant of Cambridgeshire), the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, Earl Cathcart, Sir John Thorold, Sir Dighton Probyn, Sir Nigel Kingscote, Mr. Albert Pell, Sir J. B. Lawes, and Sir Joseph Gilbert. For the two last mentioned the degree is that of Doctor in Science. It will be observed that most of the names have been chosen in view of the forthcoming show at Cambridge of the Royal Agricultural Society.

IN Congregation at Oxford next Tuesday, two forms of statute will be promulgated, uniting the Rawlinsonian chair of Anglo-Saxon with the Merton chair of English, and creating a new professorship of English, to be paid partly out of the emoluments of the Merton chair. The duties of the new professor will be to "give lectures and instruction on the history of English literature during and since the period of Chaucer, on the works of approved English authors, and on the principles of literary criticism"; while, at the same time, the subject of the Merton chair is to be restricted to "the history of the English language, and the history of English literature down to and during the period of Chaucer."

PROF. SAYCE, Prof. Margoliouth, and Prof. A. A. Macdonell have been appointed to represent the University of Oxford at the International Congress of Orientalists, to be held at Geneva during September.

PROF. ROBINSON ELLIS delivered his inaugural lecture, as Corpus professor of Latin, at Oxford, on Thursday of this week, his subject being "The Fables of Phædrus."

THE delegates of the common university fund at Oxford have re-appointed Mr. T. Raleigh to be reader in English law, and Dr. A. Neubauer to be reader in Rabbinical literature.

THE following have been elected honorary fellows at Trinity College, Oxford: Prof. Robinson Ellis, Mr. James Bryce, and Prof. A. V. Dicey. Mr. Bryce was formerly a scholar; the other two vacated fellowships on their appointment to professorial chairs.

THE Conington prize at Oxford has been awarded to Mr. W. J. Woodhouse, of Queen's, for a Dissertation on "The Geography, Topography, and Antiquities of Aetolia." The only previous winners of this prize, which is offered every third year for a dissertation on some subject appertaining to classical learning, are Prof. Cook Wilson and Mr. F. Haverfield.

AT the general meeting of the Cambridge Philological Society, held on Thursday of this week, Prof. H. Sidgwick was to communicate "Conjectures on the Constitutional History of Athens, 593-579 B.C."

IN connexion with the organised visit of Americans to England known as the Old Country Pilgrimage, Prof. Max Müller was to deliver a lecture at Mansfield College, Oxford, on Saturday afternoon, upon "The World's Parliament of Religions."

PROF. MACALISTER was to read a paper in the library of the Divinity School at Cambridge, on Friday evening of this week, upon "The Place of Sacrifice in the Ancient Egyptian Culture."

AT the fifty-fourth annual meeting of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, held last week, Mr. W. M. Fawcett, of Jesus, was elected president, in succession to Mr. F. J. H. Jenkinson; and the following were elected honorary members: Lord Stanmore, Dr. E. B. Tylor, and Mrs. Walter Kidmore Foster.

THE University of Oxford has made grants of books printed at the Clarendon Press, of the value of £25 in sheets, to each of the following public libraries:—Carlisle, Bermondsey, Shore-ditch, Hertford, Oldbury, Gravesend, York, Brentford, Barking, and Wednesbury.

AN important decision affecting the government not only of Queen's College, Cork, but also of the Belfast and Galway Colleges, was delivered at Cork last Thursday by Mr. Justice Holmes, who presided over the Court of Visitors. The president of the college (Mr. Slattery) had claimed the right of vetoing all resolutions of the governing body. The other members of the council appealed, with the result that the visitors declared that the president has no such power, and that he is simply the authenticating machine of the council. The visitors held that all the troubles in the college had sprung from the claim of veto put forward by the president; they also ordered him to restore to the registrar all college documents in his possession, and to always appoint a deputy in his absence, as required by statute.

OBITUARY.

EDMUND YATES.

THOUGH Edmund Yates—who died a week ago, aged sixty-two years—had countless friends, he had also, as it seems, acquaintances who disapproved of him; and there has been time, already, for the appearance of at least one able, scornful, and highly "superior" article, in which he has been represented as merely the prophet of Society, as one who attained to celebrity by assiduous attention to his "patrons," and as a gentleman who, whether he had known Society or not, would in any case have said his prayers with his face turned towards Mayfair. All this is really a somewhat grotesque misrepresentation of a man of varied and generous character; and it takes little count of the abilities—the strong common sense, the finished courtesy, the healthy and ever-present sense of humour—which distinguished the author of Broken to Harness, and the part-creator of the World newspaper. Mr. Yates was, in truth, one of the most honourable and brilliant figures alike of the elder generation of literary men, in himself a deeply interesting link between the great generation of Dickens and Thackeray and the generation of to-day. He was vitally interested in the excellence of literary work; and his own, even in that which was, of necessity, but the journalism of the hour, never fell below a high level. If his longer novels, full as they are of unmistakable good qualities, were not of the first rank, that was because, to an order of mind continually receptive of all that is passing around it, the œuvre de longue haleine is less congenial than the briefer effort. For the big work, if it is to be of the finest quality, a measure of seclusion and detachment is indispensable; and seclusion and mental detachment were never welcome to Mr. Yates. But his work, whatever it was, was always executed with a craftsman's finish, with the savoir faire of a man of the world, and with the bonhomie of the essentially "good fellow." He was the representative of all the better side of personal journalism. It was sagacious and not unchivalrous in his hands. He was graphic, vivid, forcible—he never willingly wounded the worthy; and it is true to say that hardly ever was he trivial. The honour of journalism—blended of late years so entirely with literature, that nearly every man of real mark in literature is called upon to perform something or other in journalism—was singularly dear to him. Had he lived, it may be that in the future he would not have written anything so fresh as to reveal qualities hitherto unsuspected. At sixty-two a man can scarcely be asked to display to us a fresh side. Yet Edmund Yates was valued for that which he had done, and for that which he was. And his death is a genuine loss.

F. W.

A GRANDSON OF KOLOKOTRONÈS.

IT may interest those readers of the ACADEMY who have given attention to the history of Modern Greece, to learn that a grandson of the "Old Man of the Morea"—as a celebrated Klepht, subsequently a general in the War of Independence, was called—has lately died at Athens.

The deceased, Theodora Gennaïos Kolokotronès, who thus bore the names of his sire and of his grandsire, was the son of that brave youth who so distinguished himself in the war, that by common consent his baptismal name of Giannios (John) was changed into that of Gennaïos (valiant). I have alluded to the great affection, the almost womanly tenderness, that the old chief bore to this heroic boy in my Introduction to his Autobiography (Fisher Unwin).

The Kolokotronès just dead, though in the army, never had an opportunity of showing if he inherited any of the military ability possessed by his father and grandfather. He is described, by those who knew him, to have been an ardent patriot and a sincere friend. By a singular self-effacement, he wished to owe nothing to the name of Kolokotronès—"Δὲν θέλω," he said, "τὰ μὲ ἀγαποῦν ὡς Κολοκοτρώνη"—and therefore he adopted the name of Phalez, and under that pseudonym was a constant contributor to the papers, and also gave from the slender resources of his purse whenever the needs of his countrymen demanded any aid. The voluntary abdication of a great patronymic is unusual, especially when he who has a right to bear it is as proud of it as the late Theodore Gennaïos Kolokotronès, in his inmost heart, seems to have been. His having done so, however, appears to me to be a justification of the government for sending no representative to his funeral, upon which omission some of the Athenian papers have commented severely.

ELIZABETH M. EDMONDS.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

The new number of Mind strikes one as rather dry. There is a notable absence of psychology from the bill of fare. Mr. Bosanquet's article on "The Nature of Aesthetic Emotion," which looks at first to be psychological, is, in truth, an attempt to mark off aesthetic from other emotions by reference to the writer's well-known view of the expansive function of beauty. The article is, however, well written and suggestive, if only as showing how the feelings of ordinary humanity compose themselves when found in the new and strange entourage of an intellectual consciousness subtilised to the utmost by the Hegelian discipline. The other articles—on "Freedom, Responsibility, and Punishment," by J. H. Hyslop; on "Time, and the Hegelian Dialectic," by J. E. McTaggart; and on "Reflective Consciousness," by Shadworth H. Hodgson—are a little heavy and wanting in freshness alike of ideas and of mode of treatment.

The second number of The Psychological Review gives us a study on "The Psychological Standpoint," by Prof. J. S. Fullerton, who thinks that there lurks a contradiction in psychology, in as far as it starts with the idea of outer objects (acting on the organism), and at the same time seeks to explain the growth of the mental representative of the object (the percept). But the writer hardly succeeds in establishing his point. The psychologist has to distinguish between the external thing, exciting in some sense, and the individual mind's apprehension of it. The development of the latter is his special business; and he has to do with the other only as entering into the series of events which conditions the psychical states of the individual. What may be the relation of the individual's percept to this assumed external acting on his sensibility, does not come within the psychological purview at all, but has to be handed over to philosophy. The writer then goes on to show once more how Prof. W. James's brilliant book teems with contradictions. The American laboratories contribute some interesting researches, and the reviews show that our cousins are patriotically determined to make the most of their own scientific productions.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- AUBREY, G. Notice sur la vie et la doctrine d'Auguste Comte. Paris: Bittl. 5 fr.
- BRONKHORST, J. Thier-Ethik. Bamberg: Buchner. 4 M.
- FIRMIN-DIDOT, G. La Captivité de Sainte-Hélène, d'après les rapports inédits du Marquis de Montchenu. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 7 fr. 50 c.
- JOSSOT, A. Artistes et bourgeois. Paris: Boudet. 8 fr.
- LEVESQUE, E. Politique et barbarie, contenant la Révolution parisienne de 1871. Paris: Carré. 3 fr. 50 c.
- MARTINEAU, A. Madagascar en 1894. Paris: Flammarion. 10 fr.
- PICHOT, N. M. Die Aesthetik A. W. v. Schlegels in ihrer geschichtlichen Entwicklg. Berlin: Vogt. 1 M. 80 Pf.
- PRÉVILLE, A. de. Les Sociétés africaines: leur origine—leur évolution—leur avenir. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 3 fr. 50 c.
- SCHEIDT, R. le Commandant. L'Empire à Saint-Cloud (souvenirs du règne de Napoléon III). Paris: Victor-Havard. 3 fr. 50 c.
- VACQUERIE, Aug. Depuis. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- BELSHRIM, J. Codex Vercellensis. Christiania: Malling. 5 M. 60 Pf.
- FAARN, F. H. R. v. Geschichte u. Kritik der neueren Theologie, insbesondere der systematischen, seit Schleiermacher. Aus dem Nachlass des Verf. hrsg. v. P. Schaarschmidt. Leipzig: Deichert. 5 M. 60 Pf.
- HAHN, G. L. Das Evangelium des Lucas, erklärt. 2. Bd. 2. Hälfte. Breslau: Morgenstern. 6 M.
- MÉNAGEZ, Eug. La Théologie de l'Épître aux Hébreux. Paris: Fischbacher. 7 fr. 50 c.
- MEYER, W. Die Gotteslehre des Gregor v. Nyssa. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M.
- POIRRE DE GARCIN, Ch. Le sens commun: études de philosophie religieuse. Paris: Fischbacher. 3 fr. 50 c.
- TESTAMENTUM, novum, graeco rec. C. Tischendorf. Ed. VIII. Vol. III. Prolegomena scriptis C. R. Gregory additis curis E. Abbot. Pars ultima. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 13 M. 50 Pf.
- TORMA, S. v. Ethnographische Analogien. Ein Beitrag zur Gestaltungs- u. Entwicklungsgeschichte der Religionen. Jena: Costenoble. 4 M.
- WEISS, B. Das Neue Testament. Textkritische Untersuchung u. Textherstellung. 1. Thl. Apostelgeschichte, Katholische Briefe, Apokalypse. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 20 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BELTRAMI, L. Il Castello di Milano durante il dominio dei Visconti e degli Sforza 1368-1535. Milano: Hoepli. 20 fr.
- COLLECTANEA Friburgensis. Fasc. I. Freiburg (Schweiz). 6 M.
- DANKENBERG, H. Die deutschen Münzen der sächsischen u. fränkischen Kaiserzeit. 2. Bd. Berlin: Weidmann. 24 M.
- DE LEVA, Gius. Storia documentata di Carlo V. in correlazione all'Italia. Vol. V. Torino: Loescher. 12 fr.
- DOUEN, G. La Révocation de l'Édit de Nantes à Paris. Paris: Fischbacher. 200 fr.
- GUTSCHMID, A. v. Kleine Schriften. 5. Bd. Leipzig: Teubner. 21 M.
- HAUVETTE, Amédée. Hérodate: historien des guerres médiques. Paris: Hachette. 10 fr.
- MÉNÉVAL, le Baron C. F. de. Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire de Napoléon 1er, depuis 1802 jusqu'à 1815. T. I. Paris: Dentu. 7 fr. 50 c.
- NOAMANN, E. Fehr. v. Geschichte der Gesamt-Familie v. Normann. Ulm: Kerler. 30 M.
- PUBLICATIONS aus den k. preussischen Staatsarchiven. 57. Bd. Leipzig: Hirzel. 18 M.
- URKUNDBUCH. westfälisches. 4. Bd. 3. Abth. 6. Hft. Münster: Regensberg. 9 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE, ETC.

- BASTIAN, A. Indonesien od. die Inseln d. malayischen Archipel. 5. Lfg. Berlin: Dümmler. 8 M.
- CANTOR, M. Vorlesungen üb. Geschichte der Mathematik. 3. Bd. 1. Abth. 1663-1699. Leipzig: Teubner. 6 M.
- GÄNGE, C. Die Polarisation des Lichtes. Leipzig: Quandt. 1 M. 80 Pf.
- LENDENFELD, R. v. Die Tetractinelliden der Adria. Leipzig: Freytag. 12 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- ANTHOLOGIA graeco epigrammatum Palatina cum Planudea, ed. H. Stadtmüller. Vol. I. Palatinae libr. I-VI. (Planudeae libr. V-VII). Leipzig: Teubner. 6 M.
- AUCTORES incerti de ratione dicendi ad C. Herennium libri IV, ed. F. Marx. Leipzig: Teubner. 14 M.
- GANZENMÜLLER, C. Beiträge zur Ciris. Leipzig: Teubner. 3 M. 20 Pf.
- GRAMMATICI graeci. Partis IV. Vol. II. Leipzig: Teubner. 22 M.
- LATTER, E. Die due nuove iscrizioni preromane trovate presso Pesaro. Milano: Hoepli. 5 fr.
- MEYER, G. Neugriechische Studien. II. Die slavischen, albanischen u. rumänischen Lehnworte im Neugriechischen. Leipzig: Freytag. 2 M.
- PLAUTI, T. M. comediae. Tom. IV. fasc. V. Cistellaria, rec. F. Schoell. Leipzig: Teubner. 5 M. 80 Pf.
- ROBERT, U. Edition paléographique des Fables de Phèdre, publiée d'après le manuscrit Rosanbo. Paris: Hachette. 10 fr.
- SCHMIDT, W. De Flavii Josephi eloquentiae observationes criticae. Leipzig: Teubner. 6 M.
- WIGAND, Th. Die ptolemaische Bauinschrift, sachlich erläutert. Leipzig: Teubner. 3 M. 60 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"AMOURETTE."

Bedford College, London: May 8, 1894.

James I., in his description of the appearance of the Lady Jane Beaufort in the Kings Quair, mentions that she wore "on hir hede a chaplet fresch of hewe, off plumys," and then follows this well-known stanza, which offers two difficulties. The poet says the chaplet of plumes was—"Full of quaking spangis, bryght as gold

Forgit of schap like to the amoretis
So new, so fresch, so plesant to behold,
The plumys eke like to the floure-ionettis
And other of schap like to the floure-ionettis.
And, above all this, there was, well I wote,
Beautee enouch to mak a world to dote."

The meaning of the word "amoretis," in the second line, has hitherto been uncertain; and the fifth line is evidently corrupt at its close, due to contamination with the preceding line. The word "amoretis" occurs with what seems like a similar meaning in Fragment A of the Romaunt of the Rose (l. 892).

"For nought y-clad in silk was he
But al in floures and flourettes
Y-painted al with amorettes;
And with lozenges and secochouns
With briddes, libardes and lyouns," etc.

which corresponds with ll. 882 ff. in Meon's edition of the French text, the meaning not being quite clear—

"Il n'avoit pas robe de soie
Ains avoit robe de floretes
Fete par fines amorettes,
A lozenges, à esueciaus,
A oiselés, à lionciaus," &c.

Prof. Skeat has suggested "love-knots" as the meaning of the word in both the English passages; and on his authority Murray's Dictionary quotes both passages with this interpretation under the article "amoret," a sweetheart, an amorous girl. But though this will make sense in the Romaunt, it can scarcely be said to do so in the Kings Quair. I would suggest that the word in question is the French "amourette" (subs. fem.), which Cotgrave gives with the meanings:—

"The grasse teamed, Quakers and Shakers, or quaking grasse," and which Dr. Murray also gives with one quotation—viz., Petiver (Phil. Trans.) xxiii., in 1702: "Each squamose head resembling those of the common amourets—i.e., love-grass or quaking-grass (Briza-media). It will be at once apparent why the delicate stalk of grass, with its trembling heart-shaped pendants got the name of amourette, love-grass, and quaking-grass, and why King James described the plumed head-dress of his lady-love as partly consisting of "quaking spangis . . . of schap like to the amoretis." It is also clear, I think, that this was the plant in the mind of the translator of the Romaunt; but I should perhaps mention that this line is not in the Glasgow MS., though it is in Thynne. Of the French original I am not so certain, and am inclined to think that here, as in l. 4569 and l. 4755 of the English version, the word means, as Skeat remarks, "young girls, sweethearts."

If this suggested interpretation of "amourette" in the Kings Quair be granted, and if it be remembered that the "floure-ionette," or the great St. John's-wort flower, has a central group of plume-like stamens, it becomes pretty evident that the word underlying the corrupt "floure-ionettis" of the next line is the name of some flower or plant which rhymes with "ionettis," and is suitable in shape to form part of this chaplet of plumes. I feel that Prof. Skeat's suggested "round crokettis" is, for these reasons, impossible. I would suggest, as at any rate a possible if not the right reading, "floure-burnettis." The word "burnett" seems to have been applied indiscriminately in the Middle Ages to a number of plants not belonging to the same genus, but possessing certain superficial similarities. The name was, however, very frequently used for what is now called the "great burnet" or "wild burnet" (Sanguisorba officinalis), the minute flowers of which grow in a sort of spheroidal ball at the top of a long stalk. The plants, of course, got their name from the colour of the flowers; but the "great burnet" has projecting fluffy yellow stamens which make this the predominant colour of the ball. Hence all three flowers making up the chaplet of plumes were of one colour. I think the form of the flower is suitable to the general sense of the stanza; and I would point out that, if the right reading be "floure-burnettis," or something like it, the cause of the contamination with the line above at once becomes clear.

H. FRANK HEATH.

DANTE'S "SECONDA MORTE."

London: May 19, 1894.

The interpretation of Dante's "seconda morte," in favour of which Mr. Paget Toynbee quotes Boethius, is supported by Vittoria Colonna's sonnet to Bembo, who had neglected to celebrate her deceased husband:—

"Unkind was Fortune, who forbad the rays
Of my great Sun your kindling soul to smite,
For thus in perpetuity more bright
Your fame had been, more glorious his praise.

"His memory, exalted in your lays,
Envy of ancient time, our time's delight,
Secure by you had shunned, in Time's despite,
The second death, that on the spirit preys.

"If in my bosom might infused be
My ardour, or my pen as yours inspired,
Great as the dead should be the elegy.
But now I fear lest Heaven with wrath be fired
Toward you, for overmuch humility;
Toward me, who have too daringly aspired."

R. GARNETT.

"OLD HAILEYBURY."

Ventnor, Isle of Wight: May 19, 1894.

While thanking Mr. H. G. Keene, C.I.E., in the name of the contributors to the Memorials of Old Haileybury College, for his notice of that work in to-day's ACADEMY, I crave permission to point out that I am not the editor of the volume (as might be inferred from his notice), but only of my own portion. Nor am I responsible for any part except my own. This will be clear to any one who will take the trouble to read the first sentence of the preface, or to glance at the title-page. Another volume might well be published, giving biographical sketches of every eminent Haileybury civilian, including the names mentioned by Mr. Keene and Mr. Keene himself; but it would probably be as impossible to find any one editor for it, as it was for the present volume.

M. MONIER WILLIAMS.

"PERSEPHONE AND OTHER POEMS."

Hampstead: May 23, 1894.

Will you allow me to state in your columns that, since the publication of my book, Persephone and other Poems (Sampson Low), it has come to my knowledge that the title had been used in 1884 by Miss L. M. Little. As my book is already in circulation, Miss Little has been good enough to give me permission to retain the title in question.

KATE MCCOSH CLARK.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, May 27. 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Wordsworth," by the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed.
 MONDAY, May 28. 2.50 p.m. Geographical: Anniversary Meeting.
 5 p.m. Hellenic: "A Greek Head in the Possession of Mr. T. H. Ward," by Miss Eugénie Sellers: "The Paintings of Panaenus," by Mr. E. A. Gardner.
 TUESDAY, May 29. 9 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Modern Microscope," II., by the Rev. W. H. Dallinger.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Black and White in Afrikanderland," by Mr. W. A. Wills.
 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Annual General Meeting.
 8 p.m. Library Association: "The Library of the Colonial Institute," by Mr. J. R. Boose.
 THURSDAY, May 31. 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Egyptian Decorative Art," II., by Prof. Flinders Petrie.
 8.50 p.m. Antiquaries.
 FRIDAY, June 1. 8 p.m. Philological: "The Deponent Verb in Old Irish," by Prof. J. Strachan.
 9 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Work of Hertz," by Prof. Oliver Lodge.
 SATURDAY, June 2. 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Stage and Society," II., by Mr. E. W. Lowe.
 4 p.m. Zoological: "Sketches in Geographical Distribution," III., by Mr. F. E. Beddard.

SCIENCE.

TWO ICELANDIC BOOKS.

Otte Brudstykker af den ældste Saga om Olaf den Hellige. Dr. Gustav Storm. Med facsimiler. (Christiania.) This is one of those excellent little papers which for lucidity, concise phrasing, and ingenious use of material are models of their kind, and recall the best traditions of Northern scholarship. Dr. Storm gives zinc-process facsimiles founded on photographs of six fragments from a lost vellum of 1230-40 (Nouv. Arch. Mem. frag. 52), and two from a lost Icelandic vellum of the middle of the fourteenth century (A.M. 325. iv. a. quarto), which copied the MS. whence the other fragments came. The subject of these fragments is the Life of St. Olave; and, as Dr. Storm holds, they belong to the oldest form of this Life, of which the well-known MS. A.M. 61 is a copy; Bergsbók and Plateyar-bók iii., containing a later recension, which owes its origin to Styrmæ; and the legendary saga being another copy somewhat abridged of this edition of Styrmæ's. The "oldest form" was compiled in Iceland between 1155 and 1180, Styrmæ's edition also in Iceland, probably in 1229, and the legendary saga made in Norway, near Throndheim, shortly after 1250. The importance of these conclusions towards the criticism of the Kings' Lives of Norway is obvious. The facsimiles are clear and useful, and being pretty distinctly dated, are the more welcome.

Ordförrådet i de äldsta Isländska Handskrifterna, leksikaliskt och grammatiskt ordnat, af Dr. Ludvig Larsson. (Lund: H. Möller.) Following the excellent example set by Mr. Sweet's Oldest English Texts, Dr. Larsson has taken in hand the Oldest Icelandic Texts, using Rimnabegla (1180) and its glosses; the Reykholt Church charter; the Homily-book (1140-50); and the Homily fragments (A.M. 237); the Saints' Lives (A.M. 645-1200; the Law section (A.M. 315, fol. D); Physiologus (1150); Elucidarius (1130); and Placidus-drapa. From all these early MSS. he has compiled an elaborate and careful glossary of the twelfth-century Icelandic speech, of about 400 pages, double columns quarto, with alphabetic lists of foreign names and words, and a useful and handy "grammatical register," in which names, verbs, and adjectives are classified according to origin, somewhat on the model of the lists in Vigfússon's Dictionary. The trouble and time lavished on this Glossary would have been grudged by most English scholars; but if the work has been well done—and, so far as we have been able to test it, this would appear to be the case—it will never have to be done again. If other old fragments of twelfth-century Icelandic vellums turn up, and we must not expect many, their vocables can easily be added to this well-arranged book, which supplies the phonetician, the philologue, and the student of literature with a firm basis for investigation. The necessary restricted character of the vocabulary of these old texts, so largely based on foreign Latin sources, will of course render the fuller dictionary indispensable; but Dr. Larsson's book should take its due place on the shelf beside Grein, and Sweet, and Schmidt, and the Lexicons of Homer, and of the Tragedians, of Cicero and of Tacitus, as treasure-houses of a particular era and use of a classic tongue. And though it is true that words, bare words, are but a "very fantastical banquet," there is always plenty of profit in such an "alms-basket" of them as Dr. Larsson and his enterprising publisher have offered to the learned world. Moreover, if normalising there is to be in handy editions of old Icelandic texts, it is obvious that it would be better to take this twelfth-century glossary as a basis rather than thirteenth- or fourteenth-century MSS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PROF. ASA GRAY.

Washington, D.C.: April 23, 1894.

In the ACADEMY of April 7 is a very kindly review of the Life and Letters of Prof. Asa Gray.

It is stated that he was the son of a small farmer and tanner of Massachusetts; whereas, in point of fact, he was born in Oneida County, New York. A parallel statement would be that Hugh Miller was the son of a Staffordshire miner.

But a more serious error lies in saying that Gray's accession to the Darwinian doctrine was especially valuable as that of a "pupil and friend of Agassiz." Dr. Gray had established his reputation as an authority in botany—a branch which never was a speciality of Agassiz at all—full ten years before the latter visited America. He was appointed professor of natural history, and director of the Botanic Garden at Harvard College, in 1842; Agassiz did not come to Cambridge till 1846. In no sense was Gray a pupil of his friend. In fact, his adhesion to the Darwinian theory was remarkable, because Agassiz did not cordially accept it; and herein, as in everything, Gray's scientific views and work were remarkable for their complete independency.

WILLIAM EVERETT.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE following fifteen candidates have been selected by the council for election into the Royal Society: Mr. W. Bateson, of St John's College, Cambridge, author of Materials for the Study of Variation; Mr. G. A. Boulenger, assistant in the Zoological Department of the British Museum; Dr. J. R. Bradford, of University College, London; Mr. H. L. Callendar, lecturer on physics at Trinity College, Cambridge; Mr. W. W. Cheyne, of King's College, London; Mr. R. E. Froude, Superintendent of the Admiralty Experimental Works; Prof. M. J. M. Hill, of University College, London; Prof. J. Viriamu Jones, of Cardiff; Mr. A. E. H. Love, lecturer on mathematics at St. John's College, Cambridge; Mr. R. Lydekker, formerly on the Geological Survey of India; Mr. F. C. Penrose, surveyor to the fabric of St. Paul's Cathedral; Dr. D. H. Scott, keeper of the Jodrell Laboratory at Kew; the Rev. F. J. Smith, Millard lecturer on experimental mechanics at Trinity College, Oxford; Mr. J. W. Swan, the electrical inventor; and Mr. V. H. Veley, lecturer on chemistry at University College, Oxford.

THE Friday evening discourse at the Royal Institution on June 1 will be delivered by Prof. Oliver Lodge, upon "The Work of Hertz."

THE anniversary meeting of the Royal Geographical Society is to be held on Monday next, at 2.30 p.m., in the hall of the University of London, Burlington Gardens, when the president, Mr. Clements R. Markham, will deliver an address and the medals will be presented. The annual dinner of members of the society and their friends will be held the same evening at the Hotel Metropole.

THE annual general meeting of the Institution of Civil Engineers will be held on Tuesday next, at 25, Great George-street, to receive the report of the council and to elect officers for the ensuing year.

THE advances made in the study of geology since 1878 have rendered necessary the publication of a sixth edition of the late Sir Andrew Ramsay's manual for students on The Physical Geology and Geography of Great Britain, revised by Mr. Horace B. Woodward, of the Geological Survey. The editor, while sparing no effort to bring the work abreast of the latest information, has found that the sagacity of most of Sir Andrew's theories has been amply proved by time. The work, accompanied by a corrected form of the small coloured map which appeared in the fifth edition, will very shortly be issued by Mr. Edward Stanford.

AT the annual general meeting of the British Ornithologists' Union, it was agreed that a new series of the Ibis should be commenced in 1895 with the thirty-seventh volume, under the editorship of Dr. P. L. Selater and Mr. Howard Saunders.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

CLIFTON SHAKSPEARE SOCIETY.—(Saturday, April 28.)

MISS M. CATHARINE SMITH in the chair.—The Rev. H. P. Stokes read a paper on "The Latin play of 'Richardus Tertius,'" which was written by Dr. Thomas Legge, Vice-Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, and was acted at St. John's College in 1579. Several MSS. of it exist, and the play was printed by the old Shakspeare Society, and in Hazlitt's "Shakspeare Library." The copy in Emmanuel College, Cambridge, has a list of the Johnian students who sustained the various parts. The tragedy is in three divisions ("actiones" as they are called) intended for three different evenings. Each "actio" has a prologue and an epilogue, and is divided into five "actus." It is written in trimeter iambics, with one or two songs or choruses in dimeter iambics. There are some interesting marginal stage-directions, long lists of dramatis personae before each "actus," and curious addenda as to processions and stage properties at the conclusion of each part. The play proceeds upon the lines of the popular and traditional history of Richard Crookback, and includes, in dumb-show, a penance-scene of Shore's wife. St. John's, where the play was first acted, seems at that period to have excelled both in the splendour of its preparations and in the quality of its acting. Roger Ascham says that "the refectory of St. John's College Hall, Cambridge, exceeds itself when furnished at Christmas with its apparatus for acting plays." It was in St. John's Hall, it may be mentioned, that, in the closing year of the great Tudor Queen, there was enacted the celebrated "Return from Parnassus." Many details of the biography of Dr. Legge, and of the persons who acted in his play, were given.—Mr. S. L. Gwynn read "A Note on Colley Cibber's Version of 'Richard III.'" Everybody who has seen the version acted, knows that the listener's mind is continually racked to know where in Shakspeare he has got to. It would be therefore tedious to enumerate in detail its many changes and missions. But in face of the significant fact that Cibber's version holds the stage, one may fairly bestow a little consideration upon it. Its aim was to simplify and condense: interest is concentrated throughout on the single person of Gloucester. The first act shows the killing of Henry, the second gives the wooing of Anne and the death of Edward. In the third, Gloucester, by the help of Buckingham, paves his way to the throne; and the fourth makes his crime culminate in the murder of the princes, hot-foot upon which come the tidings of invasion; and the fifth act, as in Shakspeare, marks his fall attended with every circumstance of horror. How much is omitted here one can best state by saying that the parts of Clarence, Margaret, and King Edward do not appear. Thus is sacrificed the speech of Clarence, than which nothing in Shakspeare is more famous, and the scene, no way inferior to it, where the dying Edward repents of his brother's death. Yet these two are almost a less sacrifice than the terrible personality of Margaret. Nothing so strongly marks Gloucester's ascendancy as his power to dominate even her. Yet there can be no denial of the fact that Shakspeare perplexes and dazes his audience with all the mass of his effort. Colley Cibber aims merely at finding in the story of Richard means to keep an audience amused for three hours. Shakspeare wants to cram into a three hours' representation what Dumas would give in three volumes—a picture of the whole mass of conflicting aims, ambitions, characters, and crimes that weltered together at the English court. The marvellous wrangle in the ante-chamber of the dying king is like Dumas at his best; and Shakspeare, like Dumas, will leave out nothing. Conscious of the strength of his episodes, he overlays and obscures the central design, regardless of frail humanity. In reading we accept him gladly; but upon the stage man in all ages has demanded a certain unity and clearness of idea. Further, Shakspeare aimed beyond Dumas in this. Not only did he want to give life to the lesser characters and crowd his canvas with subordinate struggling groups, but he is writing poetry throughout; he cannot be content to make Buckingham adroit, he must make him eloquent with the eloquence of poetry in his speech to the Mayor. Possibly Elizabethan audiences may have had a quicker ear for poetry than we have; they were accustomed to take in their ideas through the mind rather than through the eyes, and poetry spoken may have given them more pleasure than it does us. Possibly the truth is that one never hears poetry spoken on the stage except what one knows by heart of Shakspeare, and we might like new poetry if we heard it. Anyhow, the fact is indisputable, that to us poetry does not produce the same effect spoken as read: hardly any critic will judge of verse by the ear alone. How far then was Cibber justified in constructing out of Shakspeare's overwhelming plenty a simpler and more lucid story, that should present the person of Gloucester merely and leave the background insignificant, and omit such stuff as deserves its place in the background merely for its poetical merit, such as is notably the death-scene of Clarence. He is justified in the abstract, and fully justified in making Shakspeare possible. The conditions of dramatic effect were not understood or valued in Shakspeare's time, and it is easy to imagine how his ghost might clap its hands over the mechanism of a play by Sardou. Once those conditions are realised by audiences as well as writers, dramatists who wilfully disregard them have not any more claim to recognition as dramatists than poets who disregard the law of metre. We demand that a drama should be clear and dramatic, just as we say that a metre must have rhythm and harmony; and several of Shakspeare's plays are confused and frequently tedious for representation. There are no fixed laws to prevent innovation; but, once an art has arrived at a certain perfection, it cannot tolerate work that falls short of that perfection: to demand for a modern dramatist the license that Shakspeare took is as reasonable as for a would-be Academician to draw like Fra Angelico. In a limited sense Colley Cibber knew more about dramatic art than Shakspeare, just as in a sense Mr. Morsley draws better than Angelico; and in either case the older master would be immensely impressed no doubt with the progress. But Colley Cibber was, on the whole, a very bad writer, a man of execrable taste; and so, while we may commend his simplifying or even altering the business of the play (in the final conflict scene noticeably), we cannot tolerate his additions and his emendations.—Miss Katharine G. Blake read a paper on "Richard of Gloucester," referring to his sensitive pain at his own ugliness, his consummate hypocrisy, his notable wit, his clever acting, and his extraordinary powers of fascination. He is not like the hypocrites who deceive themselves: to himself he is sincere. Yet when danger approaches, he proves vacillating and contradictory as the weakest might be, and full of suspicion of faithlessness in his followers. This last would be the natural outcome of his own treachery, and, indeed, proves itself well founded. A nature so cruel and so tyrannical has no hold on men but by their fears. Towards the end this wretch proves himself human; for, in the awful consciousness of his own guilt, the terrible thought comes that no man leaves him, no soul will pity his fall. And so, with terror and Hell in his mind, he hurries out of life.—Miss Louisa Mary Davies in a paper entitled "Rue, with a difference," considered the characters of the two murderers in Richard III. These are an illustration of the oft-told truth, that to a whole souled artist no part of his work is trivial or mean. The two ruffians, labelled respectively "first and second murderer," like all Shakspeare's pairs and triplets are differentiated. From their familiarity with the circumstances attending the murder of young Edward of Lancaster, we may judge that they were by profession soldiers. At the first glance they seemed fairly matched; but as we make their closer acquaintance, we see points of dissimilarity no less salient. Physically Number One is the better man of the two; and it is no doubt in virtue of this and the self-confidence arising therefrom, that he takes on himself the entire onus of the first interview with Richard. From first to last, with but one brief interlude, we find him the stronger character of the two. His inward promptings to mercy are but momentary, and lead nowhere unless to the prolongation of his victim's sufferings. His first relenting seems almost to spring from an impulse of disgust at his fellow's reckless bravado; the second and third are only the outcome of a soldier's natural aversion to killing a prince in cold blood without provocation. It seems something akin to a paradox to ascribe his bitter outburst against Number Two, after all was over, to promptings of this same ruth; but between the lines one reads that he felt the weight of his misdeed to be greater than he could endure alone, and was filled with rage that, in appropriating the full price of blood, he abjured his right to share the burden of his guilt with another. The nice gradations in cowardice between two men who stab one unarmed man awake, and two men who stab one unarmed man asleep, may be too subtle for our untrained discrimination, but he saw them, and declared for the former, though his companion evidently leaned towards the easier fashion of doing the deed. The two are alike in that, when it comes to the point of actions rather than words, we find them singularly unbusiness-like; but when they reason with Clarence, the difference between them becomes apparent again. Both excuse themselves by bringing heavy charges against the prisoner; but those of Number One have chiefly reference to deeds of violence and bloodshed, while Number Two lays most stress on his sacrilege and broken oath. Number Two indeed is a man of gentler mould, and, if one may risk saying so, seems to belong to a type not wholly unfamiliar. An unpleasant deed has to be done to earn money; he suggests that it shall be done while the victim is asleep, that there may be no extra "fuss"; but, unfortunately, tripping over the word "judgment day" finds his imagination confronted with unwelcome possibilities; for a brief moment draws back, then professes himself subject to these short spasms of relenting. His next mood, a half-hysterical recklessness, is terribly natural; we know it cannot last long, and feel it has passed when he is urging Clarence to prepare for the death he is so slow to inflict. His conscience, of which he spoke so lightly, is crushed by the weight of the deed; like Pilate, he desires water to wash the blood-stain from his hands, and like Pilate's fellow actor in the same divine tragedy, he flings down his share of the blood-money, leaving it for blacker and more hardened guilt to gather together again.

CAMBRIDGE ANTIQUARIAN SOCIETY.—(Monday, May 7.)

Mr. J. W. CLARK described a library attached to the church of St. Wallburg at Zutphen. This church possessed a library before 1555, but its situation is not known. In that year it was suggested that a really good library should be established, apparently for the use of the inhabitants in general, and by the contributions of friends sufficient funds were got together. The foundation was laid on Friday, July 25, 1561; and the last stone of the vault set in place July 1, 1563. The building is erected against the south choir-wall, and, the church being apsidal, the plan is irregular. The library is a vaulted room about twenty-six feet broad, divided lengthwise into two aisles by four central columns. It is lighted by four windows on the south side, and by two on the west side. In the south aisle there are ten desks for books, and in the north aisle eight. The former have ornamented ends, and appear to be the original fittings of the room; the latter, which are plainer, were probably added as books increased. They are all about 9 ft. long, by 5 ft. 5 in. high to the top of the final on the end. The books lie on their sides on the sloping desk, like a Bible on a church-lectern. Each book has a chain fastened to it, about twelve inches long; and at the end of each chain is a ring, through which an iron bar passes, one inch above the top of the desk. There is no shelf under the desk. It was evidently intended that the books should always lie upon it. The largest number of books on any desk is eleven; the smallest six. There are no MSS. Most of the books on the south side, so far as one could judge from a hasty inspection, were printed in the first half of the sixteenth century. On the north side some are of much later date, even so late as 1630. The desks are of a convenient height for a reader who sits on the fixed seat provided between each pair. Lantern slides showing (1) the whole library, (2) a single desk with a reader seated at it, having been exhibited, a drawing forming the frontispiece to a MS. (in the British Museum) of a French translation of the first book of Boethius, written and illuminated in France towards the end of the fifteenth century, was next shown. This picture represents a man studying in a library fitted with desks similar to those at Zutphen. It was next explained that the remains of book-desks that must have been very like those at Zutphen are still to be seen in the Library of Queens' College; and that desks once existed in the Library of Pembroke College, on which, from the account that has come down to us, the books were laid. Finally, it was concluded that we have at Zutphen a solitary example of a mode of fitting up a library which was common down to the end at least of the fifteenth century, but which now is almost forgotten. It could only have been maintained so long as books were few in number and large spaces were available to contain them.—Mr. J. W. Clark next read an essay on "Monastic Libraries." He began by reading the chapter from the Rule of St. Benedict which prescribes daily study; and then traced the gradual development of feeling with regard to books, and the growing care for their safe keeping, as evidenced by the customs of the Carthusians, Cluniacs, Cistercians, Augustinians, and Premonstratensians. The way in which books were bestowed in the Houses of these Orders was next investigated, and typical examples of each were described, as Durham and Canterbury in England, and St. Germain des Prés in France, for the Benedictines; Oiteaux and Clairvaux for the Cistercians; St. Victor, Paris, for the Augustinians; and lastly the Greyfriars, London, for the Franciscans. This essay also was illustrated by lantern-slides.—In conclusion, Mr. Clark delivered a short lecture on the probable fittings of private libraries in the middle ages, selecting as an example the account of the money spent by Charles V. of France on the Library of the Louvre, 1361–68. The arrangement indicated was explained and illustrated by pictures taken from illuminated MSS. in the British Museum. The development of the modern bookcase was then rapidly sketched; and it was shown that the Library of the Escorial was probably the first in which bookcases were ranged against the walls, instead of projecting from them, as in mediæval examples. The bookcases there were designed by the architect Herrera, in 1584. They probably served as a model to the architect employed by Cardinal Mazarin, whose library was fitted up in or about 1640. It was suggested that Mazarin's Library must have been seen by Sir Christopher Wren, and that from it, and others in Paris at that time, he conceived the idea of fitting up the Library of Trinity College in what was then a thoroughly original style.

FINE ART.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

II.

It is long since we have had from the brush of Mr. Watts anything so broadly and frankly executed, so fine in technique, as the canvas "For he had great possessions." It shows the typical rich man, splendidly clad in oriental robes, his head bowed down with care, and his face completely averted; his rich raiment, his great possessions, have brought him but care and sorrow. There is infinite pathos in the very reticence with which the note of sadness is struck; and the picture has a chastened glow, a well-harmonised splendour of aspect, recalling the great Venetians of the golden prime, and especially Paolo Veronese. Mr. Watts's portrait, "The late Sir Andrew Clark, Bart.," does not attain the usual high level of intellectual characterisation which we expect from him much more confidently than executive skill.

"Versailles" is the well-intentioned attempt by Mr. Val Prinsep to represent that terrible march of the Parisian women to Versailles, on the 5th of October, 1789, which inaugurated the horrors of the revolutionary era in France. The huge painting is smoothly and carefully (indeed, over-carefully) executed; but it is not in a spirit of anecdote that so tremendous a subject can be treated, especially to-day, when to reconcile us to pictures of this class an overpowering passion, a genuine power of evocation are necessary.

Nothing Mr. Edwin A. Abbey has done up to the present time as a painter takes equal rank with his beautiful "Fiammetta's Song," which, we must own, comes upon us as a surprise. No doubt the additional training which the artist has gone through, in connexion with his share in the great decorations for the Boston Library, has broadened and strengthened his technique. Boccaccio's much-sung lady stands on a fair marble terrace, round which circle huge cypresses just flushed with the setting sun; below extends, in a far-reaching prospect, the valley of the Arno. She sings to her lute, fronting but apart from a fair company of dames and cavaliers, grouped around in well-varied attitudes of a studied picturesqueness. Altogether there is something new and genuinely attractive in the conception; but its elegance would certainly not have been marred, had Mr. Abbey been able to infuse a little more of the breath of life into his harmoniously grouped and quaintly habited Florentines.

There is nothing particular to be said about the "Amour Piqué" of that impeccable draughtsman but cold colourist, Monsieur W. Bouguereau; it is just what might have been expected of him—open to no blame if we accept the peculiarities of his academic style, but frigid and a trifle perfunctory.

Mr. W. Q. Orchardson is determined that the praise year after year lavished upon his consummate art shall no longer be qualified by the criticism that his flesh-tones and his colour schemes generally are unduly hot. He makes a new departure with the portrait of "James Dewar, Esq., F.R.S., Jacksonian Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Cambridge." Composed with originality and a seemingly naturalness, truthfully and sympathetically characterised, the portrait appears at present rather too chalky in the flesh tints: Mr. Orchardson has gone too far in the direction opposed to that which he generally follows. Still more out of his usual line is his white "Portrait of a Lady," which is in all respects a most interesting achievement. The technical problem of blanc sur blanc has often been attacked before—as in the popular "Miss Katharine Grant" of Prof. Herkomer, and the wonderful "Sarah Bernhardt" of Bastien Lepage—but rarely with greater success than on the present occasion. The attitude of the young lady depicted is delightfully simple and unconventional, her head and arms—though the shadows are rather brown for the peculiar scheme of colour, or colourlessness, chosen—being modelled with great skill and completeness.

Mr. Albert Goodwin, in his curious canvas "The First Christmas Dawn," has evidently aimed at a pendant to his Dantesque "City of Dis," attempting this time a more difficult task, and one in which to be less than sublime, is already to be almost ridiculous. Above the shepherds—to whom angels descend, floating in the midst of celestial radiance, that they may announce the blessed news of the Nativity, the painter has turned the whole vault of heaven into one vast Gothic fane, in which beams of light, in lieu of stone, mark out the architecture. The idea is an ingenious one, but it savours a little too much of those portentous architectural inventions with which Martin delighted former generations. And why burden both the picture and the Catalogue with a watery and distasteful paraphrase of the sublime words which were ready to hand, and of which, indeed, the painter has made use in the frame of the picture?

In "The Child Enthroned" Mr. T. C. Gotch has not been able to get quite away from his first success, the picture of a little girl enthroned with a crown of berries and a sceptre of reed, which appeared two years ago at the Academy. Here the model is of the same engaging type, with fair flesh, pale flaxen hair, and blue eyes; but in accordance with this new fashion of modernising the sacred drama and the divine personages, a halo is placed round the head of the young girl, who is seated upright, in stiff hieratic fashion, on a throne or chair, and made to do duty as the Virgin in childhood. The painting of the head and hands is delightful, but here praise must end; for the picture is not much more than a putting together of studio properties of a coarse and inferior description, and the bright, not to say flaring tints of the colour-scheme are imperfectly harmonised.

From a technical point of view, Mr. J. H. Lorimer's genre picture, "The Eleventh Hour: Marriage de Convenience" is one of the cleverest and most successful things in the whole exhibition. In one of those scantily furnished yet dainty chambers of the beginning of the century, such as Mr. Orchardson loves to depict, is seated, pensive and bowed down, a white-robed bride half covered with her diaphanous veils; two little children, in their white wedding frocks, have run in to remind her that all without is in readiness but the bride herself. There is some little triviality, some perhaps forced concession to the British love of anecdote in painting, in the figures of these children, while that of the forlorn bride is well conceived, and a remarkable piece of work. What interests more than the anecdotic motive of the picture is the skilful illumination, the even, pale light which, admitted from wide windows, floods the chamber, the placing of the figures, their atmospheric envelopment. Mr. Lorimer's "Evening," which was last year at the Academy, is this summer at the Salon of the Champs Elysées, where it has been included among the pictures purchased by the State for the Luxembourg—a high honour, indeed, for a young English artist.

It cannot be said that the new Associates, Mr. Stanhope Forbes and Mr. Frank Bramley, by whose elections the Academy conferred full recognition upon the Newlyn school, have shown on the present occasion any new development of their artistic capacity. Mr. Stanhope Forbes, in the large canvas "A Quarry Team," proves himself, not for the first time, an able and accurate draughtsman; but there is too much of the instantaneous photograph about this great team of cart-horses, almost fronting the spectator as they are driven along the high-road, standing out against the dull green of a rather airless and uninteresting landscape. There seems no reason for the existence of the picture on this large scale, since the artist has not succeeded in infusing into it a sufficiently personal or interpretative quality. Mr. Frank Bramley's chief contributions are "Evening," "Autumn," and "By the Light of the Fire," the last-named being yet another variante of his favourite motive and his favourite illumination. It is hung as a pendant to Mr. H. H. LaThangue's "Some Poor People," a much more thorough performance in the same minor key, just lacking, however, that distinctiveness which would cause it to dwell in the mind of the beholder when it is no longer seen.

One of the most brilliant plein air pieces at Burlington House is Mr. H. S. Tuke's "August Blue," showing some naked youths bathing from a boat—their flesh gleaming white in the sunshine. All round extends the fair, blue sea, lapping the boat with a movement that can almost be heard.

A more vigorous and spontaneous work than Mr. T. Charlton has yet exhibited is his "After the Battle: Sedan," a paraphrase of that tremendous scene in Zola's La Débâcle, in which, against an angry sunset sky, the riderless cavalry horses, maddened with hunger, are seen charging madly "across the blank, silent country, crushing the dead and finishing off the wounded."

Mr. William Stott's "Awakening of the Spirit of the Rose," to which reference should, perhaps, have been made in the preceding notice, shows a nymph lying all nude in her tangled bower of roses and greenery. It is a rich piece of purely decorative art, and in style makes a return to this artist's earlier manner. The "Temptation of Sir Percival, Malory's Morte d'Arthur," affords proof of Mr. Arthur Hacker's skill as a draughtsman, and general dexterity as an executant, but at the same time shows that, in conceiving a subject of this idealistic character, he cannot rise above his models and digest the elements of his picture. The Sir Percival, bareheaded, but otherwise armour-clad from head to heel, is a steadfast knight; the sorceress, notwithstanding her fair chaplet of anemones and her would-be fatal fixity of gaze, is stolid and unalluring: no credit is due to the blameless knight for withstanding her fascinations. The scene is the equivalent of that in Wagner's "Parsifal," in which Kundry seeks to win to the lower life Parsifal, the Reiner Thor.

Mr. W. F. Yeames has depicted, in amusing fashion, the effeminate Henri III., king of France, habited with the affected elegance which his many portraits have rendered familiar, toying with three little dogs slung round his neck in a basket. The title, "Le roi l'amuse" is, however, misleading: it belongs of right to the more virile Francois I., and since Victor Hugo's great play cannot easily be dissociated from him and his amorous exploits. Mr. G. H. Boughton's chief contribution this year is "The Ordeal of Purity," which represents, as we take it, in a kind of allegory, Chastity—a nun-like personage, halo-crowned like a mediaeval saint—girded at, as she slowly glides along in a snowy landscape, by venomous back-biters, lurking by the way. As is usual with this artist, the landscape is more completely satisfactory than the figures.

Mr. Luke Fildes's portrait of the Princess of Wales had been looked forward to with much curiosity and interest, seeing that the royal lady had not for many years been painted by an English artist of eminence, and that it might safely be surmised that this one would not take the standpoint of the mere courtier or the fashion-painter. A royal portrait is not as other portraits, since the painter must, in undertaking it, renounce half his advantages. Ease and natural grace of attitude are excluded by the very circumstances of the case; for the royal lady must not unbend, or, forgetful of self, lounge in public. In the same way, if any expression beyond the conventional one de circonstance be aimed at, it can only be suggested by subtle and reticent touches; an excess either of vivacity or of melancholy would, according to all received notions, be unseemly. Taking into consideration all the difficulties of the position for a painter whose artistic status compels him to rise above the mere superficiality, the condescending amiability, which have in the majority of similar cases been deemed adequate, Mr. Fildes may be congratulated on a considerable success. The Princess wears a décolleté evening dress of black, and sits upright with a little Japanese pug in her arms, fronting the spectator, on a sofa, the rich hues and cleverly disposed cushions of which afford just that happily-broken line and that relief of colour which could not be obtained from the central figure. Mr. Fildes has not the executive brilliancy or the intuition as a colourist which would enable him successfully to relieve from the deadened crimson background of curtain the head, with its too nearly kindred hues in the flesh; and the portrait suffers somewhat in consequence of this inability. What is chiefly to be admired is the skilful disposition of the material, the reticence and repose of the conception, and above all the unobtrusive sympathy with which, under the veil of conventionality which must perforce be cast over the whole, he has managed to indicate a certain tremulous tenderness and feminine charm.

CLAUDE PHILLIPS.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

ARRANGEMENTS are being made for the opening of an exhibition of the work of Glasgow artists in the Continental Gallery, New Bond-street, on June 1. About thirty artists have promised to contribute, including Messrs. Joseph Henderson, A. K. Brown, Harrington Mann, J. W. Henderson, P. McGregor Wilson, Alex. Roche, Tom McEwan, W. Y. Cameron, Macaulay Stevenson, George Pirie, J. Hunt, Jas. Paterson, R. M. G. Coventry, Wellwood Rattray, Tom Robertson, Duncan McKellar, J. Whitelaw Hamilton, W. G. Gillies, J. F. Christie, J. Lochhead, Archd. Kay, Alex. Frew, H. Spence, F. Newberry, and Reid Murray. The exhibition is intended to consist of about 150 pictures, from four to six being lent by each contributor. After being shown for six weeks in London, the pictures will be taken to Berlin, Cologne, and Düsseldorf.

THERE will be on view next week, at the Burlington Fine Arts Club, in Savile-row, a loan collection of works by masters of the school of Ferrara-Bologna. The exhibition will remain open throughout the months of June and July.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co.'s twelfth annual Black and White Exhibition will be held at the Cutlers' Hall, Warwick-lane, Newgate-street, from May 31 to June 15. Among the artists represented by original drawings are Messrs. J. MacWhirter, Frank Dicksee, W. L. Wyllie, and Sir J. D. Linton.

THE new volume of the "Gentleman's Magazine Library," announced by Mr. Elliot Stock for publication during the present month, will contain the contributions to the Gentleman's Magazine on "Ecclesiology."

AT an extra meeting of the Society for the Promotion of Hellenic Studies, to be held at 22 Albemarle-street, on Monday next at 5 p.m., the following papers will be read: "A Greek Head in the possession of Mr. T. H. Ward," by Miss Eugenie Sellers; and "The Paintings of Panaenus," by Mr. E. A. Gardner.

THE Swedish archaeologist, M. Wide, has applied to the Greek Government for permission to excavate the Temple of Poseidon at Kalauria.

MUSIC.

VERDI'S "FALSTAFF."

VERDI'S new opera has taken the musical world by storm. The career of a great artist is eagerly watched at the outset, but towards the close anxiously, lest there should be any signs of falling off. Wagner, when close on seventy, challenged the verdict of musicians, and with his "Parsifal" came off conqueror. How stands it at the present day with Verdi? It is quite true that "Falstaff" is a wonderful work, but is it equally true that it shows no signs of advancing age? At the present moment the courage of the composer, the respect due to one who, as it were, defies fate, and the instinctive tendency which prompts all of us to avoid anything that reminds us of our mortality, all combine to hide one side of the "Falstaff" picture. There is no lack of fresh, lovely melody, nor of humour, skill, and wonderful orchestral colouring in the work; there is dramatic power which comes of natural gifts, and there are striking effects which come of experience. But if the score be quietly examined, it seems as if the composer at times lacked the strength to carry out fully his excellent intentions. There is a certain sketchiness about some of the music, which scarcely strikes one at the moment of hearing, because the sketching is so admirable. Then, again, the spirited fugue at the close of the work has been greatly and justly praised, but surely it must be confessed that the end is not so strong as the beginning: the wise maxim that the best should come last has not been carried out here. Another matter prevents one scrutinising too closely the music at the time of hearing, especially as it is never music which jars even for a moment with the stage action; and this is the excellence of the libretto by Arrigo Boito. He has taken the best parts, for his purpose, of Shakspeare's "Merry Wives of Windsor," adding, in an appropriate manner, the "honour" speech from "Henry IV.," and, not less appropriately, matter of his own invention—we refer especially to the love scenes between Anne Page and Fenton—and the piece is really so bright and sparkling that one seems to be listening to a comedy with music rather than to a musical comedy. This happens, too, in Wagner's "Meistersinger"; but afterwards when we have no trial scene, no Beckmesser serenade, no street riot, to attract our attention, the music can be studied at leisure, and then one can see the wonderful skill in development shown by the composer. Verdi, like Wagner, can grasp a situation and delineate it with a sure firm hand; but one misses the minute details which, one with the other, give such strength to the German master's music.

In "Falstaff," Verdi has shown extraordinary power in assimilating Wagner, for he has not copied him. If one listen attentively to the music, strains fall upon the ear, now and then, which show that the Italian master is no stranger to the works of his great German contemporary. But the influence of Wagner over Verdi is clear, the influence which now prompts the latter never to turn the stage into a concert-room; and it is just because that influence has been so strongly exerted by one genius over another that its effect can only be felt, not shown. For this very reason one can argue, with some show of reason, that Verdi was not influenced by Wagner.

The first performance of "Falstaff" at Covent Garden on Saturday last was excellent. Signor Pessina was an admirable Falstaff, always dignified and yet amusing. Miss G. Ravogli was excellent as Dame Quickly, though in her first interview with Falstaff she somewhat overdid her part. Signor A. Pini-Corsi, as the jealous Ford, deserves great praise. Signorina O. Olghina (Anne) and Signor W. Beduschi (Fenton) proved attractive lovers; and the ladies, E. Zilla and A. Kitzu, and the gentlemen, MM. Armandi, Pelagalli-Rossetti, and Arimondi were all efficient. Signor Mancinelli conducted with intelligence and enthusiasm. The stage management was good, and the stage pictures effective.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

RECENT CONCERTS.

MISS FANNY DAVIES gave her annual concert at St. James's Hall on Friday afternoon, May 18. The programme was well selected; and the concert-giver was heard to advantage in Brahms's clever Variations (Op. 21, No. 1), in Schumann's "Waldscenen" (Op. 82)—although the "Farewell" in the latter work was not a very warm one—and in Chopin's F sharp minor Polonaise. A special feature of the concert was the admirable rendering of Beethoven's Sonata for pianoforte and 'cello in D (Op. 102, No. 2) by Miss Davies and Signor Piatu. The work, in spite of the dry fugue, is of great interest, and is seldom heard. Perhaps one day these two artists will let us hear Op. 102, No. 1, a work quite as great, if not greater.

Master Arthur Argiewicz, nine years of age, played Max Bruch's violin Concerto in G minor at the Crystal Palace last Saturday afternoon. The boy is wonderfully clever, and plays with taste and feeling. The Concerto, however, was beyond his powers, and in the last movement he showed signs of fatigue. This is, of course, by no means surprising. We hope to notice him again next week, for he gives another concert on Monday.

M. Johannes Wolff commenced a series of "Musical Union" concerts at St. James's Hall on Monday afternoon. The object of this new society is, apparently, to make us better acquainted with modern French chamber music, and the scheme deserves support. A pianoforte Quartet, by M. Widor, was the first piece of the programme. The composer, who himself played the pianoforte part, is the well-known organist of St. Sulpice, Paris. We cannot say that the work attracted us. There is clever writing in it, and in the Finale there are some attractive passages; but the composer does not seem to have anything very particular to say. Later on M. E. Oudin sang, in his best manner, four short songs by M. Widor; and, so far as one may judge from his music performed at this concert, the composer is heard to best advantage in works of small compass. A clever and daintily written pianoforte Trio by Mlle. Chamade was brilliantly performed by the composer and MM. Wolff and Delsart; and Mme. Julia Wyman, a vocalist possessed of a good voice and good style, sang three well-written songs by Mlle. Chammade. M. Saint Saëns will appear at the next concert.

A second concert under the direction of Herr Mottl was given at the Queen's Hall on Tuesday evening, and again there was a large and enthusiastic audience. Many Wagner pieces were performed, the most noticeable, as regards interpretation, being the Siegfried "Funeral March" and the Siegfried "Idyll." Herr Mottl is undeniably a great Wagner conductor; but this time his programme included music by two other masters, Beethoven and Berlioz. The C minor Symphony was well rendered, although in the opening Allegro the reading was slightly affected; the Finale was given with great brilliancy. Berlioz was represented by two excerpts from his "Romeo et Juliette" and by his "Cellini" Overture, all of which were finely interpreted. Herr Mottl might one day give a "Berlioz" concert: the venture would not be a risky one. Mr. D. Bispham sang Sach's Monologue, "Wahn, Wahn," with taste and judgment; the orchestral accompaniments were rendered with great delicacy.

M. Risler gave his second pianoforte recital on Wednesday afternoon. He is an intelligent player, and his technique is remarkably good. His reading of two Beethoven Sonatas was very interesting; but he turned sentiment, at times, into sentimentality, and certain of his loud passages were hard. He gave a cold reading of some Schubert music. A small Chopin Valse was played with delicacy; but the A flat Polonaise was thundered out in a manner disagreeable to sensitive ears, and hurtful to the instrument on which he was performing. M. Risler is an able pianist, but he should avoid exaggeration.

NEW NOVEL AT ALL LIBRARIES.

READY NEXT WEEK.

A CRUEL DILEMMA.

BY

MARY H. TENNYSON,

Author of

"Love Will Find Out the Way,"

"Paid in Full," &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

FREDERICK WARNE & CO.,
BEDFORD STREET, STRAND.

THE "BORDER" WAVERLEY.

READY, JUNE 1st.

THE FAIR MAID of PERTH. 2 vols.

TEN ETCHINGS by and after

R. W. MACBETH, A.R.A.

JOHN PETTIE, R.A.

SIR G. REID, P.R.S.A.

&c. &c.

Introduction and Notes by ANDREW LANG.

LONDON: JOHN C. NIMMO, 14 KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND.

PROFESSOR DRUMMOND'S NEW WORK.

Fourth Thousand, crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d. net.

The Lowell Lectures on

THE ASCENT OF MAN.

By HENRY DRUMMOND, F.R.S.E., Author of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," &c.

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

The JUNE NUMBER of Natural Science

Will contain a PAPER by Dr. A. RUSSEL WALLACE,
On the PALÆARCTIC and NEARCTIC REGIONS.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

For Mutual

Life Assurance.

ESTABLISHED 1835.

PROFITS.—The whole are divided amongst the Assured. Already divided, £1,600,000.

At the division in 1892 there were nearly eight hundred Policies in respect of which not only were the Premiums entirely extinguished, but also Annuities were granted or Cash Bonuses paid, whilst in the case of many Policies the original sums assured are now more than doubled by the Bonus Additions.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

ARTHUR SMITHER, Actuary and Secretary.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other
Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

"Very frank in tone, and modern in application."

The Bookman.

"They show the same wonderful fertility of apt and beautiful illustrations, the same exquisite use of language, and the same direct heart-searching power which we are accustomed to find in all Dr. MacLaren's works."—Christian World Pulpit.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, PUBLISHERS,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.; and all Booksellers.

365 SHAVES

For 6d.

A STICK of VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP
IS SAID TO LAST A YEAR.

VINOLIA SHAVING STICKS, 6d., 1/-, 1/6, 2/-, and 2/6.
VINOLIA SHAVING CAKES, 1/-, 2/-, and 3/-.

OLD SHIRTS

RE-FITTED, Fine Irish Linen, 2s. or very best Irish Linen, returned free, ready to wear, 2s. 6d. Sample Shirt, for Dress and ordinary wear, any size, post free, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Twilled Night Shirts, 2s. 11d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., or 5s. 9d. LINEN COLLARS and CUFFS. Best 4-fold Collars, 4s. 6d. and 6s. 6d. doz.; made exact to pattern, 2s. 9d. half-dozen, post free. Napkins, 2s. 6d. per doz.; Dinner Napkins, 4s. 6d. per dozen; Table

Cloths, 2 yards square, 2s. 9d. each.

24 yards by 3 yards, 5s. 6d.; Kitchen Table Cloths, 10d. each; real Irish Linen Sheet, fully bleached, 2 yards wide, 1s. 11d. per yard; and Linen Diaper, 8d. per yard; Nursery Diaper, 4d. per yard; Surplice Linen, 7d. per yard; Glass Cloths, 3s. 6d. dozen. LINEN HUCKABACK TOWELS, 3s. 6d. per dozen; Damask Towels, 6s. 6d. per dozen; Turkish Bath Towels, 1s. each; Twilled Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 1d. each. IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 3s. 6d. Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 4s. 11d. per dozen. Better qualities equally cheap. Price Lists and Patterns of all kinds of Linen Goods and Hosiery sent to any part of the world, post free. Monograms, Crests, coats of Arms, Initials, &c., woven and embroidered. Samples and Illustrated Price Lists post free to any part of the world.

B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST

Fourth Edition, pp. 300, 5s.

PROTOPLASM: Physical Life and Law.

By Prof. LIONEL BEALE, F.R.S. Facts and Arguments against Mechanical Views of Life as accepted by Huxley, Herbert Spencer, Strauss, Tyndall, and many others.

HARRISON & SONS, 59, Pall Mall.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE GUINEAS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

THE CAMBRIDGE HISTORICAL SERIES.

General Editor—G. W. PROTHERO, M.A.,
Fellow of King's College and University Lecturer in History.
The Volumes of this New Series will be of moderate size and will be adapted to the requirements of University Extension
Students as well as of more advanced readers.

THE REVOLUTIONARY and NAPO-LEONIC ERA, 1789-1815. By J. H. ROSE, M.A., Christ's College. [In the press.]

THE EUROPEANS in INDIA. By H. MORSE STEPHENS, M.A., Balliol College, Oxford.
[In preparation.]

THE FOUNDATION of the GERMAN EMPIRE, 1815-1871. By J. W. HEADLAM, M.A., Fellow of King's College. [In preparation.]
* * * Other Volumes are in preparation.

NEW VOLUME OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY'S CATALOGUE.
CATALOGUE of SCIENTIFIC PAPERS
Compiled by the ROYAL SOCIETY of LONDON.
Vol. IX. New Series for the Years 1874-1883. ABA—OIS.
Royal 4to, cloth, 25s. net; half-morocco, 32s. net.
Vol. X. New Series for the Years 1874-1883. OIS—TET.
Royal 4to, cloth, 25s. net; half-morocco, 32s. net.
[Immediately.]

THE STEAM ENGINE and other
HEAT ENGINES. By J. A. EWING, M.A., F.R.S.,
M.Inst.C.E., Professor of Mechanism and Applied Mechanics in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 15s.

NEW VOLUME OF PROF. JEBB'S "SOPHOCLES."
SOPHOCLES.—ELECTRA. Part VI. of the Plays and Fragments. With Critical Notes, Commentary, and Translation in English Prose. By R. C.
JEBB, Litt.D., M.P., Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

The CAMBRIDGE HOMER—HOMER'S
ILIAD. The Text Edited in accordance with Modern Criticism by ARTHUR PLATT, M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo. [Immediately.]

The CAMBRIDGE HOMER—HOMER'S
ODYSSEY. By the same Editor. Crown 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.; strongly half-bound, 6s.

BEOWULF. Edited, with Textual Footnotes, Index of Proper Names, and Alphabetical Glossary, by A. J. WYATT, M.A. (Lond.), B.A.
(Camb.), sometime Scholar of Christ's College. Crown
8vo, 8s. 6d.

STUDIA SINAITICA.

The following Numbers are nearly ready:—

1. A Catalogue of the Syriac MSS. in the CONVENT of ST. KATHERINE on MOUNT
SINAI. Compiled by AGNES SMITH LEWIS.
Price 10s. 6d. net.
2. An Arabic Version of St. Paul's
EPISTLES to the ROMANS, CORINTHIANS,
GALATIANS, and Part of EPHESIANS. Edited, from a Ninth Century MS. in the Convent of St. Katherine on Mount Sinai, by MARGARET
DUNLOP GIBSON. Price 5s. net.
3. A Catalogue of the Arabic MSS. in
the CONVENT of ST. KATHERINE on MOUNT
SINAI. Compiled by MARGARET DUNLOP
GIBSON. Price 6s. net.
4. A Tract of Plutarch on the Advantage to be derived from one's Enemies. By Dr.
EBERHARD NESTLE. Price 2s. net. [Ready.]

Other Numbers of the Series are in course of preparation.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE PITT PRESS SERIES.

GUIZOT.—DISCOURS sur l'HISTOIRE de la REVOLUTION d'ANGLETERRE. Edited by
H. W. EVE, M.A. 2s. 6d.

ARISTOPHANES.—THE WASPS. By
C. E. GRAVES, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 3s. 6d.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS,
CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER &amp; CO., LTD.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

A COSTLY FREAK: a New Novel. By Maxwell Gray, Author of "The Silence of Dean Maitland." With Frontispiece by Everard Hopkins. Crown 8vo, 6s.
"A deeply interesting story told with great skill.....Book of singular power."—Leeds Mercury.

DAVID GARRICK: a Biography. By Joseph Knight. With Etched Portrait by W. Boucher, from a Painting by Gainsborough (never before Engraved) in the possession of Mrs.
Kay. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

A few Large-Paper Copies are also published, printed on Hand-made paper, 21s. net.

"It is an excellent bit of work, solid and scholarly, and—rarest of qualities in this class of literature—sober.....It has been reserved for Mr. Knight to rationalise the Garrick religion."—Daily Chronicle.
"We must thank Mr. Knight for his conscientious labour, as well as for his selection of the unfamiliar and spirited portrait by Gainsborough, with which he has set off his volume."—Saturday Review.
"One of the best memoirs of one of the greatest actors that ever trod the stage in Shakespearian drama."—Morning Post.

NOW READY.

THE FIRST DIVORCE of HENRY VIII., as TOLD in the STATE PAPERS. By Mrs. HOPE, Author of "The Early Martyrs," "Life of St. Thomas of Canterbury," "The Conversion of the Teutonic Races," &c. Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by FRANCIS AIDAN GASQUET, D.D., O.S.B. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NOW READY.

MANUAL of HYGIENE. By Mrs. White Wallis, Member of the Sanitary Institute. Dedicated, by permission, to Sir DOUGLAS GALTON, K.C.B. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

NOW READY, NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

THE ELECT LADY. By George MacDonald. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

CRITICAL SKETCHES. By A. E. Street. Crown 8vo, 5s.

CONTENTS.—Rousseau's Theory of Education—The Education of Gargantua—The Poetry of the Sea—Weeminster Abbey—William Hazlitt—Dickens and Daudet—Diderot as Art Critic—The Realities of War (Tolstoy and Vereshtchagin)—The Realities of War (M. Zola)—"Originality in Art": a Letter to a Student in Architecture.

"There is plenty of good sense and sound judgment in its two hundred and fifty pages.....Worth perusal."—Speaker.
"Mr. A. E. Street's 'Critical Sketches' is enjoyable reading. The author is a man of keen appreciative powers, and his style is incisive and vivid."—National Observer.

"Mr. Street's book strikes us as the work of a man who loves literature, and has a sound appreciation of its qualities."
Glasgow Herald.

A LIFE of ARCHBISHOP LAUD. By a Romish Recusant.

With Portrait from a rare Engraving prefixed to "The Recantation of the Prelate of Canterbury," 1641. Demy 8vo, 15s.

"A deeply interesting book."—Church Times.

"Painstaking and scholarly."—Standard.

"The author has done his work well.....The book.....shows careful and accurate research, and better still, the power of presenting conclusions in an intelligible form..... interesting and readable."—Pall Mall Gazette.

INTRODUCTION to the STUDY of the NEW TESTAMENT.

Critical, Exegetical, and Theological. By the Rev. S. DAVIDSON, D.D., LL.D. New Edition, thoroughly Revised and Enlarged. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 20s.

"The veteran author has carefully revised his volumes, which form a standard manual of the subject."—Athenaeum.

"Distinctly creditable to English theological scholarship."—Christian World.

"An indispensable book for any student wishing to form a scholarly opinion on the subject."—Dundee Advertiser.

PREBENDARY EYTON'S NEW SERMONS.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS: Sermons Preached at Holy

Trinity, Chelsea. By the Rev. ROBERT EYTON, Rector of Upper Chelsea. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"Full of that well-known preacher's spiritual insight and practical sagacity."—Times.

CONSCIENCE: an Essay towards a New Analysis, Deduction, and Development of Conscience. By the Rev. J. D. ROBERTSON, D.Sc. Vol. I. NEW ANALYSIS of CONSCIENCE.

Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"In this publication the author has at one bound taken his place among the foremost philosophical thinkers of the day.....This most masterly treatise."—Scottish Leader.

"His philosophic and literary ability is of a high order, and the second volume of his essay will be awaited with great interest."—Leeds Mercury.

IMMEDIATELY.

HISTORY of S. FRANCIS of ASSISI. By the Abbé Léon le

MONNIER. Translated by a FRANCISCAN TERTIARY. Demy 8vo.

MILITARY HANDBOOKS. NOW READY.

MILITARY LAW: its Procedure and Practice. By Lieut.-Col.

S. C. PRATT. Eighth Edition, Revised throughout. Small crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

NEW VOLUME OF TRUBNER'S ORIENTAL SERIES.

LAYS of ANCIENT INDIA. Selections from Indian Poetry,

Rendered into English Verse. By ROMESH CHUNDER DUTT, C.I.E. 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"Mr. Dutt's graceful translations prove their author to possess no small skill in metrical English composition."—Times.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

HISTORY of CIVILISATION in ANCIENT INDIA based on

SANSKRIT LITERATURE. B.C. 2000 to A.D. 1000. With Maps. By ROMESH CHUNDER DUTT, C.I.E.
Revised Edition. 2 vols., 21s.

GROWING CHILDREN and AWKWARD WALKING. By

THOMAS WILLIAM NUNN, F.R.C.S., Consulting Surgeon to the Middlesex Hospital. Crown 8vo, 2s.

"A useful little book on an important subject."—Saturday Review.

"Valuable suggestions about gymnastics, food, and clothing."—British Weekly.

PATERNOSTER HOUSE, CHARING CROSS ROAD.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1152.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JUNE 2, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

NEW VOLUME OF THE BOOK-LOVER'S LIBRARY.

In foolscap 8vo, tastefully printed and bound in olive cloth, price 4s. 6d.; Hand-made Paper, Roxburghe binding, 7s. 6d. net; Large Paper, Roxburghe binding, 21s.

WALTON and some EARLIER WRITERS on FISH and FISHING. By R. B. MARSTON (Editor of "The Fishing Gazette").

NEW VOLUME OF THE "ELIZABETHAN LIBRARY."

Prices: Cloth, 3s. 6d.; Roxburghe, with gilt top, 5s. net; Large-Paper copies, 15s. net.

GREEN PASTURES: being Choice Extracts from the Works of ROBERT GREENE, M.A., made by Dr. A. B. GROSART.

Now ready, in handsome medium 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth gilt, price 21s.

THE BOOK HUNTER in PARIS. Being Studies

among the Bookstalls of the Quays. By OCTAVE UZANNE. With an Introduction by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL, Author of "Obiter Dicta," and 144 Characteristic Illustrations interspersed in the text.

"Everyone knows M. Uzanne's pleasant, garrulous style, how he takes his readers into his confidence, how he spins phrases lovingly, and always keeps you in good spirits. He was just the man to write such a book."—Bookman.

"A very interesting book. Mr. Birrell's introduction is a pleasant and useful explanation of the volume, which is presented in a form fully deserving of its literary merits."—Times.

NEW VOLUME OF THE CAMDEN LIBRARY.

Cloth, 6s. per vol.; Roxburghe, with gilt top, 7s. 6d. net; Large-Paper copies, Roxburghe, with gilt top, 21s. net.

WEST IRISH FOLK TALES and ROMANCES. With Specimens of the Gaelic Originals in 3 Dialects Phonetically Spelt. Collected and Translated by WILLIAM LARMINIE.

"We have nothing but praise to bestow on the book."—Athenaeum.

"It is not alone the comparative mythologist, but also the poet and the creator of imaginative fiction, who profit by this industrious compilation."—Literary World.

"A book of extreme value to the lovers of folk-lore."—Antiquary.

"Mr. Larminie deserves and shall get the very best thanks we can convey to him, for all these tales are packed with incident and interest, and as mere stories even they are full of entertainment."—National Observer.

"This novel and delightful volume. A valuable addition to the existing folk-lore of the country."—Public Opinion.

LONDON: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW.

SEELEY & CO.'S LIST.

Price HALF A CROWN Monthly.

THE PORTFOLIO.

Edited by P. G. HAMERTON.

The Subject for JUNE is:

"FREDERICK WALKER."

By CLAUDE PHILLIPS.

With Four Plates and many minor Illustrations.

JANUARY No.—"THE ETCHINGS of REMBRANDT." By P. G. Hamerton.

"It is difficult to say enough in praise of this excellent piece of work."—Spectator.

FEBRUARY No.—"MALTA, and the KNIGHTS HOSPITALIERS." By Rev. W. K. R. BEDFORD.

"Most choice and admirable."—Army and Navy Gazette.

MARCH No.—"JOSIAH WEDGWOOD." By Professor Church.

"Numerous fine drawings illustrate this admirable monograph."—Leeds Mercury.

APRIL No.—"JULES BASTIAN-LEPAGE." By Julia Cartwright (Mrs. Henry Ady).

"The clever authoress has done her work excellently well."—Black and White.

MAY No.—"DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI, Painter and Poet." By F. G. Stephens.

"Mr. Stephens is master of his subject."—Daily News.

NOW READY.

SIERRA LEONE. After a Hundred Years. By the Lord Bishop of Sierra Leone. With 16 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEW EDITIONS.

Cloth 3s. 6d.

ROUND MY HOUSE: Notes on Rural Life in France in Peace and War. By P. G. HAMERTON. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo.

Cloth, 2s. 6d.

A BRIEF ACCOUNT of WESTMINSTER ABBEY. By W. J. Loftie. New and Abridged Edition. With 30 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo.

SEELEY & CO., LTD., ESSEX STREET, STRAND.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

CLIMBING AND EXPLORATION IN THE KARAKORAM-HIMALAYAS.

By WILLIAM MARTIN CONWAY, M.A., F.S.A., F.R.G.S.

With 300 Illustrations by A. D. McCormick, and a Map.

In 1 vol., super-royal 8vo, 738 pp., cloth, gilt top, 31s. 6d. net.

"A splendid record of a daring and adventurous scientific expedition."—Times.

"The book is not merely the narrative of the best-organised and most successful mountaineering expedition as yet made, it is a most valuable and minute account, based on first-hand evidence of a most fascinating region of the heaven-soaring Himalayas."—W. A. B. COOLIDGE in the Pall Mall Gazette.

"The lover of art for art's sake will find in the numerous illustrations some of the most beautiful transcripts from nature that have ever adorned a book of travels."—Standard (Leader).

"It will long hold a chief place in the affections of those whose hearts are in the mountains."—EDWARD WHYMFER in the Daily Chronicle.

"To Mr. Conway we have an observer of men—a whole heaven removed from the ordinary globe-trotter."—Athenaeum.

LIVES OF TWELVE BAD MEN:

Original Studies of Eminent Scoundrels. By VARIOUS HANDS. Edited by THOMAS SECCOMBE. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s. [Shortly.]

CONTENTS.

James Hepburn—Sir Edward Kelly—Matthew Hopkins—George Jeffreys—Titus Oates—Simon Fraser—Colonel F. Charteris—Jonathan Wild—James MacLaine—George Robert Fitzgerald—Thomas Griffiths Wainwright—Edward Kelly—Appendix—Index.

SOUTH AFRICA. By George M. THEAL. Maps and Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE RAIDERS. By S. R. Crockett, Author of "The Stickit Minister." Fourth Edition. Cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"Of capital merit."—Saturday Review.

"A strikingly realistic romance."—Morning Post.

"Indubitably a fine work."—St. James's Gazette.

CATHARINE FURZE: a Novel. By MARK RUTHERFORD. Third Edition. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.

"Mark Rutherford is a writer of extraordinary force."—Athenaeum.

"Both in treatment and in style 'Catharine Furze' recalls Miss Austen's novels. A close comparison would not result unfavourably to Mark Rutherford."—Times.

THE DRAMA OF THE APOCALYPSE.

By EN DANSK. Demy 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Treated with great ability and literary attractiveness."—Dundee Advertiser.

SHYLOCK, AND OTHERS. Eight

Studies. By G. H. RADFORD. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE FIRST AUTONYM.

THE UPPER BIRTH. By F. Marion CRAWFORD. (Volume I. of "The Autonym Library.") Paper 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

"If the 'Autonym Library' keeps up to the pitch of excellence attained by this first volume its success is assured."—Speaker.

THE NEW PSEUDONYM.

YOUNG SAM and SABINA. By TOM COBBLEIGH, Author of "Gentleman Upcott's Daughter," &c. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

LONDON

T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS		PAGE
CONWAY'S CLIMBING IN THE HIMALAYAS, by REGINALD HUGHES		449
DIPLOMATIC REMINISCENCES OF LORD AUGUSTUS LOFTUS, by ARTHUR ARNOLD		450
LANG'S NEW VOLUME OF POEMS, by Mrs. TOMSON		451
PROF. EARLE'S PSALTER OF THE GREAT BIBLE, by ROBERT STREELE		452
LUCID SHORTHAND, by W. E. A. AXON		453
NEW NOVELS, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY		453
SOME VOLUMES OF BIOGRAPHY		454
NOTES AND NEWS		455
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS		456
OBITUARY: THE HON. RODEN NOEL; PROF. LEWIS FELMER; by A. J. I.		456
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS		457
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS		457
CORRESPONDENCE—
Some New Greek Papyri, by B. P. Grenfell; Some English Etymologies, by Prof. Napier; Some Old-English Place-Names, by H. Bradley; Chaucer's Town of Lepe, by Prof. Skeat		457
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK		458
SOME BOOKS ON CHEMISTRY		458
THE GREEK HYMNS FROM DELPHI		459
OBITUARY: BRIAN BURGESS, by J. S. C.		459
SCIENCE NOTES		460
PHILOLOGY NOTES		460
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES		460
THE ROYAL ACADEMY, III, by CLAUDE PHILLIPS		460
THE EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND		461
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY		462
"MONEY" AT THE GARRICK		462
STAGE NOTES		463
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK		463
MUSIC NOTES		463

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOKES, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—ASSYRIAN SCULPTURES.—Statuettes of Sennacherib, Assurbanipal, and his Queen. Also reduced Facsimiles of the unique and beautiful "Garden Scene," Winged Human-headed Lion and Bull, &c. Modelled from the famous Nineveh Sculptures, and made in Porcelain (parian). "Interesting and faithful reproductions."—Athenaeum, Oct. 7, 1893. Descriptive Prospectus on application to ALFRED JARVIS (Sole Publisher), 43, Willes Road, London, N.W.

POPULAR WRITERS of FICTION wishing to secure the most extensive COPYRIGHTED PUBLICATION obtainable in United States, Canada, and elsewhere, should communicate with P. F. COLLIER, 521, West Thirteenth Street, New York City.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & Co., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List 1—115, Fleet Street, London.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

PREPARING.

CATALOGUE of an interesting collection of Antiquarian, Architectural, Classical, and Miscellaneous BOOKS published in the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries from the Radcliffe Library, Oxford, ON SALE by B. H. BLACKWELL, 50 and 51, Broad Street, Oxford.—Gratis.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, SEEL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12 Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., are prepared to undertake the Printing and Publishing of first-class Newspapers, Magazines, Books, Catalogues, Pamphlets, Prospectuses, Articles of Association, Minutes of Evidence, &c., in the best style. Their offices are fitted with the latest improvements in Rotary and other Machinery, the most modern English and Foreign Type, and they employ none but first-class workmen. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 2789. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

THE UNIVERSITY of ADELAIDE.

HUGHES PROFESSORSHIP OF ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE AND MENTAL AND MORAL PHILOSOPHY.
Applications for the above PROFESSORSHIP (vacant in consequence of the transfer of Professor Boulger to the Chair of Classics) will be received at the office of the Agent-General for South Australia, 15, Victoria Street, Westminster, not later than the 1st of July next. Salary, £600 a year. Duties commence on the 1st of March, 1895. Particulars of tenure and duties may be obtained at the Agent-General's Office.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, London.—FOUNDATION SCHOLARSHIPS. An EXAMINATION for filling up about 20 VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 4th SEPTEMBER NEXT.—For information, apply to the Bursar, St. Paul's School, West Kensington, W.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL for BOYS.—Detached House; stands on top of Cliff; South Aspect; Private Playfield; Resident Masters.—Mrs. JAMES MACDONELL, Gorse Cliff, Boscombe Chine, Bournemouth.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. DEVOA, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon-street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholastic Professions, Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers, may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

AUTHORS' CLUB.—Managing Committee: Mr. Oswald Crawford, C.M.G. (Chairman), The Right Hon. Lord Blackwell, Mr. Walter Besant, Mr. H. R. Tedder.—Particulars as to Qualification for MEMBERSHIP may be obtained, by Gentlemen desirous of joining the Club, from Mr. G. H. THAIN, Secretary, at the Club House, No. 3, Whitehall Court, S.W.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY
74, New Oxford Street, London,

Is remarkable for its Display of Copies of Celebrated Works of

THE GREAT MASTERS.

Reproductions of the most important Paintings in the following Collections:—

NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON,	LOUVRE, PARIS,
BUCKINGHAM PALACE,	LUXEMBOURG, PARIS,
WINDSOR CASTLE,	ROYAL GALLERY, DRESDEN,
UFFIZI, FLORENCE,	HERMITAGE, ST. PETERSBURG,
FITZ, FLORENCE,
ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS,	PRADO, MADRID,
FLORENCE,	VATICAN, ROME,
AMSTERDAM,	HAARLEM,
THE HAGUE,	FRANKFORT,

AND

THE PARIS SALONS.

A LARGE COLLECTION of EXAMPLES of MODERN FRENCH and ENGLISH ART in SELECTED FRAMES suitable for HALL, LIBRARY, DRAWING-ROOM, BOUDOIR, &c.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

AUTOTYPE: a DECORATIVE and EDUCATIONAL ART.
NEW PAMPHLET—FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost. Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

MONDAY, JUNE 11th.

WORKS on SCIENTIFIC, MEDICAL, NATURAL HISTORY, and other Subjects.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will SELL by
AUCTION at his GREAT ROOMS, 38, KINO STREET, COVENT GARDEN, on MONDAY, JUNE 11th, at half-past 12 precisely, a Valuable Collection of WORKS on SCIENTIFIC, MEDICAL, NATURAL HISTORY, and other Subjects, from Private Libraries; also some rare old THEOLOGICAL WORKS, &c.
On view the Saturday prior, 12 till 4, and morning of Sale, and Catalogues had.

PALL MALL.—Two consignments of Choice Old JAPANESE ART OBJECTS, from Native Collectors at Tokio and Kioto Japan.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce for SALE by AUCTION, at the GALLERY, 54, PALL MALL, on TUESDAY NEXT, the 5th JUNE, at 1 o'clock precisely, JAPANESE CURIOS, consisting of bronzes, pottery, and porcelain, netsakis, lacquer, swrde, furniture, &c.
May be viewed To-morrow (Saturday) and Monday next, when Catalogues may be had.—54, Pall Mall.

FRENCH GALLERY, 120, Pall Mall.—The 41st ANNUAL SPRING EXHIBITION of PICTURES by British and Foreign Artists, including "The Meeting of the Waters," by J. M. W. TURNER, R.A., and a Collection of Pictures and Studies from Nature by Professor C. HEYNER, is NOW OPEN. Admission, including Catalogue, 1s.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.
For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.
LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.
Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand, at greatly Reduced Prices.
LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

ORIENTAL WORKS.

MESSRS. LUZAC & CO. have a large Stock of ORIENTAL WORKS, and can supply them, if not in stock, quickly and at moderate prices.

LUZAC & CO.'S ORIENTAL LIST.

Containing Notes and News on, and a Biographical List of, all new Publications on Africa and the East. Published Monthly. Annual Subscription (post free), 3s.

*The ACADEMY, Feb. 4, 1893, writes: "Messrs. Luzac & Co.'s Oriental List.....deserves the support of Oriental students.....It gives, under the heading of 'Notes and News,' details about important Oriental works, which are both more full and more careful than anything of the sort to be found elsewhere."

Vol. V, No. V. (May, 1890), just out. A few copies of Vols. I. to IV. are still to be had (half-bound, with full Authors' Index, &c.) at 5s. net each volume.

Lists and Catalogues of Oriental Works to be had on application.
LUZAC & CO., Publishers to the India Office, 46, Great Russell Street (opposite the British Museum), London, W.C.

EPPS'S COCOAINE.
COCOA-NIB EXTRACT.
(TEA-LIKE.)

A thin beverage of full flavour, now with many beneficially taking the place of tea. Its active principle being a gentle nerve stimulant, supplies the needed energy without unduly exciting the system.—Sold in Packets and Tins, by Grocers, labelled "JAMES EPPS & Co., Ltd., Homeopathic Chemists, London."

365 SHAVES
For 6d.

A STICK of VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP
IS SAID TO LAST A YEAR.

VINOLIA SHAVING STICKS, 6d., 1/-, 1/8, 2/4, and 2/6.
VINOLIA SHAVING CAKES, 1/-, 2/-, and 8/-.

STANFORD'S TOURIST LIST.

STANFORD'S 2s. SERIES OF TOURIST GUIDES.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, with Maps, &amp;c.

Bedfordshire. Kent.
Berkshire. London (Round).
Cambridgeshire. Norfolk.
Channel Islands. Somersetshire.
Cornwall. Suffolk.
Derbyshire. Surrey.
Devon, North. Sussex.
Devon, South. Warwickshire.
Dorsetshire. Wiltshire.
English Lakes. Worcestershire.
Gloucestershire. Wye (The).
Hampshire. Yorkshire (E. and N).
Hertfordshire. Yorkshire (West).

JENKINSON'S
PRACTICAL GUIDES.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, with Maps, &amp;c.

THE ENGLISH LAKES. Ninth Edition.
With 8 Maps. 6s.
THE ISLE of WIGHT. Fifth Edition.
With 2 Maps. 2s. 6d.
NORTH WALES. Fourth Edition.
With 2 Maps. 6s. 6d.
NORTH WALES. Smaller Guide.
Third Edition. With 3 Maps. 3s. 6d.
THE ISLE of MAN. Third Edition.
With Map. 5s.
CARLISLE GILSLAND, THE ROMAN
WALL, &c. With Map. 5s.

ENGLISH CATHEDRALS. By the Rev.
W. J. LOFTIE, B.A. With 29 Plans. Limp cloth, 5s.
NORWAY. Willson's Handy Guide.
Third Edition, with Corrections for 1894. 7 Maps. Limp cloth, 5s.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD,
26 AND 27, COCKSPUR STREET, CHARING CROSS, S.W.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 944.—JUNE, 1894.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—WHO WAS LOST AND IS FOUND, chaps. i.-iv. —RECENT GERMAN FICTION. —MOOSELAND AND MUSKOS, by Lieut.-Col. Andrew Haggard, D.S.O. —FALSE FIRE, by James Buckland. —MAYFAIR AND THE MUSES, by Arnold Haultain. —HANDEL: MAN AND MUSICIAN, by Frederick J. Crowest. —LORD WOLSELEY'S MARLBOROUGH, by General Sir Archibald Alison, Bart., G.C.B. —IN THE RIVER PEI-HO, by William Laird Clowes. —IMPERIAL INTERESTS IN EAST AFRICA. —A PLATFORM PARLIAMENT.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD &amp; SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

JUNE.

THE FUTURE OF PARTIES. By ROBERT WALLACE, M.P.
THE ROYAL ACADEMY. By D. S. MACCOLL.
THE TWO SALONS. By Mrs. PENNELL.
THE NEW FACTORY BILL. By Miss MARCH-PRILLIPPS.
TYPE-SHOOTING without DOGS. By G. A. SCOTT.
THE BUDGET AND LOCAL TAXATION. By W. M. J. WILLIAMS.
THE MECHANISM OF THOUGHT. By ALFRED BINK.
PROFESSOR ROBERTSON SMITH. By J. O. FRAZER.
THE DISAFFECTION IN BEHAR. By DONALD N. REID.
THE WORSHIP OF POTTERY. By W. ROBERTS.
MUSICAL CRITICISM IN ENGLAND. By Dr. WILLIAMS STANFORD.
THE PROPOSED CHANNEL BRIDGE. By H.S.H. THE PRINCE of Monaco.
SILVER and the TARIFF at WASHINGTON.

CHAPMAN &amp; HALL, Ltd.

Fifth Edition, Revised and Illustrated, price 4s.

THE FROG: an Introduction to Anatomy,
Histology and Embryology. By A. MILNES MARSHALL, M.D.,
D.Sc., F.R.S., late Professor of Zoology in the Owens College Victoria University.

Manchester: J. E. COANISH, 16, St. Ann's Square.
London: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, Waterloo Place.

Now ready, in Primrose cloth, price One Shilling.

THE BOOK OF THE DAY ON THE MAN OF THE HOUR.

LORD ROSEBERY:

His Words and His Work. By ARTHUR WALLACE.
With a Portrait by F. C. GOULD. Chap. I. The Man; II. The Radical; III. The Municipalist; IV. The Home Ruler; V. The Imperial Federationist; VI. The Foreign Minister and Premier. At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.

NEWBY J. DRAKE, Salisbury House, Salisbury Square, E.C.

H. GREVEL & CO.'S
NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Just published and at all the Libraries.

LETTERS OF FRANZ LISZT.

Edited and Collected by LA MARA.

Translated by CONSTANCE BACHIE.

Vol. I. Years of Travel as Virtuoso. With a Portrait.
Vol. II. From Rome to the East. With a Frontispiece.

2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price £1 8s.

"Between six and seven hundred letters, every one of which is worth reading, are reproduced in this collection, and are lavishly supplemented by chronological and explanatory notes, which render the book extremely valuable to musicians and men of letters, as a work of reference. Its technical production, moreover, is in every respect exemplary."—Daily Telegraph.

WAGNER AND HIS WORKS:

The Story of his Life, with Critical Comments.

By HENRY T. FINCK.

With 2 Portraits. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, £1 1s.

"Mr. Finck's work is, perhaps, the most exhaustive and appreciative account of the great composer that has appeared in the English language."—Time.

CELEBRATED PIANISTS OF THE

PAST AND PRESENT TIME.

J. S. BACH—WALTER BACH—BEETHOVEN—STERNDALE
BENNETT—BRAHMS—BULOW—CHOPIN—DANNREUTHER—
ESSIPPE—ABABELLA—GODDARD—HAILE—HILLER—
HUMMEL—LISZT—MENDELSSOHN—SCHUBERT—MENTER—
MOSSCHELES—MOZART—PACHMANN—PADEREWSKI—
PAUER—RUBINSTEIN—SAINT-SAËNS—CLARA SCHUMANN—STAVENHAGEN—THALBERG—AGNES ZIMMERMANN—and ninety others.

A Collection of 116 Biographies, with Portraits.

By A. ERLICH.

1 vol., crown 8vo, in an ornamental damask silk cloth binding, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

IN THE PRESS.

NAPOLEON at HOME. By

FREDERIC MASSON. With 12 Full-Page Illustrations by C. MYRBACH. 2 vols., demy 8vo.

Introduction—Etiquette—The Emperor's Apartments—The Toilet—
The Morning Levée—The Dejeuner—The Study—Transacting Business—
The Dinner—Evening—Sunday—Appendix—The Emperor's Wardrobe.

BOOKS ON EX-LIBRIS.

RARE OLD BOOK-PLATES (Ex-Libris)

of the FIFTEENTH and SIXTEENTH CENTURIES: containing 100 Plates by Albert Dürer, H. Burgmair, H. S. Beham, Virgil Solis, Just Aman, &c. Edited by F. WARNECKE. Five Parts, 4to, at 5s. each, net. (Limited Edition.)

HERALDIC BOOK-PLATES: Fifty Ex-

Libris. Invented and Drawn by Professor Ad. M. Hildebrandt, 4to, 2 vols., at 4s. each, net. (Limited Edition.)

A SCORE of BOOK-PLATES. Designed

and Drawn by G. Otto. With a Preface by FREDERICK WARNECKE. 4to, 4s. net. (Limited Edition.)

THE BOOK-PLATES of ULRICK, Duke

of MECKLENBURGH. Woodcuts by Lucas Cranach and other Artists. Collected by CHARLES TESKE. Folio, 3s. net. (Limited Edition.)

H. GREVEL &amp; CO., COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

No. 299, for JUNE.

OCCASIONAL NOTES:—Secondary Education Commission; New Scheme of St. Paul's School; Miss Willard on Mixed Education; Christ's Hospital; A French Master's Challenge.

A TALK with PROFESSOR SULLY on the PSYCHOLOGICAL METHOD. C. S. BRENNER.

OLD and NEW SYSTEMS.

LIP-READING, or "HEARING by SIGHT." E. F. BOULTREE.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION: Its Exits and Entrances. F. J. ROWBOTHAM.

THE ELEMENTARY TEACHING PROFESSION as a CAREER for HIGH-SCHOOL GIRLS. Mrs. BRYANT, D.Sc.

CORRESPONDENCE:—Miss Kathleen Knox on the Teaching of Literature in Schools; Assistant Masters in Secondary Schools; Oxford Local Examinations; The Aldis Scandal.

Price 6d., per post, 7d.

Office: 86, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

BIOGRAPHY OF
SIR ISAAC PITMAN.

By T. A. REED.

Illustrated with woodcuts, and facsimile pages, in handsome cloth binding, 191 pages, on specially made thick paper, crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d. Of all Booksellers.

Trade supplied by SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON,
KENT & CO., Ltd.

Ready on 4th June.

Fcap. 8vo. Price ONE SHILLING.

LIFE and WORK of

SIR ISAAC PITMAN

Illustrated.

By ALFRED BAKER, M.J.I.

ISAAC PITMAN &amp; SONS, ADELPHI CORNER, E.C.

DAVID NUTT,
270-271, Strand, London.

FOLK-LORE.

Vol. V., No. 2. JUNE, 1894.

Demy 8vo, 5s. net.

CONTENTS.

SAGA-GROWTH. By F. YORK POWELL, M.A., F.S.A.

ST. NICOLAS and ARTEMIS. By Prof. EUGENE ANICHKOF.

THE ROMAN van WALEWEIN. By Prof. W. P. KER.

THE PROBLEM of DIFFUSION: Rejoinders. By JOSEPH JACOBS, B.A., and A. NUTT.

REVIEWS.—G. Pitré, "Bibliografia delle Tradizioni popolari d'Italia." JOSEPH JACOBS.—M. Lehmann-Fühcs, "Islandische Volkssagen." E. SIDNEY HARTLAND, F.S.A.—"The Gaelic Journal." LELAND L. DUNCAN, F.S.A.—W. F. Wakeman, "Survey of the Antiquarian Remains on the Island of Inismurray."—"Some Recent Anthropological Essays." Prof. A. C. HADDON.

CORRESPONDENCE.—Sacrifices to the Dead. W. R. PATON.

MISCELLANEA.—An East Anglian Harvest Custom. W. R. GERISH.—Popular Explanation of Tree-Decay. G. H. SKIPWITH.

FOLK-LORE BIBLIOGRAPHY.

THE HONOURABLE SOCIETY OF CYMMRODORION.

President—The Most Hon. the MARQUESS of BUTE, K.T.

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

THE TRANSACTIONS of the SOCIETY:

Session 1892-93. Containing Contributions by Prof. RHYS, LL.D.; ERNEST RHYS; W. LEWIS-JONES, M.A.; W. H. PREECE, F.R.S.; ISAAC FOULKE (Llyfrbyr), &c. Price 7s. 6d. net.

THE COURT ROLLS of the LORDSHIP

of RUTHIN (1291-95). Edited, with Notes, Translation, and Prefaces, by R. ARTHUR ROBERTS, of H.M. Public Record Office. With Facsimile Reproduction of Original Membrane. Price 21s. net.

Issued free to Annual Subscribers of One Guinea, and sold to Non-Subscribers at the prices affixed, by the Society's Publisher, Mr. DAVID NUTT, 270, Strand. Applications for Membership should be sent to the Secretary, E. VINCENT EVANS, 27, Chancery Lane, London.

JUST OUT. A most charming Gift-Book for the Nursery, the Schoolroom, and the Lover of Black and White Art.

CHILDREN'S SINGING GAMES

with the Tunes to which they are sung. Collected and Edited by ALICE BERTHA GOWNS. Pictured in Black and White by WINIFRED SMITH. 4to, 34 designed pages and 36 printed pages set within decorated borders, in specially designed cloth cover, 3s. 6d.

*.* In addition to the ordinary issue, there are the following special large-paper issues for collectors:—

(a) One Hundred Copies printed on Kelmscott paper by permission of Mr. William Morris. 21s. net.

(b) Eighty Copies on Japanese vellum. 28s. net.
Immediate application for them is necessary.

LATEST PUBLICATIONS at BOOKSELLERS AND LIBRARIES.

BIOLOGICAL LECTURES and

ADDRESSES. By the late ARTHUR MILNER MARSHALL, Professor of Zoology in Owens College. Edited by C. F. MARSHALL, M.D. Crown 8vo, upwards of 400 pages, cloth, uncut, 6s.

OLD CELTIC ROMANCES.

Translated from the Gaelic by P. W. JOYCE, LL.D. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo, xx-414 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d.

*.* Both of these Works are published in the United States by Messrs. MACMILLAN & Co., New York.

PARZIVAL. By Wolfram von

ESCHENBACH. A Knightly Epic of the Twelfth Century. Translated for the first time into English by JESSIE L. WESTON. Vol. I. Books I.-IX. With Introduction, Notes, and Appendix upon the Angevin Element in the Poem. Crown 8vo, 353 pp., cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

Vol. II., completing the Work, will appear later in the year.

*.* It is upon Wolfram's poem, now translated for the first time into English, that Wagner based his music drama of "Parsifal." It represents the highest spiritual and artistic level attained by the romance writers who told of the Quest of the Holy Grail, and is, perhaps, the most interesting monument of purely mediæval literature.

LONDON: DAVID NUTT, 270, STRAND.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Price One Shilling.

NOTICE.—THE TEMPLE BAR
MAGAZINE for JUNE contains, among other articles of interest:—A BEGINNER (Conclusion)—A FRENCH AMBASSADOR at the COURT of CATHERINE II.—THE DECAY of DISCIPLINE.—A SHEAF of LETTERS.—IMPRESSIONS of RAJPUTANA.—AN INTERLOPER. Chaps. 17-20; &c.

NOW READY.

THE SECOND EDITION
OF
THE LIFE OF
THE DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH
To the Accession of Queen Anne.
By FIELD-MARSHAL VISCOUNT WOLSELEY
2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits and Plans, 32s.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

NOW READY.

THE SECOND EDITION
OF
A BEGINNER.
By RHODA BROUGHTON,
Author of "Nancy," "Cometh Up as a Flower," &c.
In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"As bright, vivacious, and full of gas as all its predecessors from the same highly-skilled pen. It is not without a certain pathos, too."—Daily Chronicle.

"We expect to be amused by Miss Broughton, but we do not think that for a long time past we have been so much exhilarated by any book of hers as by 'A Beginner.'"—Saturday Review.

A NEW NOVEL AT ALL LIBRARIES.

IF MEN WERE WISE.
By E. L. SHAW.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Eminently readable."—Daily News.

"A distinctly clever and promising piece of work."—Daily Telegraph.

A NEW NOVEL, NOW READY.

VICTIMS OF FASHION.
By A. M. GRANGE.
In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

The POWER of the PAST.
By ESME STUART,
Author of "Joan Vellacott," &c.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.
"A strong and very good novel."—Scotsman.

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "MASTERS OF THE WORLD."

THOROUGH.

By MARY A. M. MARKS,
Author of "Dr. Willoughby Smith," &c.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Throughout there runs a most fascinating thread of romance, in which the tender passion, dry humour, and touching pathos play leading parts. The characters are drawn most artistically, and awaken the keenest interest as to their ultimate fates."—Freeman's Journal.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

By G. A. SALA.

READY SHORTLY, 2 vols., 21s.

Things I have Seen and People I have Known.

By Sir WEMYSS REID.

The Life, Letters, and Friendships of Richard Monckton Milnes
FIRST LORD HOUGHTON.

Third Edition.

2 vols., with 2 Portraits, 32s.

"For wealth of anecdote, pleasant literary and political gossip, for a moving and brilliant panorama of the best society of our time, we know of no recent biography that can be named in rivalry with it."—Observer.

By JOHN PENDLETON.

JUST PUBLISHED, 2 vols., price 24s.

Our Railways:
Their Origin, Development, Incidents, and Romance.

With nearly 300 Illustrations.

"Mr. Pendleton's work bids fair to be the standard railway history."—BOOKMAN.

By LESLIE KEITH.

'Lisbeth.

Popular Edition, Just Published.

Price 6s.

"Unqualified praise may be cordially and unhesitatingly accorded to 'Lisbeth,' in which are readily discoverable all the inventive, constructive, and literary elements that, when felicitously combined, furnish the material of which a really first-class novel may be fashioned by a master hand."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Vol. VII., now ready, price 9s., of the NEW and REVISED EDITION of

Cassell's History of England

With New and Original Illustrations.

The Text thoroughly Revised throughout.

Vol. VII. contains from The Illness of the Prince of Wales to the British Occupation of Egypt.

"The most interesting, instructive, and entertaining history of our country which has yet seen the light is 'Cassell's History of England.'"—STANDARD.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED,
LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

REMINISCENCES OF AN INDIAN POLICE OFFICIAL

By T. C. ARTHUR.

Fully Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

CONTENTS:—Anonymous Letters—The Great Military Pension Frauds—Undiscovered Murder—Unpunished Murder and Kidnapping—Thuggee: the Massacres—Child Murder for Ornaments—Murder from Jealousy—Murder from Infidelity—Forgery and Perjury—Dacoity—Wrecking—Housebreaking—Riots—Forest robberies—The Predatory Tribes—Crimes during the Famines—Disarming—Agrarian Crime—Loafers—Receivers of Stolen Goods and Coiners, &c.

READY ON MONDAY.

TRAVELS AMONGST AMERICAN INDIANS

Their Ancient Earthworks and Temples.

By Vice-Admiral LINDESAY BRINE,
Member of Council of the Royal Geographical and Hakluyt Societies.

With 2 Maps, 8 Plans, 23 Full-page, and 12 Text Cuts.
1 vol., demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

OUR ENGLISH COUSINS. By
RICHARD HARDING DAVIS. Fully Illustrated.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

FEDERAL BRITAIN; or, Unity and
Federation of the Empire. By F. P. DE LABILLIERE, Fellow of the Royal Colonial Institute, and Author of
"The Early History of the Colony of Victoria." With
Chapter on "Imperial Defence," by Sir GEO. S.
CLARKE, R.E., K.C.M.G. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
Professor Sir J. R. SEELEY says: "Incomparably the greatest question which we can discuss."

DANTE G. ROSSETTI and the
PRE-RAPHAELITE MOVEMENT. By ESTHER
WOOD. With 8 Photogravure Reproductions of Rossetti's Paintings. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

"Regarded as an appreciation of the wider significance of the pre-Raphaelite movement, and a critical account of Rossetti's art and poetry, her book is a fresh and luminous contribution to the literature of the subject. The photogravures of Rossetti's pictures in themselves make the book one to be coveted by all who are interested in art."—Times.

AMONG the MOORS. Sketches of Oriental Life. By G. MONTBARD, Author of "In
Egypt," &c. Superbly Illustrated. Royal 8vo, cloth, 16s.
LARGE-PAPER EDITION, strictly limited to 100 copies, each numbered and signed by the Author, printed on Japanese vellum, THREE GUINEAS each, net.

"A series of infinitely more vivid and brilliant pictures of Morocco than are to be found in sober and solid works on that dilapidated and crumbling bulwark of Islam."—Scotsman.

PERSEPHONE, and other Poems. By
K. MCCOSH CLARK, Author of "A Southern Cross
Fairy Tale." Dedicated by permission to H.R.H. the Duchess of York. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.
"A charming volume, outwardly and inwardly."—Sketch.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SARAH: a Survival. By Sydney
CHRISTIAN, Author of "Lydia." 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.

"It is a surprise and a refreshment in these days of morbid and melancholy heroines to meet with one so well content with life of so cheerful a countenance as is the young lady who gives her name to Sydney Christian's novel, 'Sarah.'.....The charm of freshness is on the book."—Daily News.

A BAIREUTH PILGRIMAGE. By
EDITH E. CUTHELL. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.

FIRE ISLAND. By George Manville
FENN, Author of "The Black Bar," &c. Numerous
Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The EMIGRANT SHIP. By W. Clark
RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," &c.
New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

JUNE NUMBER.

CONTENTS.

MAXIMILIAN and MEXICO. By JOHN HEARG, Jun. Illustrated by J. Marchetti and Gilbert Gaul.

THE LIGHTHOUSE. Painted by STANHOPE A. FORBES. By PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON. With Full-page Illustration (Frontispiece) and Portrait of Forbes.

THE DOG. By N. S. SHALER. Illustrated by Ch. Herthmann Léon. "A PORTION OF THE TEMPEST." By MARY TAPPAN WRIGHT.

THE STORY OF A BEAUTIFUL THING. By FRANCES HODSON BURNETT. Illustrated by John Gulich.

LIFE. By EDITH WHARTON. JOINT MARCH. STERNBERGER. Chapters XXXV.-XLII. By GEORGE W. CARLE.

AMERICAN GAME FISHES. By LEROY MILTON VALE. Illustrated by Charles B. Hudson.

A POUND OF CURE: a Story of Monte Carlo. (Conclusion.) By WILLIAM HENRY BISHOP.

THE FUTURE of the WOUNDED IN WAR. By SCRIBNER FORBES. THE POINT OF VIEW.—The Gentle Reader—Mrs. Anthony's Nolo Episcopari—Physical Aspects of Industrial Man.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, JUNE 2, 1894.

No. 1152, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Climbing and Exploration in the Karakoram-Himalayas. By William Martin Conway. Illustrated by A. D. McCormick. (Fisher Unwin.)

A GREAT book this, and worthy of a great occasion; for Mr. Conway has explored, and that in a manner possible only to a skilled mountaineer, the most remarkable glacier district of the grandest mountains of the world. But he has not only explored the district: he has mapped a large portion of it with scientific accuracy; he has collected its Flora, sampled its rocks, observed its physical phenomena, noted its customs, studied its architecture, and, above all, described its scenery. Mountaineering needs no defence in these days, for it is no longer on its trial; but if it were, to put in Mr. Conway's simple and spirited narrative, would be all that is needed to secure a favourable verdict. We have called it a simple narrative, because it is, in truth, nothing but a lucid record of an explorer's experiences, of scientific work achieved, of mountaineering difficulties surmounted, of scenes of beauty enjoyed. These, moreover, were jotted down day by day, and of these jottings the book mainly consists. As a result, it has a freshness, an immediateness of impression, a plainness of buoyancy and atmosphere, usually conspicuous by their absence in works of the kind.

The party attacked the Karakoram district from Srinagar, the capital of Kashmir. "Attacked" is the right word, for the difficulties of travel, even on well trodden routes, are phenomenal. Mr. Conway was not much impressed with the beauty of "The Venice of India," as Srinagar has been termed—which he somewhat harshly characterises as the shabbiest and filthiest Venice conceivable—nor, indeed, with the poet-praised valley generally. Still, his description of the lake, as they returned home from the Bazaar on an evening in April, shows that there are paradisiacal moments even among all the squalor.

"How wonderful was the coming out! From the top of the Bazaar steps we looked down the dark, narrow street, full of men, across the river and away to the distant mountains on fire with the sunset. A rich haze of blue wood smoke enveloped everything, for it was the month of Ramadan, and the cooking of the evening meal was a more important matter than usual. A few steps forward, and the views opened up and down the river, now for the first time seen by us in its true splendour. All meanness of detail was blotted out in the wondrous haze and evening glow; up stream the nearer hills with the moon rising over them; down stream a bridge, and the orange west flaming above and below it. The sight even stilled the noisy crowd for a moment, and all gazed at it in silence. As we glided over the waters, the moon took its sceptre from the sun, and the whole city became etherealised. The houses seemed of a gossamer fairy substance; and, when we reached our bangle in the night, the long lines of poplars lay black upon the silent stream."

How great are the difficulties of simple travel, as distinguished from climbing or exploration, may be gathered from the description of the crossing of the Burzil pass on the way to Astor, the first stage of the journey to Gilgit. The extreme height of the pass, 13,500 feet, is inconsiderable, according to Himalayan standards. There were no glaciers to cross nor rocks to climb, but there was a good deal of snow, and it was bitterly cold as they approached the ridge. Yet it is clear that it taxed the energies of the whole party to prevent a collapse of the caravan in this initial stage of the proceedings.

"The coolies were an unwilling lot, always throwing down their loads and attempting to bolt. When brought back to their work, they would advance fifty yards and then sit down; or they would say, 'No! we will die here; it is as easy as on the top.' They had to be carefully watched and kept from straggling about. If they had been permitted to wander and loiter about, some would have bolted and others would have so delayed that they would have been benighted and probably frozen on the upper levels."

Another pleasing variety of travel in the valleys is the jhula, or rope bridge. The ropes are of twisted birch twigs, three or more thick ones forming the bridge floor, with a double hand-rope on each side for balustrade, with an occasional strengthening loop or V underneath. The side ropes are "too thick to grasp, spiked all along with projecting points, whose points keep catching the sleeve at awkward moments"; and, to add to the traveller's discomfort, cross-pieces, which have to be climbed over, are placed athwart the gangway at every ten or twelve yards. These bridges, which sometimes approach 300 feet in length, are usually more or less rotten, and hang in a strong curve, swaying in the wind sometimes at a great height. Mr. Conway's first experience with a jhula was over a furious torrent; and as the one defect in his otherwise complete equipment for travel is a dislike of moving water, including in particular "the loathsome sea," it is not surprising that the crossing made him giddy. Nevertheless, he crossed "without much discomfort," grimly explaining that phrase as meaning, "in a merely inquisitive frame of mind, such as one might have on a first occasion of dying."

Such difficulties and dangers as these are, however, trifling, compared with those due directly to the idiosyncrasies of the Himalayan mountains, which to a party less exceptionally strong or less exceptionally well commanded, must have insured absolute failure. Mr. Conway was accompanied by another accomplished Alpine climber, Mr. Eckenstein, who unfortunately fell ill before the most serious work was undertaken; but he was exceedingly lucky in securing the assistance of the Hon. C. S. Bruce, an officer of the 5th Gurkhas, who proved literally a tower of strength, and of the men of his regiment who came with the expedition, and who one and all showed themselves born mountaineers. These highlanders of Nepal were fearless, strong, adroit, quick to learn the Swiss methods, and to understand the use of rope and axe, and always cheery under the most depressing conditions. The picture Mr. Conway has drawn of these native Mark Tapleys is a most exhilarating one, and their conduct throughout excited the admiration of Matthias Zurbriggen, of Macugnaga, the excellent guide who accompanied the expedition. The climate, from the mountaineer's point of view, is simply abominable; and no doubt the peril from avalanches, which is excessive, is due to this cause. The weather, in fact, rarely remained of the same mind for more than two or three days at a time, except when it settled down into what Hartley Coleridge termed contumacious wickedness. Even the wise ibex seem to have been unable to judge of the condition of the snow, for a herd was swept away by an avalanche under the very eyes of the travellers. Once on the Emerald Mountain, a peak of the chain that girds the Nagyr district, the party were in serious danger, and their escape bears a striking resemblance to that of Mr. Tuckett on the Eiger, recorded in an early number of the Alpine Journal.

"Zurbriggen and I had no more than set foot upon the grass, when we beheld a huge avalanche-cloud descending over the whole width of the icefall, utterly enveloping both it and a small rock rib, and a couloir beside it. Bruce and the Gurkhas were below the rib, and could only see up the couloir. He thought the avalanche was a small one confined to it, and so they turned back and ran towards the foot of the ice fall. This was no improvement in position; and there was nothing for them to do then but to run straight away from it, and get as far out on to the flat glacier as they could. The fall started from the very top of the Lower Burchi peak, and tumbled on to the plateau above the ice fall; it flowed over this, and came down the icefall itself. We saw the cloud before we heard the noise, and then it only reached us as a distant rumble. We had no means of guessing the amount of solid snow and ice that there might be in the heart of the cloud. The rumble increased in loudness, and was soon a thunder that swallowed up our puny shouts, so that Bruce could not hear our warning. Had he heard, he could easily have reached the sheltered position we gained before the cloud came on him. Zurbriggen and I cast ourselves upon our faces, but only the edge of the cloud and an ordinary strong wind reached us. Our companions were entirely enveloped in it. They afterwards described to us how they raced away like wild men, jumping crevasses which they could not have cleared in cold blood. When the snow dust enveloped them, the wind raised by it cast them headlong on the ice. This, however, was the worst that happened. The snow peppered them all over and soaked them to the skin, but the solid part of the avalanche was happily arrested in the midst of the ice-fall."

The enormous scale of the Himalayas forms, however, the most serious obstacle of all to their exploration. To spend a whole day in mounting a single moraine is not an unusual thing. The Hispar Pass took about a fortnight to cross. The great Pioneer Peak, which is but a satellite of the loftier Golden Throne, cost six days of the severest exertion. A doubt rests on its actual height, but that it is not much more than 23,000 feet seems certain. Yet when they reached the summit, Zurbriggen declared that he could not have cut another step. What are we to think then of the accessibility of such giants as the famous K<sup>2</sup>, which, according to the government survey, measures 28,250 feet, or the still loftier Mount Everest. The diminished vitality of the party at these heights showed itself in many ways, particularly as affecting the hearts of the climbers, which became so sensitive that a hasty step brought on dizziness. The frequent attacks of frostbite were also obviously due to this cause. Mr. Conway's reiterated complaints of "the stagnation of the air" recall the experiences of de Saussure and Boullit and other early explorers in the Alps, although we believe the sense of stagnation arises merely from the difficulty of breathing highly rarefied air, aggravated by the hot sun. One must remember, too, that the party were worn out with hard work before they got to the foot of that peak; and, Zurbriggen's declaration to the contrary notwithstanding, we feel sure that if the peak had been 1000 feet higher, the joy of battle would have dragged them up it. Mr. Conway's experience, if not exactly encouraging, is certainly not conclusive against the possibility of going higher. If under the climatic and physical conditions which obtain in the Himalayas, a trained party, reasonably fresh, can mount one of the higher mountains to a height of say 20,000 feet, then there is nothing in Mr. Conway's experience to show that even giants like K<sup>2</sup> are inaccessible; but many expeditions like Mr. Conway's will be required before the question can be set at rest.

A word must be said about the illustrations by Mr. McCormick. It is not every day that a real painter of mountains is discovered, and the credit of the discovery belongs to Mr. Conway. His drawings, which are fairly though not finely rendered in the reproductions, give the idea of mass in a quite wonderful way, and "the shadowy pencilled valleys and snowy glens" are touched in with a rare facility. The drawing of the glissade, selected for the back of the volume, is, however, a bit of a caricature; and the frontispiece, showing the Gurkha Harkbir's slip on the Pioneer Peak, is not very convincing. Clever as this last is, it seems a pity that, in a book so distinguished by the note of moderation, Harkbir should appear as suspended over an abyss by a rope which looks a mere thread. Mr. Conway's account of the incident is so characteristic that we cannot forbear from quoting it:

"As we were going down the steep ice-wall, just above the smooth rocks near the column by the first peak, we narrowly escaped an accident. Harkbir was leading, I was second; Zurbriggen was last. Bruce and Amar Sing were some way behind. Harkbir, as I have said, had no climbing-irons, and, to make matters worse, the nails of his boots were quite rounded and smooth. He is not at all to blame for what happened. The ice steps, small to start with, were worn by use and half melted off. The time came when, as I expected, one gave way, and Harkbir went flying forwards. I was holding the rope tight, and was firm on my claws, and Zurbriggen had the rope tight behind me. The slope was very steep, but we easily held Harkbir. We were not descending straight down the slope, but traversing it diagonally. As soon, therefore, as Harkbir had fallen, he swung round with the rope, like a weight on the end of a pendulum, and came to rest, spread-eagled against the icy face. Now came the advantage of having a cool-headed and disciplined man to deal with. He did not lose his axe or become flustered, but went quietly to work, and after a time cut a hole for one foot and another for the other; and then he got on his legs and returned to the track, and we continued the descent. At the time the whole incident seemed quite unexciting and ordinary, but I have often shivered since to think of it. The ice slope below us where the slip happened was fully 2000 feet long."

So thrilling a moment has rarely been better, never more simply and modestly, described.

REGINALD HUGHES.

The Diplomatic Reminiscences of Lord Augustus Loftus. Second Series, 1862-79. In 2 vols. (Cassells.)

THE reception of the first series of this work offered every possible encouragement to the author to proceed, and we are not disappointed with the result. This is a worthy and very interesting record. It is easy to comprehend that this interest would be greatly enhanced if all the royal and illustrious leaders of courts and diplomatic bodies with whom Lord Augustus has been associated had, like the Emperor Napoleon and Alexander II., disappeared from the scene.

These pages are models of extreme prudence and of unskilful literary composition. We understand better than before the sort of influence possessed by Lord Augustus. Again he calls himself "a man of the pen," while displaying no unusual aptitude, except a certain avoidance of redundancy, with that weapon. But though he possesses no very great qualities, and has never written a dispatch of remarkable ability, we should be slow to say that Lord Augustus was not a valuable and efficient servant of the Crown. He has, in rare excellence, the manner of imperial courts, and has held the ears of monarchs to a degree unequalled by many much more distinguished diplomatists. The reason will be obvious to the reader. No man probably has ever more sincerely believed the world to be governed and to be made for sovereigns and statesmen. A personal anecdote of Lord Augustus will possibly illustrate this sentiment more clearly than any recital in these pages. Addressing the present writer in his ambassadorial room in Berlin, Lord Augustus, one eventful day in 1870, deplored the decadence of England, upon the fact that an English viscount had that day applied to him for assistance in his capacity as war correspondent of "a penny paper." The man who had so brought his country thus near to the verge of ruin was, we believe, the present Lord Dunraven, who, as Lord Adair, was then writing of the Franco-German War for the Daily Telegraph.

For Lord Augustus's pen to write on the same page that the prayers of the nation for the Prince of Wales's recovery "were graciously answered by the Almighty Ruler of events," and that "the Queen was graciously pleased to receive me in audience," seems quite natural. No monarch who even condescended to familiarity with Lord Augustus, as did the Emperor Alexander when he referred to his daughter, now Duchess of Coburg, as "une bonne petite chatte," need fear reprisals from those courtly lips. This has been in great part the cause of such success as Lord Augustus obtained. A shrewd, cautious man, a good gossip, with no high ambition except to stand well for favour and promotion with those in power, he has always been a welcome ambassador with sovereigns.

It is a pity the author cannot speak his mind freely upon Bismarck; if he could, we are impressed with the notion that eulogy would not predominate. It is likely that the great Chancellor had no profound respect for the British ambassador. As it is, we get a few new lights upon Bismarck's character. Before the duel between Prussia and Austria in 1866 the two were together. Austria was then massing her troops on the Silesian frontier:

"'What would you do,' inquired Bismarck, 'if you found a violent, dangerous man in the street threatening the public security and peace?' I replied 'that I should immediately call the police, and in my estimation the great Powers constituted the police of Europe for the maintenance of peace.' 'But,' said Count Bismarck, 'if it was the case of a gentleman, you would give him your card.' I replied, 'I think not.'"

Again, talking of peace or war, Bismarck observed:

"'Why, after all, Attila was a greater man than your Mr. John Bright. He has left a greater name in history. The Duke of Wellington will be known in history as a great warrior, and not as a pacific statesman.'"

When the war commenced, Bismarck said to Lord Augustus:

"'If we are beaten, I shall not return here. I shall fall in the last charge. One can die but once, and, if beaten, it is better to die.'"

But at Königgrätz his spirits rose; and, when the King doubted if the singing in his ears could be that of bullets, Bismarck replied, "Does your Majesty think they are swallows?" Not so did Lord Augustus ever address a crowned head. The Emperor Alexander, to whom he was long ambassador, had a favourite dog called "Milord"; and while Lord Augustus was dining at the Winter Palace, and the Tzar had retired to an inner saloon, the Queen's ambassador heard him calling "Milord," and "supposed the Emperor was calling for me," Lord Augustus hastened to the monarch, and learned that he was calling the dog—an incident at which the Tzar "was highly amused."

From the man who paid the money—for Lord Augustus took charge of this business—we learn that Bazaine, a prisoner, informed that there was no "solde de captivité," for a Marshal of France

"replied to me himself by a letter written in curious English, requesting me to send the highest solde de captivité on my list, which I accordingly did."

One of the most sagacious remarks in the book is this:

"When education and civilisation are more advanced—and the two go hand-in-hand together—the Russian people will become a powerful nation. With their kindred Slavs, they may be destined to be 'the coming race.'"

There are two explanations in the final volume of some historic interest. Count Schouvaloff had assured Lord Granville that not an inch of territory would be taken by Russia in the Treaty of Khiva, because the Tzar had instructed him to make this avowal. But the Treaty, which was contrary to this declaration, was sent direct by General Kaufmann to the Tzar in the Crimea, who sanctioned it, forgetful of this assurance, without consulting Prince Gortschakoff, his hands being forced by Kaufmann's indiscreet publication of the Treaty, so that there was an appearance of bad faith which was regretted both by the Tzar and his minister. Schouvaloff went so far as to suggest that he should be disavowed and should leave the service for a time, a course which the Tzar declined to adopt. The other explanation is connected with the Salisbury-Schouvaloff agreement concerning the Treaty of San Stefano. The inception of the secret is claimed by Lord Augustus Loftus. He suggested to Ignatieff a confidential exchange of opinions between Lord Salisbury and Count Schouvaloff, of such a nature as to remove all further difficulties in regard to the meeting of the Congress. M. de Giers joined them, and Lord Augustus proposed a telegraphic message to Count Schouvaloff in London, which was agreed to. Lord Salisbury was advised of the transaction; and upon agreement being arrived at, Schouvaloff came to St. Petersburg and submitted the terms to the Tzar. The arrangement was, without question, one of gravest importance. Lord Augustus derives from it this moral reflection, that "it was a striking proof of how often from a trivial accidental circumstance the most important results are obtained."

ARTHUR ARNOLD.

Ban and Arrière Ban: a Rally of Fugitive Rhymes. By Andrew Lang. (Longmans.)

MR. LANG has given a characteristically modest title to his latest collection of poems—a title, of course, exaggeratedly disproportionate to its merits, which, equally of course, are both many and distinguished, despite their unpretentiousness. It is possible that Mr. Lang, as a poet, has never yet received quite the recognition due to him; and for this, if so it be, there is naturally sufficient reason. First and foremost, he has dared to be versatile, to make vers de société as well as sonnets; even to construct frivolous sonnets and poke fun at the Muse; and it is commonly, if tacitly, demanded that a poet shall set up for a poet, "only that and nothing more." He may certainly be allowed to write prose to boot; but it must be poet's prose, and all primarily from the minstrel's point of view. He (or she) is to pose as much as may conveniently be possible, and to prattle artlessly in his (or her) own simple poetic way, laying down the law with pretty airs of authority anent more things in heaven and earth than many wiser have ever hoped to understand; rushing in upon the gravest problems with proverbial fearlessness, and (sometimes) winning both applause and advertisement thereby. All this he may do and more, with profit and pleasure, only provided that he never forget he is a poet. He must not ever come down from his tripod, or drop, so to speak, into the common vernacular, and then all will be well.

But whoso is careless of his poetic attitude, who triumphs in other fields, and yet neither rhymes nor jokes with difficulty, who really cares not the toss of a half-penny or the value of "nuppence" as to whether his poems are taken seriously or no, may, generally speaking, run a very fair chance of not receiving from the public at large any adequate appreciation. Besides, it is, perhaps, an ungrateful task to be poet and critic too, if any of the critical faculty be joined with the creative. But that is another story. What more immediately concerns us is the evident pleasure in singing for singing's sake that is shown in nearly all Mr. Lang's metrical compositions, be they humorous trifles, scholarly and graceful translations, or poems of a deeper inspiration. Who that remembers the immortal "Ballade of Cricket," "The Prophet," that most elegant rendering of Antiphilus's epigram, and "Another Way," can fail to do homage, spontaneous and sincere, to the light, yet sure, touch, the art concealing art, the genuinely poetic imagination, whereto they are due. Few poets are blessed either with a sense of humour or with even rudimentary good taste: the poetic temperament is ever overapt to thump its lute by the roadside in demonstrative ecstasies of rapture or of pain. "Lo, here they sit, and to the world they call" to listen to their plainly delineated symptoms; and the cruder the colours, the more piercing the heart-cries, the more indelicate the details, the larger (naturally) the audience. And yet the classic restraint that will, in all likelihood, always preclude the poems of Matthew Arnold, Mr. Henley, and Mrs. Meynell from any appreciable popularity, is much to be preferred to the unbridled confidences of such as cry their wares and their emotions in the marketplace.

Subtlety and fine taste are no more indicative of weakness or lack of individuality than are the slim, perfectly proportioned curves in a Greek intaglio, or of the stem that bears up the cup of the anemone, slender, indeed, but strong and full of beauty nevertheless. Noise is not necessarily music; and there be those whose judgment may not be all amiss who would prefer to hear Chopin or Mozart played upon a modest keyboard in the spring twilight, before the more clamant charms of "The Lost Chord" or "The Garden of Sleep" performed by a brass band in the full glory of mid-day. It is all a matter of preference: the odour of the onion is certainly more powerful than that of the rose, the goose confides its joys and sorrows to the world with more expansive animation than the nightingale; and both onion and goose are good (especially when combined), but so are the nightingale and the rose. And, à propos of roses, here is a fresh instance of Mr. Lang's airy grace as a translator, to say nothing of the atmosphere wherewith he has invested this rendering of "Les Roses de Sadi."

"This morning I vowed I would bring thee my roses,
They were thrust in the band that my bodice encloses,
But the breast-knots were broken, the roses went free.

"The breast-knots were broken; the roses together
Floated forth on the wings of the wind and the weather,
And they drifted afar down the streams of the sea.

"And the sea was as red as when sunset uncloses,
But my raiment is sweet from the scent of the roses,
Thou shalt know, love, how fragrant a memory can be."

Mr. Lang's is not the sentiment that may be bawled from the roof-tops: it is the sentiment of old romance, of dim memories, all the more beautiful for their vagueness (as the reflection is often more beautiful than the mirrored object), the sentiment of wet spring woods and birds singing in the early dawn. His "Haunted Tower" is too long to quote, too good and too finely balanced to wrong by excerpts; it is as full of illusion and subtle suggestion as an old Volkslied or a fairy tale.

Somewhat in the vein of Thackeray are several of the lighter pieces: there is much the same spirit of half-humorous, half-sad, but wholly manly, acceptance of the losses and regrets that must inevitably be the shadow cast by life, much the same tenderness towards youth and laughter. But perhaps two of the most characteristic poems in the book are the recovered "In Ercildoune," a particularly delightful fantasy, and "Lost Love," a poem set in a graver key, which is given here.

"Who wins his love shall lose her,
Who loses her shall gain,
For still the spirit woos her,
A soul without a stain;
And memory still pursues her
With longings not in vain!

"He loses her who gains her,
Who watches day by day
The dust of time that stains her,
The griefs that leave her grey,
The flesh that yet enchains her
Whose grace hath passed away!

"Oh, happier he who gains not
The love some seem to gain:
The joy that custom stains not
Shall still with him remain,
The loveliness that wanes not,
The Love that ne'er can wane.

"He dreams she grows not older
The lands of dream among,
Though all the world wax colder,
Though all the songs be sung,
In dreams doth he behold her
Still fair and kind and young."

That he can write a gay and a gallant ballad, in guid Scots too, "How they held the Bass for King James" bears ample witness—it swings along like a company of Cavaliers with bridles ringing and spurs shining in the sun. The last lyric in the book, "The Poet's Apology," shows forth frankly Mr. Lang's own attitude to his own poems. He is the spoiled child of the Muse, and can say what he pleases.

GRAHAM R. TOMSON.

The Psalter of the Great Bible of 1539: a Landmark in English Literature. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by John Earle. (John Murray.)

PROF. EARLE has produced a book which appeals to many classes: the devout believer, the student of theology, and the philologist are alike attracted by its title and its scope. In some respects this multiplicity of interests may be taken as an advantage—to the writer; in others it has drawbacks.

The reader will be led to expect, from the title-page, that the main interest of the work is literary. We can hardly doubt, when the editor took the trouble to reproduce his text line for line and letter for letter, that he intended to appeal to scholars. As far as we can judge, the accuracy of this reproduction is worthy of Prof. Earle's reputation. We may, however, wonder why, in face of the recent revival of black letter printing, one of the most unreadable founts of type we have ever seen should have been chosen for the purpose.

The work consists of 68 pages of Introduction, 245 pages of the text of the Psalter, and another 100 pages of notes and comments. To these last the reader naturally turns in the first place. He will find them of a varied nature. To compare small things with great, they remind us of nothing so much as a medieval gloss, or, more properly, of a student's note-book in a provincial theological college. Here is a note on the suggested authorship of the Psalm; next, a devotional utterance; then, the etymology of a word; a reference to "English Philology, §—"; and a quite uncalled for deference to the literary taste of the "American Revisers," surely the most hopeless Philistines—in matters of language—that laid hands to such work since the divine who translated the Epistles into Chesterfieldian English last century. About a score of the notes are of philological interest—but to whom? Take the following on XIX. 12:

"Fautes. This spelling reminds us of a popular pronunciation of the word fault. It is one of these features which have in past years, before the rise of philology, suggested the notion that the old language was 'incorrect.' But this French form is exactly what the history of the English language would lead us to look for in 1539. After this date Latin gained in general diffusion; and Italian was largely redd (sic) in the higher ranks of society, and then a new l was given to this word, taken from Italian falta and Latin fallere, because it had been forgotten that in the form faute the au represented al."

This note would not be out of place in a text-book for pupil teachers in national schools or for lower-form boys, but it is difficult to think of any other class likely to profit from it. Certainly this state of things is largely due to the efforts of Prof. Earle and his fellow-workers in the past; and there is still room for instruction to curates, who think they import local colour into an Old English Fair by spelling "the" as "ye." To such the note on Ps. v. may be commended.

If, however, we get less than a score of these purely philological notes, we have in return some instructive literary criticism—instructive, that is to say, as to the standpoint of the critic. Here is one on "Beowulf":

"One of the aims of the Beowulf, the oldest extant romantic poem, is to combat the idea of Fate, and put in its place a hope in God. So when Beowulf, in battle with the fiend, is down and at the point of succumbing, he is set up on his feet again by holy and righteous God."

The voice may be that of the Oxford professor, but surely the words are those of the rector of Swanswick. The aims of the "Beowulf"! If one can speak of aims in connexion with a work as spontaneous as the Odyssey, the sole aims of the author of the "Beowulf" were to give pleasure to himself and to his hearers. If the idea of hope in God exists in the story, it is because that hope was accepted by teller and audience alike, and not because the original author, or the Christian who cast the tale into its present form, had any thought of teaching it.

On turning to the Introduction, the student will find eight pages of the sixty-eight devoted to what Prof. Earle leads us on the title-page to consider the main interest of the book; and the value of these pages may be judged from the fact that he discourses on the making of the English of 1539, of Tyndale and Coverdale's English, without referring to the work of Caxton and his successors. He writes:—

"It is utterly unlike the language of Wiclif. The nearest approach to ancestral likeness is seen in the Paston Letters, and in the English of Sir John Fortescue. In the novelty of the diction we see a reflection of the high purpose which evoked the effort. Our Bible translation actually generated a new dialect in the English language; it produced the happiest type of diction that ever grew up on the prolific stock of our mother tongue. I could conceive that Tyndale owed something of it, unconsciously, to John Colet. . . ."

The few points of philological interest discussed by Prof. Earle suffer from this neglect of his sources. The optative use of "may" is, we believe, first found in Caxton, and "shall" and "will" are as correctly used by Record in 1547 as they are to-day. However, we have, in compensation, a couple of dialogues between a lady and a Scotch draper and coachman, illustrating their archaic use of the words, kindly communicated by an English lady who has been some years resident in Scotland.

Our unfulfilled expectations from Prof. Earle must be taken as the measure of our discontent. An examination of the origin and the character of Coverdale's English is what was naturally expected from him; and a score of rather obvious notes on etymology, with half a dozen pages devoted to quite unimportant and untypical uses of words, are a very unsatisfactory substitute. We are told of the influence of the Psalter on the writers of the Elizabethan age—it is a commonplace of the shilling text-books; but we do not remember having met with any adequate treatment of the subject, and another such opportunity of dealing with the effect of the Bible and Prayer Book on our literature and language will not readily present itself. May we express the hope that Prof. Earle will give us at no distant date a study of it worthy of himself and of his evident enthusiasm.

Looked at under any other light, or viewed as the work of one of smaller powers or reputation, the book is wholly admirable. There will be few indeed who will not listen with pleasure and profit to Prof. Earle as he tells of the history of the Psalter—Greek, Latin, or Hebrew, or gives an account of the revival and progress of Hebrew study. His sketch of the leading critics and their standpoint, and the table on pp. 34-39, supply an amount of information not easily available elsewhere. The table itself is invaluable to those who wish to study the subject.

"For instance, in the case of the Second Psalm, we catch at a glance the wide diversity of critical opinion on this important Psalm. How it is traditionally anonymous, and how Ewald attributed it to David, Graetz to Hezekiah, Cheyne to the Persian or Greek domination, Hitzig and Olshausen to the time of the Asmoneans; how De Wette, Reuss, and Delitzsch declined to fix a date; only the two latter saw in it the reflection of an actual occasion, when the political situation was such as the psalm indicates."

Prof. Earle's attitude is obviously that of cautiously accepting modern criticism. "To follow De Wette," says he, "through the shifts by which he evades the admission of Maccabean Psalms, e.g., lxxiv., lxxix., lxxxiii., is a schooling in the opposite opinion." Though he does not dogmatise, the following extract will show how far he is prepared to advance on the position of Cheyne:—

"It must, I think, be allowed that the Psalms are not a very promising subject for the exercise of that critical art which determines dates by internal evidence. . . . A conviction is growing that the bulk of the Psalter was produced in the Exile or after it; and the truth of this opinion is confirmed by a variety of considerations, among others this—that it gives the Psalms a chronological place in the Canon which harmonises with the formula in the New Testament, 'The Law of Moses and the Prophets and the Psalms' (Luke xxiv. 44). There is no reason why we should discard old tradition which traces Hebrew psalmody up to David; at the same time, the nearer approach of the Psalter (as a whole) to the New Testament will perhaps soon be accepted as a gain by many who have been reluctant to admit the change of view."

The omission of a bibliography is a grave oversight. The student is given no hint that the Psalter first appeared in 1535, and no account of the various editions in which it subsequently appeared. A collation of these editions would have added little to the enormous labour Prof. Earle has expended in following the various translators, and it would have been satisfactory to know something definitely on the matter.

ROBERT STEELE.

"LUCID SHORTHAND."

A System of Lucid Shorthand Devised by William George Spencer. With a Prefatory Note by Herbert Spencer. (Williams & Norgate.)

THIS is a belated little book which ought to have been published fifty years ago—and was then actually ready for the printer. Why it did not appear at that time Mr. Herbert Spencer explains in his interesting prefatory note, and the explanation is curious. The father of our greatest living philosopher, while prompt about small matters, was dilatory about great ones. He invented an excellent system of shorthand. The son, knowing his father's "paralysis of will" drew up an account of this stenography in 1843, but the finishing touches from the master hand of the inventor were never supplied. When he died, at the age of seventy-six, nothing further had been done. Although only now published, Lucid Shorthand was the result of studies beginning before 1814. The author's ideas were put into something like form by 1830, and in the year 1833 "the distinguishing principles and peculiarities of the system were developed." Now the most popular of all the English shorthand systems is undoubtedly that of Mr. Isaac Pitman, which appeared, in its earliest form, in November, 1837. What would have been the result if Mr. W. G. Spencer had been prompt instead of dilatory? Would "lucid shorthand" have had any chance in the struggle for life in which "phonography" has triumphed? They are both phonetic in principle, both use geometrical forms, both classify allied sounds in pairs, so that even a mistake in writing a letter will probably suggest the nearest and correct sound. But beyond this, in "lucid shorthand" the words are kept on one line, and the vowels are written as integral parts of the word. The absence of these two characteristics are often made an objection to "phonography," though they are less important in practice than in theory. Mr. Spencer prints a diagram to show that "lucid shorthand" is also briefer than "phonography." That Spencer will displace Pitman is not to be expected, and it is not with that aim that Lucid Shorthand is now published:

"Existing shorthands," observes Mr. Herbert Spencer, "serve very well—especially phonography. . . . The action I now take on the matter results from the conviction, long since formed and still unshaken, that the lucid shorthand ought to replace ordinary writing. Possessing as it does not equal legibility but greater legibility (the distinctions among the symbols being so much more marked), and having at the same time the brevity which shorthands in general possess, the use of it for all purposes would be immensely advantageous to mankind. It needs only to ask what would be the effect of saving more than half the time now devoted to writing by men of business, journalists, authors, and people at large, to see that adoption of it would achieve a large economy of life."

This is doubtless true. I have myself dictated articles which have been set up in type from the phonographic notes; but this is of course only possible where the compositor has a good knowledge of shorthand.

So long as shorthand MSS. have to be transcribed into longhand before they are intelligible to editors, printers, and the generality of the world, the use of stenography as a substitute for ordinary writing must necessarily be circumscribed. If—there is much virtue in an if—everyone understood stenography, the benefits which Mr. Herbert Spencer foresees would no doubt result. But how is this universal knowledge of "lucid shorthand"—or even of "phonography," notwithstanding its myriad of existing disciples—to be brought about?

WILLIAM E. A. AXON.

NEW NOVELS.

Life's Little Ironies. By Thomas Hardy. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

The Rubicon. By E. F. Benson. In 2 vols. (Methuen.)

The Prisoner of Zenda. By Anthony Hope. (Bristol: Arrowsmith.)

Saint Ann's. By W. E. Norris. In 2 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

The Flower of Forgiveness. By F. A. Steel. In 2 vols. (Macmillans.)

The Daughter of the Nez Percés. By Arthur Paterson. In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

The Mystery of Landy Court. By Fergus Hume. (Jarrold.)

IT is (if this were of the slightest importance) a great many years since the present writer has been called upon to review a new book of Mr. Hardy's; and there is thus, for him if for nobody else, considerable interest in comparing the impression made by The Hand of Ethelberta or the Trumpet Major with that made by Life's Little Ironies. The first result of the comparison is a strengthened belief that Mr. Hardy's method, though it never produces undistinguished results, is better suited, at any rate nowadays, for short stories than for long. Indeed, this is an almost necessary result of his greater and greater inclination to the pessimist-realist style of handling. Everybody who considered the two critically must have observed years ago the similarity between Mr. Hardy and Maupassant; indeed, it can hardly be said that the two were ever other than consorts except in one respect—that the vates of the meads and orchards south of the Channel always wrote the very simplest and least alembicated French, whereas Mr. Hardy has at times favoured a somewhat euphuistic kind of English. And though Maupassant (not quite so often as Mr. Hardy) wrote good long books, it is notorious that he was always at his best "in shorts." So, we think, is Mr. Hardy. The second story here, "For Conscience Sake," is very nearly perfect. Mr. Hardy has put into it nothing unnecessary, and has left nothing necessary undeveloped, save, perhaps, one point—which, by the way, we never remember to have seen brought out, except (quod minime reris) in the Wild Duck of the great Dr. Ibsen. This is, the fact—which, though quite contrary to copybook psychology and ethics, is a fact—that women really think less of what is technically called a "slip" than men do. And, after all, we are half induced to think that Mr. Hardy did intend to glance at this curious truth, though he may have thought it better to lay no stress on it. The least comic and most amiably humorous thing in the book is "Tony Kytes, the Arch Deceiver," which is again admirable. "On the Western Circuit" slips a little into sensiblerie and morbidness, but still is good; indeed, there is little, if anything, in the book that is not. But Mr. Hardy should not sneer at the Church as he does. It is so easy, and so terribly hackneyed: reasons, it will be observed, purely artistic, and quite sufficient to support a motion in the Court of Art for disallowing the practice.

We hope Mr. Benson will not think it ill-mannered of us, but at a certain or uncertain point of our reading of The Rubicon we fell to "dretching of swevens." There was (the dream reminded us) once, long before Mr. Benson was born, an antediluvian writer whom his friends knew as George Lawrance and the world as "the author of Guy Livingstone." He knew a great deal of that world—perhaps even as much as Mr. Benson. He had, if not exactly scholarship, a great deal of reading, and, in some ways (for even in those Days of Ignorance he admired Rossetti), of taste; and some of the decrepit ones who remember his works still think that he had, if not positive genius, talent enough to make about a baker's dozen of popular novelists as they go and have gone. But he must needs take a passing phase of "smart" society—they did not call it smart then, but no matter—exaggerate it immensely, and write wholly or mainly in the key of that exaggeration. And he is dead—so dead that Mr. Benson very likely never heard of him except in traditional jests and quotations. But it is rude, if not immoral, to dream on duty, so let us reach The Rubicon—otherwise the history of Eva Grampound, Lady Hayes. Eva, of course, is Dodo—Dodo with rather less vulgarity, with a great deal less bonnefillerie (which really is wanted as a supplement to bonhomie), with a tendency to talk more book than slang, and, if not with much less heart than her elder sister, with a considerably worse heart. To put the difference neatly, we should say that—in Otaheite of course—one might abide with Dodo as long as she chose, and say "Joy go with you" when that fair one elected to be clasped by another shepherd. The shortest cohabitation consistent with even Otaheitean good manners would suffice any sensible shepherd in the case of Eva. For the rest, Lord Hayes, her unlucky husband, is a rather better outlined character than any other of Mr. Benson's that we have seen; but he is left almost entirely in outline. The lovers are calves. Gerty Carston, Eva's rival, deserves something of the same qualified commendation as Hayes. The rest are shadows. But Mr. Benson has developed a new and very terrible habit of coming to the footlights and addressing his audience, for some pages at a time, on Wagner, the morals of his heroine (think of six pages from an author about the morals of his heroine), the blossoming of chestnut buds (as to which, by the by, he seems to have a calendar of his own), and so forth. Now, there is nothing in the whole range of literature so perilous as the parabasis; and we implore Mr. Benson, if he values the welfare of whatever, as a writer, he would like his "soul" to be called, to abstain from it henceforth and for ever. Let him, when he is tempted to begin one, remember the admirable conduct of his own "Professor of Ignorance," who "sat long with paper spread before him and a pen in his hand, but wrote nothing." Oh, wise Professor!

The space which we devote to The Prisoner of Zenda shall be in inverse ratio to the enjoyment we have derived from it. It is a roman de cape et d'épée; "a Roman from head to foot," as a Foreign Office aspirant once translated it—and from head to foot there is no fault to be found therewith. But this kind of Roman cannot, without damage, be analysed or discussed in detail. Although it certainly will not spoil the pleasure of reading The Prisoner of Zenda to know beforehand the exact relationship between Rudolph Rassendyll and the King of Ruritania, or the strange uses to which ingenuity and valour combined may put a summer-house tea-table; or by what a high courage love's sacrifices can be actuated; or what a deal of fighting a young man may go through with the blessing of the providence of romance; yet to know these things in detail may take a little of the bloom off. All that we think it necessary to say is that we bless Mr. Anthony Hope fervently, and that he shall be blessed by all good persons who read him. And we hope to bless him again if, as he darkly hints, he is going to tell us some day how Rudolf played out the unfinished set with Rupert Hentzau. Let none of the foolish talk about continuations deter Mr. Hope; but if he finds it in him to do more matter like this, let him go on unto the limits of Le Vicomte de Bragelonne plus Monte Cristo, and one faithful reader at least will sound the trumpets and beat the drum for him.

As a foil to this excellent romance, one might find twenty worse books and not one better than Saint Ann's. Mr. Norris, it is true, works his story up at a certain point to tragedy, or at least melodrama; but the bulk of it is something quite different—the easy handling of everyday incident and dilemma, at which he is one of our very best plotters. The melodramatic passage just referred to does not, indeed, seem to us very happy; and the character of the person principally responsible for it, Robert Hamersley, though by no means impossible, is not made probable. The interest in the book lies in the excellent though slightly chuckle-headed hero, Arthur Foley, and the two girls with whom he is in love at the same time. For though Mr. Norris hints a demure and orthodox doubt of the possibility, the thing is most undoubtedly possible. Both these girls are good. The Eve, Rhoda Meynell, is by no means heavy, and the Lilith, Lola Hamersley, is as light and good as Mr. Pendennis's soufflé, till that unlucky touch of melodrama comes and spoils everything. The subsidiary characters are in no case despicable, though the good Colonel Meynell, like the bad Mr. Hamersley, is not made quite so possible as he might be with advantage. But Lola (in the Lilith way, of course) is really agreeable; and it only seems a pity that her diamond should have met such very ordinary pastes as the well-intentioned Radical prig, Lord Branton, the chivalrous but chuckle-headed Arthur, and a French-American middle-aged millionaire to finish with. Not, by the way, that this last is likely to have been the finish.

This agreeable variety is well maintained by the next two books on our list. The excellence of Mrs. Steel's Indian tales may be still more apparent to those who know India itself than to others; but it cannot be missed by any competent judge. We think we remember making on a former occasion the criticism that this author sometimes leaves the exact drift of her story a little obscure to the running reader; and we still see a few traces of this. But the running reader is a personage who, as we most fully admit, deserves to be humoured rather by the children of this world than by the children of light, and even he will have no difficulty with most of the tales in this collection. "The Bhut Baby" is perhaps the most pathetic of all, and in its picture of superstitious affection (which, if not so cowardly, is quite as cruel a thing as fear) the most horrible; but in pathos some may think it matched by the opening story, "The Flower of Forgiveness." "A Debt of Honour" is the most fantastic, and to us the most pleasing, while "Habitual Criminals" is certainly the most comic. "The Footstep of Death" is grim and good, while perhaps now that everybody takes fiction as everybody used to take sermons (only with a difference), "London" is not the least worthy of attention. But to tell the truth, nothing here ought to be neglected, for there is in most places something profitable for not too obtrusive exhortation, and almost everywhere something for enjoyment.

We seem to have seen a critical statement to the effect that Mr. Arthur Paterson did not know how to tell his story; as to which we can only observe, in the politest way in the world, that we fear the judge did not quite know how to give judgment. Mr. Paterson has indeed given no mean provocation by asserting that his account of the attempted exodus or hegira of the Nez Percés is "strictly founded on fact," which is, we own, enough to irritate anybody. Nor is his book a novel of character. Its figures, indeed, are not unlikelike; but the heroine, Winnetka, is any good white or nearly white girl retransported to savagery; her father, Joseph, any pattern chief; her lover, Eustace Haworth, any stout-hearted but not thick-headed English gentleman. Only "White Bird," perhaps, of all the personages, is really a person. But the wise reader will soon see that Mr. Paterson, while, as we have said, by no means offering him stones in the way of figures, does not offer him bread of that particular kind. What he does offer is a singularly moving and very well told plain tale of incident; and we at least have found the fortunes of the Nez Percés, and the question whether they will get "home," interesting enough.

Mr. Fergus Hume continues his Mysteries with as unflinching a sequence as if he had been born in the fourteenth or fifteenth century. Personally, we find fifteenth century mysteries more interesting than his; but that is not the general opinion, and Landy Court will keep up very fairly with the Hansom Cabs. We felt a little disappointment when we found that "Father Ching," the Jesuit, was not, as we had hoped from his name, a lineal and scandalous descendant of St. Francis Xavier. But the Lametrys and their "sacred ring," and the very complicated way in which they murder and are suspected of murdering each other, will no doubt please the public better.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

SOME VOLUMES OF BIOGRAPHY.

Bishop Lightfoot. (Macmillans.) When so many bulky biographies and autobiographies of persons relatively insignificant are thought worthy of publication, it is a matter for real regret that there should be no prospect of any adequate memoir of such a unique personality as the late Bishop of Durham. In default of any such biography, the many pupils and friends who revered and loved him will be glad to treasure this reprint of the excellent memorial article which appeared in the Quarterly Review for January, 1893, an article which, though still remaining anonymous, evidently proceeded from the pen of one who had the privilege of admittance to the inner circle at Auckland Castle. Of special interest and novelty is the account of the Bishop's earlier years, and of the debt he owed to his training under Dr. Prince Lee at Birmingham, who in nine years sent to Cambridge thirteen First Class men, of whom five were Senior Classics and eight became Fellows of Trinity, and who, through his distinguished pupils, may claim to have been the real founder of the modern Cambridge school of Biblical and Patristic criticism. Bishop Lightfoot's lifelong reverence for the greatest of his predecessors in the see of Durham may, it would seem, be traced to the eloquent lectures on Butler which were delivered by Dr. Lee to his senior pupils: lectures of which a graphic account from Bishop Lightfoot's pen has been inserted in this volume, which, it may be added, brings out in a brief but masterly manner the distinguishing characteristics of the great Bishop—his wide and accurate scholarship, his mastery of patristic literature, his judicial fairness in controversy, his quiet but delightful humour, his marvellous humility, his deep but unobtrusive piety, his princely munificence, and his single-hearted devotion to the work before him, whether at Cambridge or at Durham. A striking and most characteristic portrait forms the frontispiece to this admirable little book, of which the sole demerit is its extreme brevity.

Recollections of a Long Life. By John Stoughton. (Hodder & Stoughton.) A catholic and charitable spirit is the honourable keynote of this autobiography. The author quotes with approval Dr. Pusey's words about the Evangelicals:—

"Ever since I knew them," wrote Dr. Pusey, "which was not in my earliest years, I have loved those who are called Evangelicals. I loved them because they loved our Lord. I loved them for their zeal for souls. I often thought them narrow, yet I was often drawn to individuals among them, more than to others who held truths in common with myself, which the Evangelicals did not hold, at least not explicitly."

We are tempted to ask the question whether Dr. Pusey would have written thus, we will not say of German Rationalists, but, let us say, of the author of Ecce Homo. We fear the sentence of the High Church divine would have been far different from that of his Nonconformist admirer. Of this famous work Dr. Stoughton says:—

"Whatever might be the views of the writer with regard to the nature of Jesus Christ, such a position as he reached seems to me to involve Christ's true and proper divinity. In other words, it is tantamount to saying that 'Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.'"

Dr. Stoughton, in fact, thought that Prof. Seeley made admissions of such a nature as to afford a basis for convincing arguments "in favour of Evangelical Christianity." Lord Shaftesbury regarded Ecce Homo as a work of a most pernicious tendency. Dr. Stoughton endeavoured to persuade him otherwise; but in the course of conversation he discovered that Lord Shaftesbury had not read the book he so severely condemned. He adds that "Lord Shaftesbury's manner was not always the same." To no religious denomination—not even excluding his own—is Dr. Stoughton more uniformly sympathetic than to the Church of England, especially to the liberal-minded members of that Church. Of Dean Stanley and Archbishop Tait he cannot speak too highly. These two earnest men, and Dr. Hook, the Dean of Chichester, enjoyed and valued his society. Chapter xii., which deals with the union of Church and Dissent, so far as it is possible, is the most interesting in the book. We have only space here for one more quotation:—

"Archbishop Tait appreciated the relative position of Church and Dissent better than any other dignity I have met with. He would say that Nonconformists had their traditions, organisations, endowments, and influence, which gave them a status they were not likely to surrender by bringing over what belonged to them into an Episcopalian organisation. A fraternal modus vivendi he regarded as the object to be aimed at, not an absorption of Dissenting bodies into the Establishment. He, no doubt, would have preferred to see one great Church in England, under a moderate Episcopacy; but he seemed to cherish little hope of any such object being accomplished."

We can recommend a book none of whose pages are disfigured by party spite; and we gladly pay this tribute of respect to Dr. Stoughton, whose life has combined the worship of God with the service of man.

The Story of a Melanesian Deacon: Clement Marau. Written by himself. Translated by R. H. Codrington, D.D. (S.P.C.K.) Dr. Codrington is the greatest authority upon all Melanesian subjects. He has written two very learned books, The Melanesian Languages and Studies in the Anthropology and Folk-lore of the Melanesians. These works have received the highest praise from English and German critics; but the number of those who appreciate them is of necessity limited, though the Anthropology and Folk-lore is very interesting. The present story of Clement Marau, which Dr. Codrington gives in a translation for English readers, is one which ought to have a wide circulation; and Dr. Codrington may find, like Sir R. Burton, that a story book brings greater fame than years of study devoted to science. Clement Marau wrote his story of himself in Mota, and with a view to his own fellow-countrymen only. Dr. Codrington, who read the MS. when on a visit to Norfolk Island in 1893, felt that it deserved to be offered to English readers; and our thanks are due to him for his translation, which preserves the simplicity and, in some respects, the idiom of the writer. Anything which enables us to enter into the thoughts and feelings of a different race to ourselves must have its value, and this story shows in a surprising way the character of a Melanesian mind. Clement Marau gives a description of his first meeting with Bishop Patteson, which recalls the pathos of the Hebrew stories that are the delight of childhood and old age. The Mission ship was expected to bring back Clement's two elder brothers, who had gone away with Bishop Patteson the year before. Unhappily, they had both died, and their father and his brother were very angry and grieved; but Clement was fascinated by the Bishop's manner, and crept into the boat and gave himself up to go away with him, much to the indignation of the uncle, who was very nearly shooting the Bishop with poisoned arrows. At last the boy got leave to go, and he thus finishes the account of the event. "The evening was drawing on, the sun was sinking towards the west, as we rowed off to the ship and the people went up the steep paths into the island weeping as they went." Clement shows a considerable power of analysis in describing Bishop Patteson's treatment of his countrymen, and also his own mental and moral growth. The following is his idea of the meaning of the alphabet. "I came to see that what were called m and a, or s or o were names of the places and shapes of our mouths and tongues; because when they were joined together one could say that they made real words such as came out of one's mouth." The story deserves to be read not only by those who are interested in the work of Bishop Patteson and the Melanesian Mission, but by all who care to learn something of the inner life and the mental and spiritual capacities of a black race.

A Life of Benito Juarez, Constitutional President of Mexico. By Ulick R. Burke. (Remington.) The life of Juarez is well worth writing, if only as a forecast to show what the future of Spanish and Portuguese tropical America may possibly be, when the coloured races come to the front. For this pure-blooded Indian, who rose from poverty and ignorance, who was not only self-educated, but had also himself to create the materials for his higher education, will compare most favourably with any ruler of any race that has yet governed his native land. His only rival is his own fellow countryman and disciple, Porfirio Diaz. Mr. Burke tells the story of his life with all sympathy. It can hardly be called a brilliant book: it is a simple biography, and will be read not only for the story of Juarez himself, but also for the tale that is inseparable from it—the three years' fantastic attempt at ruling Mexico by Maximilian of Miramar. Mr. Burke is, we think, a little hard on Maximilian, and does not give him credit enough for the good though vague intentions he really had. Evidently as he failed in carrying out those intentions, he certainly meant his rule to be a benefit to the Mexicans; and the foreign intervention of which he was the victim and the scapegoat made Mexico a nation, and gave it something like a true patriotism. Our author glides too lightly over some of Juarez' shortcomings. It may be said in excuse that the confiscation and sale of church property has been a danger and a blot on all the Liberal legislation of the Latin races in both hemispheres; yet surely it was unwise of Juarez to decree this at a time when it was hardly possible that any considerable portion of the results of the sale of these enormous possessions, and the confiscation of this vast wealth, could come into the public treasury. The decree added greatly to his enemies, and the proceeds did not avail to stave off financial difficulties for a single year. As Mr. Burke well observes, finance was Juarez' weakest point. Little opportunity indeed could he have had to master this part of the science of government. There were none to teach him, no sound precedents to guide him in his native land. Personally he was honest and incorrupt. We could wish to have heard more of his five years' presidency after the execution of Maximilian. This is not the most romantic, but it is the most instructive part of his career; and it is sadly scamped here. Let us be grateful, however, for what Mr. Burke gives us. His work will not have been written in vain if it helps in the least to do away with the remnants of that insolent and foolish contempt of the average Englishman for those whom he calls "niggers." Handicapped though they are by ancestral traditions of wrong suffered and of wrong done, they are sometimes of as great moral worth and of almost equal capacity and energy as himself. This is the lesson of the life of Juarez.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE hope has often been expressed that some of the many Sanskrit writings that were certainly carried to China during the Middle Ages might yet be found in that country. Hitherto no authentic information has been received, though Dr. Edkins caught sight of some inscribed palm-leaves in a ruined Buddhist monastery, in the province of Chekiang, about thirty years ago. This monastery was recently visited by Dr. A. O. Franke, a pupil of Prof. Kielhorn, of Göttingen, who was able to take photographs and tracings of the writing. It turns out to be in the Nepalese character of the twelfth or thirteenth century. We hope to print shortly Prof. Kielhorn's report on this interesting discovery, together with his transcript of the text, which is unfortunately in a very fragmentary condition.

A SERIES entitled "Studia Sinaitica" is being issued by the Cambridge University Press, from MSS. photographed in the convent library by Mrs. S. S. Lewis. Parts I and III. are catalogues of the Syriac and Arabic MSS. compiled by Mrs. Lewis and Mrs. Gibson, under the direction of the Archbishop of Mount Sinai. Part II. is an Arabic version of St. Paul's Epistles to the Romans, Corinthians, Galatians, and part of Ephesians, transcribed by Mrs. Gibson from a ninth century MS. As all Arabic versions hitherto known, with one doubtful exception, have been made by western scribes, the judgment of scholars with regard to this one is awaited with considerable interest. Part IV. is a tract of Plutarch's on the advantage to be derived from a man's enemies, transcribed by Mr. Rendel Harris from the Aristides MS., and edited by Dr. Eberhard Nestlé.

THE Clarendon Press will publish immediately, in a limited edition and handsomely printed, a volume of Latin Prose Versions, by various scholars, edited by Prof. G. G. Ramsay, of Glasgow. Among the contributors are Conington, Shilleto, Henry Nettleship, the present Archbishop of Canterbury, Prof. Robinson Ellis, Prof. Butcher, Prof. Postgate, the Rev. W. W. Merry, the Rev. E. C. Wickham, Dr. J. E. Sandys, Dr. J. S. Reid, Mr. Arthur Sidgwick, and Mr. E. D. A. Morshead.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co. have in the press a new work by Mr. David G. Ritchie, of Jesus College, Oxford, on Natural Rights. The first part will contain an historical sketch of the theory of natural rights and of the influence of the idea of "nature" in ethics and politics, followed by a philosophical analysis of the conception of "right." The second part will examine in detail the more important of the alleged natural rights, which have been conspicuous in the American and French Declarations—the question of toleration being discussed at greatest length. None of the contents of the book have previously appeared in print, except a chapter on "The Right of Property," which is published this month, in an Italian translation, in La Riforma Sociale. The work will form a volume in "The Library of Philosophy," of which Mr. J. H. Muirhead is editor.

MR. EDWARD CLODD will shortly issue, through Messrs. Longmans, an abridgment of his Story of Creation, under the title of "A Primer of Evolution." The book will be copy-righted in the United States.

MESSRS. RIVINGTON, PERCIVAL & Co. announce for early publication: Railway Policy in India, by Mr. Horace Bell, consulting engineer for State Railways to the Government of India. This work is, by permission, based upon the records of the Government, but must in no way be regarded as having any official authority.

MR. WILLIAM LE QUEUX's forecast, The Great War in England in 1897, will be published by the Tower Publishing Company early in June, illustrated by Mr. T. S. C. Crowther, who is responsible for the military pictures, and by Capt. Cyril Field, who has portrayed the naval incidents. In order that the descriptions of our forts and the topographical details shall be correct, the author has visited, in company with military and naval experts, every town and village in which hostilities are supposed to occur.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co. will publish immediately a novel by a new writer, Mr. John Meredith, entitled Laura Arbutnot. It deals with the efforts of an ostracised woman to reconstruct her life, and the attempts of other people to render such reconstruction impossible.

MESSRS. HENRY & Co. will publish next week a novel, in three volumes, by Mr. George Halse, entitled Phil Hathaway's Failures.

MR. ARTHUR L. SALMON is about to republish, with Messrs. Spottiswoode & Co., half a dozen of his poems from the magazines.

MAURUS JOKAI has granted to Mr. Louis Felbermann, the hon. secretary of the Hungarian Association in London, the sole right to translate and publish his works in Great Britain and the colonies.

THE titles of the publications to be issued under the direction of Mr. J. M. Stoddart (for many years editor of Lippincott's Magazine), are The New Science Review (a quarterly, to appear in July), and The Transatlantic (a monthly). The new periodicals will be published simultaneously in England and the United States.

A NEW edition of Scrivelsby: the Home of the Champions, by Mr. Samuel Lodge, is announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock. It has been revised and considerably enlarged, and now contains an extended pedigree of the Dymoke family.

IN the course of a month the first thousand of Mr. William Canton's little book, The Invisible Playmate, has been exhausted, and a second edition is on the point of publication. An American edition has also been arranged for.

MESSRS. SOUTHAM & Co., of St. Paul's buildings, Paternoster-row, have conceived the idea of compiling a Guide and Directory of Publishers, Periodicals, and Newspapers, with the special object of helping authors to ascertain beforehand where their MSS. are most likely to find acceptance. Messrs. Southam & Co. will be glad to receive any suggestions on the subject.

IN the list of "birthday" honours, are the names of Mr. Isaac Pitman, originator of the phonographic system of shorthand; and Mr. T. Wemyss Reid, editor of the Speaker, who have both been knighted. The following is the text of the letter which the Prime Minister addressed to Mr. Pitman on the occasion:—

"It is with great pleasure that I make the intimation to you that the Queen has been pleased to confer on you the honour of knighthood. I have recommended this distinction on the ground of your great services to stenography, and the immense utility of that art. It was always a cherished hope of mine to obtain a recognition of these, which it is a sensible satisfaction to have realised."

FROM Tuesday to Thursday of next week, Messrs. Sotheby will be engaged in selling the library of the late William Parker Hammond, of Pampisford Hall, near Cambridge. It is a good working collection of standard modern works in history, archaeology, and art; but it does not appear to include any of those rarities which are now alone sought after. We may, however, mention a copy of Pennant's Account of London (6 vols., 1805), illustrated with about 1300 additional portraits and plates.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE following is the list of those upon whom it is proposed to confer the honorary degree of D.C.L. at Oxford, at the ensuing Encaenia: the Earl of Kimberley, the Bishop of Peterborough, Sir Edward Fry (late Lord Justice), Lord Justice Davey, Captain Mahan, Prof. Palmer (of Dublin), Prof. J. H. Middleton (of Cambridge), Prof. W. M. Ramsay (of Aberdeen), M. Emile Boutmy, and Mr. Francis Galton.

THE Speaker of the House of Commons has been elected by the master and fellows of Balliol to be visitor of their college, in the room of the late Lord Bowen.

MR. G. W. PROTHERO, of King's College, has been approved by the general board of studies at Cambridge for the degree of doctor in letters. We understand that Mr. Prothero is a candidate for the newly-founded chair of history at Edinburgh.

AMONG the candidates for the chair of history at Glasgow are—Mr. Oscar Browning; Prof. Tout, of Owens College; Prof. Ashley, of Harvard; Prof. Montagu, of University College, London; and Mr. H. Morse Stephens.

THE election to the Adams chair of Arabic at Cambridge, vacant by the death of Prof. Robertson Smith, has been indefinitely postponed.

THE Rede Lecture at Cambridge will be delivered by Mr. J. W. Clark, Registry of the University, on Wednesday, June 13. The place chosen is one of the lecture rooms of the New Museum, on account of the convenience for illustrating the lecture with lantern slides. The subject is "The Position, Arrangement, and Fittings of Libraries during the Middle Ages and the Renaissance, with Special Notes on the System of Chaining Books."

PROF. RHYS will deliver a public lecture at Oxford next Friday, in the hall of Jesus College, upon "The Ancient Britons."

THE following have been appointed a select committee to prepare a statute for carrying into effect the resolutions recently adopted by Congregation at Oxford, for establishing new degrees to be conferred after a special course of study or research: The Provost of Oriel, Prof. Bywater, Prof. Poulton, Mr. Strachan-Davidson, the Rev. Hastings Rashdall, and Mr. Joseph Wells.

THE Oxford Magazine for May 30 contains an admirable obituary notice of the late George John Romanes, contributed by E. B. P.

MR. SIDNEY HICKSON, some time deputy professor of anatomy at Oxford, has been appointed to the Beyer chair of zoology in Owens College, Manchester, vacant by the death of Dr. A. Milnes Marshall.

THE Scottish Universities Commission have recently issued a draft ordinance for the encouragement of original research, which deserves the attention of those who are considering similar schemes at Oxford and Cambridge. The Senatus Academicus is empowered to make regulations, under which graduates and others may be permitted to engage in special study or scientific investigation within the university. The University Court may establish research fellowships, and may also make grants in aid of the expenses of special research. Research students may be admitted to the degrees of Doctor of Science and Doctor of Letters, after two years' residence, and on the presentation of an approved thesis; but it is provided that a period of not less than five years must have elapsed since their graduation in arts.

OBITUARY.

THE HON. RODEN NOEL

A WIDE circle of friends will have been shocked to hear the news of the death of Roden Noel. It is less than three weeks since he came up to London from his home in West Brighton to lecture on the poetry of Sir Samuel Ferguson before the Irish Literary Society—for he reckoned himself an Irishman on the mother's side. Then he started for a trip to the Continent, and died very suddenly from heart disease at Maintz. Up till a few years ago he had lived an active life, enjoying to the full walking, climbing (above all), swimming, and never so happy as when sharing the out-of-door pursuits of the common folk. These democratic sympathies were very conspicuous in his latest book, Poor People's Christmas. Not less marked in his character was a vein of mysticism, which was, perhaps, derived from the strange experiences he met with during an early tour in Eastern lands, and was certainly intensified by his philosophical studies. At heart he was a genuine poet, brimming over with enthusiasm, sympathy, and imagination. But, unfortunately, in these days of consummate craftsmanship, he was lacking in that one talent which so many of his inferiors possess. Also, he wrote too much; and posterity will remember him only in Anthologies. Those, however, who were privileged to know him, will long cherish his memory as a brilliant talker, an appreciative and charitable critic, and a most affectionate friend.

PROF. LEWIS FELMÉRI.

DR. LEWIS FELMÉRI, the newly elected Rector Magnificus of the University of Kolozsvár, died at that town on May 22, in the fifty-third year of his age.

Dr. Felméri's name was not unknown in London among those who are interested in education. He spent some time in England during the winter of 1879-80, having been sent on a mission by Dr. Trefort, Hungarian Minister for Worship and Education, to study and report on education in England. The result of his inquiries was contained in two stout octavo volumes, for which the Hungarian Academy of Sciences awarded him a prize. Of this report the present writer wrote a summary in Macmillan's Magazine, and it was also reviewed in the Journal of Education. He wrote besides a book on "The Theory of Education," and articles and reviews without number.

Born at Székely-Udvarhely, the son of poor parents, Dr. Felméri, as professor at Kolozsvár, was one of the founders of the Emke, a society for the maintenance of whatever is Hungarian in Transylvania.

A. J. P.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia for April contains the report of Señor Madrazo on Hinojosa's "Materiales para la Historia de España en el Archivo secreto de la Santa Sede." In eighteen months Hinojosa examined some 30,000 volumes of printed documents and MSS. in various collections in Rome and Italy, and gives a more or less detailed catalogue of them. The work will be indispensable to all students of Spanish history. The rest of the number is occupied with an account of the Councils of Carrión and León in the early years of the twelfth century, and notices of Roman remains that have been found recently in Almería and elsewhere.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- DEHIO, G. u. G. v. BEZOLD. Die kirchliche Baukunst des Abendlandes. 8. Lfg. Stuttgart: Cotta. 42 M.
DE LA FERRIÈRE, H. Deux Drames d'amour: Anne de Boleyn—Elisabeth. Paris: Ollendorff. 7 fr. 50 c.
DORISON, L. Alfred de Vigny et la poésie politique. Paris: Didier. 8 fr. 50 c.
FABINELLI, A. Grillparzer u. Lope de Vega. Berlin: Felber. 8 M. 50 Pf.
FRUTLET, Madame Octave. Quelques années de ma vie. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
FIDÈRE, O. Chaps: sa Vie et son Œuvre. Paris: Plon. 12 fr.
FILLION, E. Entre Slaves. Paris: Bellier. 8 fr. 50 c.
JACCOLLOT, L. Le Voyage au pays des jungles. Paris: Dentu. 4 fr.
REINACH, Joseph. Pages républicaines. Paris: Alcan. 8 fr. 50 c.
REISKIÖLD, la Baronne Waldemar de. "Le Carmel de la Vallée des Consuls. Paris: André. 5 f.
SÉBILLOT, P. Les travaux publics et les mines. Paris: Rothschild. 40 fr.
SÉOUR, Mémoires du général comte de. Un aide de camp de Napoléon. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 8 fr. 50 c.
TIERCK, H. Die Uebereinstimmung v. Kuno Fischers u. Hermann Türcks Hamlet-Erklärung. Jena: Mauke. 1 M. 20 Pf.
VERLY, A. L'Escadron des Cent-Gardes. Paris: Ollendorff. 7 fr. 50 c.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BISMARCK, Fürst v. Politische Reden. 10. Bd. 1894-5. Stuttgart: Cotta. 8 M.
GREVE, J. B. Geschichte der Benediktiner-Abtei Abdinghof in Paderborn. Paderborn: Junfermann. 2 M. 75 f.
ZAHN, A. Studien üb. Johannes Calvin. Gütersloh: Bertelsmann. 1 M. 60 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BRITZELMANS, M. Hymenomyces. XIII. Hymenomyces aus Südbayern. 10. Th. Berlin: Friedländer. 30 M.
KORN, A. E. Theorie der Gravitation u. der elektrischen Erscheinungen auf Grundlage der Hydrodynamik. 2. Th. 1. Abchn. Berlin: Dümmler. 5 M.
LAUCHE, W. Deutsche Pomologie. Berlin: Parey. 25 M.
MEYER, A. B. Die Philippinen. II. Negritos. Dresden: Stengel. 100 M.

PHILOLOGY, ARCHAEOLOGY, ETC.

- BLARE, H. Geschichte d. Plinquauperspekts im Lateinischen. Gießen: Ricker. 8 M.
CARRIÈRE, A. Nouvelles sources de Moïse de Khoren. Supplement. Wien: Gerold & Co. 3 M. 50 Pf.
HENRICH, J. Stellung des französischen Adjectivs. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M.
MORGENSTERN, O. Curse Catullianae. Gr.-Lichterfeld. 1 M.
SCHWABER, Th. Die Alexandriische Forentik. Untersuchungen üb. die griech. Goldschmiedekunst im Ptolemäerreich. 1. Th. Leipzig: Hitzel. 10 M.
STUDIIUM ZUM GERMANISCHEN ALLITERATIONSVERE. Hrg. v. M. Kaluza. 2. Hft. Berlin: Felber. 2 M. 40 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOME NEW GREEK PAPYRI.

Vienna: May 19, 1894.

In view of the controversy proceeding in the ACADEMY on the text of the Septuagint and the Bible, if for nothing else, your readers will probably be interested to hear about several Greek papyri and vellum fragments, which I obtained in Cairo.

Of these, far the most important is a papyrus containing Ezekiel v. 12 to vi. 3 in Origen's text of the Septuagint, as is shown by the use of the Hexaplaric signs. The papyrus is ascribed by Dr. Karl Wessely to the end of the third or the beginning of the fourth century A.D.: i.e., only fifty or sixty years after the death of Origen, and probably 300 years before the date of the earliest MS. of Ezekiel, which contains the readings of Origen, the Codex Marchalianus, ascribed to the seventh century. From this Codex the papyrus differs in several places.

Of less interest are a small fragment of the "Canticum Canticorum," perhaps of the seventh century, and four fragments of Homer, belonging to the first three or four centuries A.D. Of these the largest contains thirty-three lines of Book VIII. of the Iliad, the others belong to Books VIII. and XII. of the Iliad, and V. of the Odyssey.

The rest of the papyri consist mainly of letters and law-documents of the second, third, and fourth centuries. Among them may be mentioned a fragment of a Latin-Greek vocabulary, Greek characters being used for the Latin words; a document dated in the reign of Pertinax, an emperor whose name has been very rarely found in papyri; and the beginning of a contract written in uncials in 205-6 A.D., the fourteenth year of the emperors Septimius Severus, Caracalla, and Geta, whose name was subsequently erased.

The vellum fragments include small pieces of chaps. xii. and xiii. of Zacharias in the Septuagint, and of chap. viii. of St. Mark's Gospel, in uncial hands closely resembling those of the earliest Biblical codices, and therefore probably not later than the fifth century.

B. P. GRENFELL.

SOME ENGLISH ETYMOLOGIES.

Oxford: May 20, 1894.

As Mr. Bradley's Part of the New English Dictionary is now steadily progressing through the letter F, it may be well to place on record early instances of two f words which will be found in a volume of Old English interlinear glosses to Aldhelm and other authors that I hope to send to the press this summer.

The one is "fledged," Middle English fligge, flegge, for which the dictionaries give no quotation earlier than from the fifteenth century. In Skeat's Etymological Dictionary it is regarded as a Scandinavian loan-word, from Old Norse fleygr; but in the Transactions of the Cambridge Philological Society for 1881-2 Prof. Zupitza pointed out the impossibility of such a derivation, and showed that it must come from an unrecorded Old English flyge (Ettmüller cites the word, but without reference) = Modern German flügge, the English form "fledged" having the Kentish e in place of the Midland i. The word conjectured by Prof. Zupitza actually exists; for I recently met with an eleventh century instance of it among some glosses to the Fables of Avianus, where a scribe has explained the Latin inplumes by unfligge.

Of the word "flank" the dictionaries seem to record no instance earlier than about 1300, but it must have been introduced (probably from Old French) some two centuries before that; for in a Prudentius MS. in the British Museum I found a number of Old English glosses written apparently about the end of the eleventh century, and among them ilia = flances. As other English glosses in the same MS. have the weakened ending -es (for -as) in the plural (e.g., blaedes, oferfenges, strenges, &c.), there can be no doubt that this flances is an early instance of the use of the word in English.

In the preface to my History of the Holy Rood-Tree, I mentioned that the instance of the word "root" which occurs on page 4, was the oldest hitherto recorded (the MS. was written about 1150-1175). I had overlooked a somewhat earlier example in the Peterborough Chronicle for the year 1127, gif he mihte ben rotfest on Engleland (rotfest, "rootfast," is from Old Norse rotfastr).

The same Rood-Tree legend contains three early instances of the word "hoop"; to these I can now add a fourth, though somewhat later, example of the word from one of the MSS. of the so-called Consiliatio Cnuti recently edited by Liebermann. In the MS. belonging to the Earl of Leicester, written about 1230, there is an explanation given of the expression collarium canis, which runs as follows: "Anglice dicitur hundes hoppe quasi canis circularium, quia hóp = circulus" (cf. Liebermann, p. 29).

Of the word "Puck" the earliest instance given in the dictionaries is from the second half of the thirteenth century. In the Englische Studien xi. 511, Kluge called attention to an Old English gloss in the Prudentius MS. at Boulogne (ed. Holder, Germania, vol. xxiii.) which, as printed, reads, vagantes daemones = wandrigende wucan; and he suggested, no doubt rightly, that wucan has been misread for pucan. I have since found an undoubted example of the word in an Old English gloss (eleventh century) to Aldhelm's Riddles, where larbula is rendered by puca; and I believe we also have the same word in the pucan wyllle (goblin's well) which occurs in a charter of King Edmund, A.D. 946, relating to land in Somerset (Birch, Cart. Sax. ii., 575). We may, therefore, admit puca into our Old English dictionaries as a well authenticated word (cf. Old Norse púki). The derived form "puckle," which Halliwell cites as meaning "spirit, ghost," is the Old English pūcel (cf. Kluge, l.c.), and Kluge compares with it the Puculan cyrice (Pucklechurch, co. Gloucester) in the Chronicle.

ARTHUR S. NAIFER.

SOME OLD-ENGLISH PLACE-NAMES.

London: May 20, 1894.

The index to Kemble's Codex Diplomaticus identifies the Æwelburhe heme dicche of charter No. 654 with Alderbury in Wiltshire. The identification is, on the face of it, absurd, as the charter relates to land at Littleton-on-Severn, in Gloucestershire; but this is not the only blunder involved. The date of the charter is 986, but the schedule of boundaries as given by Kemble (from a MS. of the fourteenth century) is a modernised version in the orthography of the twelfth or thirteenth century. The scribe has mistaken a thorn for a wyn; the original reading must have been Æpelburhe-hæma dic, the dike of the inhabitants of Æthelburh's "hām"—Æthelburh being the name of a woman, not of a place.

Writers of histories of England are accustomed to say that King Alfred married "the daughter of Æthelred, surnamed the Mickle, ealdorman of the Gainas, whose name survives in Gainsborough" (Freeman, article "Ælfred" in the Dictionary of National Biography). Now Gegnesburh certainly does not mean "the fort of the Gainas," for the first element of the name is a genitive singular; and, so far as my knowledge goes, there is not a particle of evidence that Asser's Gaini lived near Gainsborough at all. If that writer's Æthelred Mucil is the same person as the "Mucel dux," "Mucel dux," who subscribes various charters, it would seem more likely that he had to do with Western than with Eastern Mercia. The name cannot be the Old-English mycel. I do not know it as a Welsh name, or I should think he might have been a Briton who had assumed the name of Æthelred on his marriage with the Mercian princess, Eadburh. It would be well to discard the pseudo-English form Gainas, as there is a possibility that Asser's Gains may be a formation of his own with the Latin suffix -inus, though it may represent an O.E. Gegnas or Gaingas.

* In 836 he obtained a life interest in ten hides of land in Worcestershire. In 840 he subscribed a charter relating to Bromyard in Herefordshire. Is it a mere coincidence that in Bromyard parish there is a place called Gaines?

It is stated in many popular books that the name of Anglesey means "Englishmen's island." Apart from the intrinsic unlikelihood of this meaning, the Old-English expression of it would have been Engla-ig, which would have given some such modern form as Ingley. The name is the Old-Norse Önguls-ey, perhaps meaning "the island of the strait."

HENRY BRADLEY.

CHAUCER'S TOWN OF LEPE.

Cambridge: May 28, 1894.

Chaucer mentions the town of Lepe twice in his Pardoner's Tale, and tells us it is in Spain. Tyrwhitt says that, according to the geographers, it is not far from Cadiz. I find a fuller account in Pineda's Spanish Dictionary (1740):

"Lepe, a Town in the Province of Andalusia in Spain, on the banks of the river Salies, not far from Ayamonte, and half a league from the Sea; has a good old Castle, a fruitful Territory, 700 Inhabitants, one Parish, one Monastery of Friars, and one of Nuns. Anciently called Leptis."

Ayamonte is very easy to find, for it is close to the southern extremity of the boundary between Spain and Portugal. It thus appears that Lepe was the nearest place to England whence wines could come from the South of Spain.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, June 3, 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Religion and Doctrine," by Prof. E. S. Beesley.

MONDAY, June 4, 4.50 p.m. Victoria Institute: "Causes of the Ice Age," by Mr. Warren Upham.

5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.

7.30 p.m. Carlyle Society: "Ruskin and Economics," by Dr. W. C. Coupland.

8 p.m. Aristotelian: "The Immateriality of the Rational Soul," by Dr. W. L. Gildes.

TUESDAY, June 5, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Modern Microscope," III, by the Rev. W. H. Dallinger.

5 p.m. Anglo-Russian Literary Society: "Russian Ideals," by Mr. K. Kushkeff.

8 p.m. Biblical Archaeology: "An Unknown Aramaic Version, by Theodosius of Rome, of the Song of the Three Children," by the Rev. Dr. E. Gaster; "The God Ninip," by Mr. Theo. G. Pinches.

8.30 p.m. Zoological: "The Opossums of the Serra dos Orgaos, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil," by Dr. S. A. Gould; "The New Algerian Gazelle, Gazella ledleri," by Mr. G. Thomas; "Necrolemur and its Affinities, and Retrogressive Evolution in the Lemnroids and the Mammals generally," by Dr. C. I. Forsyth Major; "An Abnormal Vertebral Column of the Bull-frog," by Dr. W. Benham.

WEDNESDAY, June 6, 4 p.m. Archaeological Institute: "An Early Seventeenth Century Contract for the making of an Organ for the Chapel in Chirk Castle by a hitherto unrecorded Organ-maker," by Dr. E. J. Hopkins; "Certain Methods of Electing Heads of Societies practised in the Middle Ages," by Dr. J. Wickham Legg.

8 p.m. Geological: "The Banded Structure of Some Tertiary Gabbros in the Isle of Skye," by Sir Archibald Geikie and Mr. J. J. H. Teall; "The Carboniferous Dolerites and Tuffs of Derbyshire," by Mr. H. H. Arnold-Bemrose; "The Origin of the Permian Breccias of the Midlands, and a Comparison of them with the Upper Carboniferous Glacial Deposits of India and Australia," by Mr. R. D. Oldham.

8 p.m. Elizabethan: "Spenser's Heroines," by Mr. L. Arthur Edmonson.

THURSDAY, June 7, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Egyptian Decorative Art," III, by Prof. Petrie.

8 p.m. Linnean: "Stipules and the Protection of Buds," by Sir John Lubbock.

8 p.m. Chemical: "The Nature of Phosphorescence," by Mr. Herbert Jackson; "The Crystallography of the Normal Sulphates of Potassium Rubidium and Caesium," by Mr. A. E. Tutton; "The Boiling Points of Homologous Compounds," II, by Dr. James Walker.

8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.

FRIDAY, June 8, 9 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Newtonian Constant of Gravitation," by Mr. C. V. Boys.

SATURDAY, June 9, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Stage and Society," III, by Mr. R. W. Lowe.

8.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

4 p.m. Zoological: "Sketches in Geographical Distribution," IV, by Mr. F. E. Beddard.

SCIENCE.

SOME BOOKS ON CHEMISTRY.

Essays in Historical Chemistry. By T. E. Thorpe. (Macmillans.) Prof. Thorpe has been well advised in gathering into a single volume a dozen lectures, addresses, and memoirs, in which, from time to time, he had discussed the discoveries of many eminent workers in chemistry and chemical physics. The work does not profess to offer a complete history of the sciences of which it treats: the names of Black, Dalton, Davy, Berzelius, Liebig, and Hofmann, are indeed only incidentally mentioned. But we are here presented with well-drawn studies of Robert Boyle, Michael Faraday, and Thomas Graham among the physicists, and of Joseph Priestley, Henry Cavendish, Antoine Laurent Lavoisier, Friedrich Wöhler, Jean Baptiste André Dumas, Hermann Kopp, and Dmitri Ivanowitch Mendeleeff among the chemists. The volume concludes with a chapter on modern synthetic chemistry, which may be said to date from the year 1828, when Wöhler effected the transformation of the artificial salt ammonium cyanate into the natural base, urea. There is a tendency, even among men of culture, to confuse the sciences of chemistry and physics. For example, Faraday is constantly spoken of as a great chemist. The confusion has been emphasised of recent years by the fact that several important chairs of chemistry are now occupied by physicists. Moreover, the two sciences have become more and more interwoven, physical conceptions having served to explain many of the purely chemical properties and transformations of matter. It is not, therefore, to be wondered at that a very large number of Prof. Thorpe's pages are occupied with an account of discoveries in physics. All is clearly told in simple language; nor are the picturesque and playful touches, which impart vitality to biographical sketches, wanting in these essays. The author can be emphatic enough when occasion demands, as in his authoritative defence (pp. 110-141) of the claims of Priestley and Cavendish to certain important discoveries which M. Berthelot, the perpetual secretary of the Académie des Sciences, virtually assigns to Lavoisier. Lavoisier did indeed overthrow the theory of phlogiston, but he did not discover oxygen, nor the composition of water. The book before us is well printed, and its component essays have been carefully revised. There are, however, a few misprints and mistakes which have escaped correction. Robert Boyle, the seventh son of an earl, is not accurately described as a "young nobleman" (p. 3). The year 1703 (p. 96) is given as the date on which Lavoisier, who was not born until 1743, was placed on the Administrative Committee of the Ferme-général. On p. 284 the word "tubes" has been substituted for cubes, destroying the sense of the statement. And the common mistake of compositors and chemical beginners in writing "phosphorous," when the element phosphorus is meant, is perpetrated on p. 352.

Physiological Chemistry of the Animal Body. By Arthur Gamgee. (Macmillans.) Though practically an independent work, this textbook forms the second volume of a treatise, of which the first volume was published in 1880 under the above title, and in which the elementary tissues of the animal body, including the blood, the lymph, and the chyle, were discussed from the chemical standpoint. The work now before us is devoted to the consideration of the physiological chemistry of digestion in health and in disease. It is a great deal more than a well-ordered compilation. Not only have all the more important original memoirs bearing on his subject been consulted; but Dr. Gamgee has critically weighed the conclusions of other physiologists, modifying or extending them, in not a few instances, by means of researches conducted by himself. It would be impossible, within the limits of a necessarily brief notice, to offer a detailed estimate of the value of Dr. Gamgee's text-book; one can but commend it in general terms as affording the fullest and most exact account, in the English language, of the physiological chemistry of digestion. To this most inadequate expression of approval may be added a few words as to the arrangement and mode of treatment of the subjects discussed in the volume. The author begins by describing the production and the functions of saliva, adding at the close of chap. i. directions for its analysis. Gastric digestion and the gastric juice are next discussed in the same manner, but with the greater fulness which the importance of these subjects demands. Chap. iii. is occupied with an account of the pancreas, pancreatic juice, and pancreatic digestion. The bile and its numerous constituents are treated of in the two succeeding chapters; while in chaps. vi., vii., and viii. are described jaundice and the action of cholagogues, the formation of biliary calculi, and the analysis of bile and biliary products. The intestinal canal, the intestinal juice, and the action of intestinal micro-organisms, are fully discussed in the light of recent investigations, in chapters ix. to xi. The large intestine and the processes of which it is the seat are described in chapter xii. A concluding chapter treats of the modifications observed in the chemical processes of digestion in some divisions of the animal kingdom. The volume concludes with six appendices, most of which are devoted to chemical methods as applied to physiological laboratory work. We are glad to see that the author has availed himself of the masterly researches of Dr. C. A. MacMunn in the spectroscopy of biliary pigments (see the coloured plates, i. and ii.). Two misprints only, not noticed in the corrigenda, have we met with. The second of them, which occurs in the table on page 132, is the more important, and will, we fear, puzzle any student who is working through this text-book. Twenty-seven percentages are wrongly given, owing to the order of the elements having been changed from nitrogen, sulphur, oxygen, to oxygen, nitrogen, sulphur. Readers of this table will be surprised to see that the albumoses contain 24 per cent. of sulphur and little more than 1 per cent. of nitrogen. The other misprint, for so it seems, will be found on page 121, in the schema of proteid decomposition by acids, where the names of the three end-products—hemipeptone, leucin, and tyrosin—are printed twice over.

The Alchemical Essence and the Chemical Element. By M. M. P. Muir. (Longmans.) The alternative title of this booklet is "An Episode in the Quest of the Unchanging." It is a well-written essay, discussing the problem of the essential unity of matter without throwing any new light on it, unless the suggestion (p. 90) as to the constitution of the hydrogen-atom be really novel. It is difficult to see why these pages have been published in a separate form, or to define the class of readers for whose instruction they were intended. Yet they may serve as a caution against the revival of the unfruitful speculations of the alchemists.

Manures and the Principles of Manuring. By C. M. Aikman. (Blackwoods.) This technical manual contains several well-written chapters, such as those on "Nitrogen in relation to Agriculture," "Nitrification," and "Farm-yard Manure." But the book is not uniformly good. The author has not studied the Jahresbericht der Agrikultur-Chemie, the Versuchs-stationen, and the Annales Agronomiques as he ought to have done. He has relied too much on second-hand authorities. It is really too late in the day to quote the threadbare analyses, now a third of a century old, of the late Prof. W. Anderson. He relegates precise figures and exact details to appendices, and these are for the most part inadequate or inaccurate. His mineralogy and geology are seriously at fault. It is particularly unfortunate that a figure has been omitted in the expression for one of the most important compounds in agricultural chemistry; for Mr. Aikman gives (p. 210)  $\text{Ca}(\text{PO}_4)_2$  as the formula for tribasic calcium phosphate. Is not "calcareous stones" (p. 211) a too vague expression? What is "Lias chalk?" And how can felspar be said (p. 211) to contain 1·7 per cent. of phosphoric acid?

THE GREEK HYMNS FROM DELPHI.

WE have received a reprint from the Bulletin de Correspondance Hellénique (Paris: Thorin), the organ of the French School at Athens, containing two papers on the hymns with music discovered in the course of the excavations at Delphi. M. Henri Weil writes on the text; and M. Théodore Reinach—"qui est musicien, et qui sait de la musique des anciens autant qu'il nous est donné d'en savoir"—on the music. There was first found, it seems, a Paean to the Pythian Apollo, engraved on a stele, in characters that are roughly assigned to one of the three centuries before the Christian era. It is preserved almost complete, together with a decree of the Delphians voting honours to the poet, whose name was Aristonoos. M. Weil prints the text in the uncials and irregular lines of the original, and then divides it into six double stanzas. The metre is Glyconian, as in Anacreon and in the familiar poem of Catullus: "Dianae sumus in fide." He also points out the following compound words, not found elsewhere—ἱερὸνικτος, θεοπιδμάντις, χαλκρότομος, εὐλίβανος, εὔπονος, and ἐξαβρόνω. This hymn has no musical notation. Those which have are unfortunately in fragments, including four large pieces and a number of small ones. They belong to two hymns, one in the Paeanic and the other in the Glyconian metre, which are also distinguished by a different musical notation. From a reference to the attempt of the Gauls on Delphi, the date of the Paeanic hymn is probably circa 278 B.C. If two large fragments are joined together, about thirty more or less complete lines can be deciphered. Apart from the musical notation, it is interesting to find that a vowel or diphthong is repeated, when it is intended to be sung on two notes: e.g., Δεελφίσιν, φοοίβον; and that certain diphthongs are not repeated, but divided into their elements: e.g., ταούρων, εούδδρον. This last shows, if proof were still needed, that v in these diphthongs still preserved its original value of u. Other curious forms are ῶασι and κλυταιῖ. One of the smaller fragments in Paeanic metre is accompanied with instrumental (not vocal) notation. Another small fragment, which is apparently in Glyconian metre, is dated in the archonship of Euthydemos, which M. Homolle places circa 40 B.C. Following after M. Weil's restoration of the text, M. Reinach transcribes the melody in modern musical notation. For the performance of this difficult task, he was greatly assisted by the discovery that almost all the signs employed are identical with those assigned by Alypius to the chromatic variety of the Phrygian "tone." The time is five-eighths, and several of the progressions sound unusual to our ears. The musical signs employed are modifications of the letters of the Ionic alphabet, each note being placed roughly over the corresponding syllable of the text; but if the same pitch is to be sustained over successive syllables, then the note is written only once, over the first syllable. Finally, M. Reinach points out how greatly the style of the music is varied to suit the sentiment of the poetry, and suggests a comparison with Wagner.

OBITUARY.

BRIAN HODGSON.

THE Nestor of the Indian Civil Service, and one of the greatest of English orientalists, died on May 23, at 48, Dover-street, Piccadilly, in the ninety-fifth year of his age.

Brian Houghton Hodgson was born in 1800, at Macclesfield, being the eldest son of a banker there. After a school education at that town and at Richmond, he entered Haileybury College in 1816, where he won prizes for classics and Bengali. Among his contemporaries were Sir George Russell Clerk, twice Governor of Bombay; and Sir Frederick Currie, Resident at Lahore after the first Sikh War. Sir Walter Elliot, of Madras, who shared his scientific curiosity, was two years his junior. Having received a writership on the Bengal establishment, he landed at Calcutta in 1818, the year of Warren Hastings' death; his term of service was finished before Lord Hardinge became Governor-General; he survived into the viceroyalty of the second Earl of Elgin. Almost all his period of public work was spent in Nepal, where he was appointed secretary in 1820 and Resident in 1831. When he first went to Kathmandu, the Gurkha nobles hardly accepted the results of their prolonged war with the Company, and still chafed against being restricted to their Himalayan valleys. Dynastic revolutions, assassinations of ministers, intrigues with the native courts of India, were matters of common occurrence; for the dominant and pacific genius of Jang Bahadur had not yet risen upon the scene. Brian Hodgson, by his profound knowledge of the people, their country, language and religion, succeeded in making the British name not only feared but respected, and in smoothing the path for his successors. His chief diplomatic glory was to obtain from the Darbar a promise of military assistance at the crisis of the Afghan War. But, for some reason, he fell under the displeasure of Lord Ellenborough, who sent Henry Lawrence to supersede him in 1843. Brian Hodgson forthwith resigned the service, and came home. But within two years he was back again in India, where he settled at Darjiling, to continue his researches, and to enjoy the company of his friend, Dr. Archibald Campbell. He finally returned to England in 1858, and lived in dignified retirement, enjoying the out-of-door pursuits of an English country gentleman, near Wotton-under-Edge, in Gloucestershire. Like Warren Hastings, he only emerged from obscurity to receive the honorary degree of D.C.L., which Oxford conferred upon him at the Encaenia of 1889, in company with Sir Alfred Lyall, nearly forty years his junior in the service. We believe that he retained his intellectual powers, and his interest in things oriental, almost to the last.

Brian Hodgson wrote no great book, nor made any original discovery of the first importance, such as are associated with the names of Prinsep and Rawlinson and Cunningham. His chief merit is to have utilised his unique opportunities for collecting materials with extraordinary industry and zeal. At the beginning of the century Nepal was a terra incognita, even less known than Tibet. To this day it is jealously closed to European travellers, except the favoured few who are permitted to shoot tigers in the Tarai or to search for MSS. at Kathmandu. Brian Hodgson was not allowed to explore Nepal himself; but by his personal influence with the governing class, by interviewing all strangers who came to the court, and by sending out native collectors in every direction, he was able to accumulate an immense storehouse of trustworthy information about the people and the country. The results are to be found partly in the numerous papers which he contributed to the Asiatic Society of Bengal, but still more in the invaluable collections of MSS. and specimens of natural history, with which he enriched the museums of Europe as well as of India.

Just seventy years ago Brian Hodgson published in Asiatic Researches (vol. xvi.), his famous "Notices of the Languages, Literature, and Religion of the Banddhas of Nepal and Bhot," which revealed to Western scholars the preservation of what is known as the Northern Canon of Buddhism. It was from the MSS. he then sent to Paris that Eugène Burnouf was enabled to undertake the first accurate examination of the origins of Buddhism; and it was to him, as "the founder of the true study of Buddhism," that Burnouf dedicated his posthumous Le Lotus de la Bonne Foi (1852). Of scarcely less importance was his acquisition of the great Tibetan Encyclopaedia, in 334 volumes, which now repose in the library of the India Office. This was given him by the Dalai Lama, who further showed his good will by sending him all that remained of the library of the Catholic mission at Lhasa, which he presented to the Pope.

Another philological matter in which Brian Hodgson specially interested himself was the spoken languages of India. He was the first to collect vocabularies of the unwritten dialects of the hill-tribes, from as far south as the Nilgiris and Ceylon; and he was a strenuous advocate for vernacular education, against the views of those who argued for instruction either in the classical languages or in English. The minuteness of his research may be inferred from the fact that he has recorded no less than seventeen dialects of Kiranti, spoken by the broken tribes of Nepal. His monograph on the Koch, Bodo, and Dhimal is often referred to as a classical example of the method to preserve not only the language but also the manners and customs of a dying race.

Brian Hodgson was equally devoted to natural history. He used sometimes to fill an entire volume of the Journal of the Bengal Asiatic Society with descriptions of beasts and birds from the Himalayan regions, which are full of details of structure, and sometimes illustrated with plates. He had a passion for discovering new species: no less than eleven of the Mammalia of India are named after him, while among the Aves he has the honour of a genus to himself. It was he who published the first description of that strange creature, the Budorcas or takin—half goat, half antelope—which no European seems to have seen alive, though there are stuffed specimens of it at Cromwell-road. Here again he was most generous in giving, both to the Asiatic Society of Bengal and to the British Museum.

Nor is this all. Towards the solution of many practical questions, Brian Hodgson did pioneer work. He was one of the earliest to study geographically the mountain system of the Himalayas, and to utilise the evidence of natives for recording the trade routes across Tibet. He reported on the possibilities of commerce between Nepal and British territory, which has now attained such large dimensions. He was the first to advocate the enrolment of Gurkha battalions in the native army of the Company. He also deserves the credit of calling attention to the salubrity of the sub-Himalayas, long before either Simla or Darjiling was discovered. To him, therefore, we owe indirectly not only the improved health of Europeans in India, but also the economical results that have followed from the introduction of tea and cinchona.

It is noteworthy that Brian Hodgson never received any mark of distinction from his own government, seeing that so many Anglo-Indians of to-day can display two or three orders. France gave him the Legion of Honour, a medal specially struck by the Société Asiatique, and the corresponding membership of the Institute. The Asiatic Society of Bengal had a bust of him placed in their rooms when he retired from the service in 1843. He was also F.R.S., and (as already stated) D.C.L. of Oxford. His real distinction is his works, of which three collected volumes were published—in 1874 and 1880. There is also a rare volume of his papers relating specially to Buddhism, which was printed at the Serampur Press in 1841.

J. S. C.

SCIENCE NOTES.

MESSRS. TAYLOR & FRANCIS have sent us a new volume of The Fauna of British India, which is being published for the Government of India, under the general editorship of Mr. W. T. Blandford. It is the second volume devoted to Moths: and, like the first volume, has been compiled by Mr. G. F. Hampson. A third volume will, it is hoped, be ready before the end of the year. The three families dealt with here are the Arctiidae, the Agaristidae, and the Noctuidae, the total number of species being more than fifteen hundred. The careful descriptions are in many cases assisted by woodcuts, which themselves number 325. When complaints are heard against the parsimony of the Indian Government since the downfall of the Company, their support of this elaborate publication must be reckoned to their credit.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE last meeting of the Society of Biblical Archaeology for the present session will be held on Tuesday next, for which the following papers are promised: "An Unknown Aramaic Version, by Theodosius of Rome, of the Song of the Three Children," by the Rev. Dr. Gaster; and "The God Ninip," by Mr. Theo. G. Pinches, of the British Museum.

MR. GEORGE A. GRIERSON, hon. philological secretary of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, has been appointed C.I.E.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

HISTORICAL.—(Thursday, May 24.)

HUBERT HALL, Esq., director, in the chair.—Messrs. G. W. Prothero and Alfred Kingston were elected fellows of the society.—A paper was read by Mr. A. G. Little, on "The Educational Organisation of the Mendicant Friars in England," in which the system of the schools was described with great minuteness and with interesting details from original sources of information. The paper will be printed in the Transactions of the society.

HELLENIC SOCIETY.—(Monday, May 28.)

F. C. PENROSE, Esq., vice-president, in the chair.—Miss Sellers read a paper on a head formerly in the Palazzo Borghese, and now in the possession of Mr. Humphry Ward. The head (which was exhibited to the society) is of Parian marble and remarkably well preserved. From its technical and artistic excellence it is clearly a Greek original, and it presents affinities to a series of works ranging from the later archaic statues of the Acropolis Museum to the earlier works of the Phidian period. Miss Sellers suggested, for reasons given, that it might be attributed to the school of Kalamis, and that the head belonged to a statue of Aphrodite.—Prof. Percy Gardner read a paper by his brother, Mr.

Ernest Gardner, on "The Paintings of Panaenus at Olympia." These paintings are described by Pausanias as adorning the screen which prevented visitors at Olympia from "passing underneath the throne" of the colossal figure of Zeus. Hitherto this screen has been regarded as a series of slabs let in between the columns of the temple and crossing the cella in front of the statue. Mr. Gardner's paper went to show that they were on panels in the lower part of the throne itself.—Both papers will appear, with illustrations, in the next number of the Journal of Hellenic Studies.

FINE ART.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

III.

MR. R. W. MACBETH has not for some years sent to the Academy so good a picture as "The Coming Storm," though it too closely resembles in composition more than one of its immediate predecessors, and, moreover, the chief motive in the whole series has apparently been suggested by the famous "La Malaria" of M. Hébert in the Luxembourg. There is to be noted here a certain hardness of colour and execution, which seems inseparable from Mr. Macbeth's productions; but the landscape, with its rain-laden, threatening sky, and the long stretch of winding river, along which the eye runs right into the canvas, is excellently well rendered.

There is shown a certain cleverness in the rendering of artificial light, a certain skill in hard photographic portraiture, in M. Chevallier Tayler's "Gentlemen, the Queen!"—an after-dinner mess scene, taken at the moment when, the Queen's health being proposed, all present rise to their feet. It must be owned, however, that the picture is not a thing of beauty, or sufficiently novel or representative in truth to excuse the absence of beauty.

The brush of the master makes itself felt in Mr. J. S. Sargent's portrait, "Miss Chanler," as in everything that he does, and especially in the Velasquez-like touch with which the cushions and accessories are rendered; but somehow the portrait is a portrait without a physiognomy. It is inexpressive, and negative in characterisation: defects very rarely to be found in this artist's strongly self-assertive work. His influence can clearly be traced in Mr. Luke Fildes's "Mrs. Pantia Ralli," in which the colour-chord of canary yellow and steel-grey is bold in idea, rather than successful in realisation.

No two portraits here show more distinctiveness of conception, or higher imaginative power in the evocation of a human personality, than the "Robert Bridges, Esq." and the "Lord Roberts of Candahar," of Mr. Charles W. Furse. The former canvas presents—in an all-pervading and not very attractive light-grey tonality—the well-known lyrical and dramatic poet in what appears to a moment of literary parturition, the suggestion of suspended production and mental grapple being finely rendered. The "Lord Roberts of Candahar" is a vigorous and decorative equestrian portrait, characterised by a happy suggestion of concentrated yet well restrained energy, and, with it, by a certain elegance of design and arrangement such as would qualify the picture for execution on a greatly enlarged scale. It is a pity that the artist should import an element of affectation into a performance of serious worth, by giving to the canvas a factitious tone: a sort of patina such as only time and dirt can legitimately superimpose on the surface of a painting.

One of the best composed and altogether ablest portraits of the year, notwithstanding the dirty quality of the flesh and the greenish shadows, is Mr. William Carter's "John R. Magrath, D.D., Provost of Queen's College, Oxford," in which the treatment of the black academic robes is especially to be admired. Virile portraits of men of mature age and strongly marked character, are, indeed, one of the features of the present exhibition. Harsh and weak at the same time as is the Hon. John Collier's colour, his portraits, "Professor Burdon-Sanderson, F.R.S.," and "Dr. H. A. Morgan," are powerful and distinctive performances, showing something of the inside as well as the outside of the men whom the painter undertakes to depict. They are in happy contrast with the female portraits exhibited by the same artist on many other occasions, in which there is rarely to be found either pictorial beauty or true character. Nothing, indeed, is more striking than the failure of the modern artist in the great majority of cases to impart a measure of feminine suavity and charm to female portraits—or rather, to put our meaning more accurately, to extract that quality where it lies lurking in the originals.

The inequalities of Mr. J. J. Shannon's style and execution are very conclusively shown on the present occasion, since the Academy has to show one of his best and one of his weakest portraits. The former is the "Mrs. Claude Magniac," the latter the "Countess of Radnor." The first-named picture is original in composition, strongly yet agreeably characterised, and painted with greater refinement and a more personal charm, yet with not less vigour, than Mr. Shannon generally has at command.

An element of nobility and steadfastness marks Mr. Oulless's portraits and causes them to stand a little apart from their fellows, notwithstanding the mannerisms of his powerful yet dry and unsatisfying technique. In the three-quarter length "Sir John Gladstone, Bart.," showing an officer in the undress uniform of the Guards, he has a noble subject—a very type of that virility and that simplicity of bearing which are characteristic of English manhood—and he has done thorough justice to it. The same qualities make Mr. Oulless's "Major-General Sir Francis Grenfell, K.C.B.," noticeable amid its surroundings, though not in quite so agreeable a fashion as the portrait just referred to. The circumstance that the proportions of the figure are somewhat over life-size may account for a certain truculence and self-assertiveness of aspect, as apart from energy, which detracts appreciably from a strong and spirited performance. Mr. Oulless's searching truth in the modelling of the features might well serve as an example to Prof. Hubert Herkomer, whose modelling in this series of male portraits of his, which it seems hardly necessary to enumerate by their titles, remains, what it was, showy and superficial, rather than solid and really structural.

Among other male portraits of merit we may particularise the following:—Sir George Reid's "Professor Blackie," broad and free, if a little coarse in execution, and informed with an appropriately national and North British spirit; "The Rt. Hon. A. J. Mundella, M.P.," done in the Oulless style by Mr. Arthur S. Cope; the curious "Hans Lithy, Esq.," by Mr. Isaac Snowman, a picture which follows the spectator about with piercing steel-grey eyes; and Mr. Rudolf Lehmann's capital "Barry Pain," in which he has very happily given the attitude and the expression proper to the man of thought as distinguished from the man of action. The half-unconscious gesture with which the well-known humourist removes his pipe from his mouth, while he catches at some fleeting shade of thought, is very delicately observed.

Appropriately dramatic, appropriately theatrical in pose and general conception, is

Mr. Solomon J. Solomon's "Mrs. Patrick Campbell as Paula Tanqueray." The brilliant actress is depicted in a moment of agitation, sitting at a table immediately under a strong lamp, from which rays of tinted light are cast upon her face and figure. A clever and striking, if not a very subtle, presentment is much marred by flimsiness of execution, the modelling both of face and drapery being unnecessarily sketchy.

In landscape the tendency is everywhere in the direction of increased dimensions and increased decorativeness of aspect; and yet it is in this branch of art that the foreign influence, which is now so fast encroaching on all sides, has penetrated least deeply.

Of those popular painters and established favourites of a certain section of the public, Mr. Peter Graham, Mr. McWhirter, Mr. Leader, it does not appear necessary to say anything on the present occasion, since we should only repeat what we have said many a time before. Even the vigorous performances of that ever-green veteran, Mr. Hook, while they betray no sensible decline in execution, shows no such new features as to call for any fresh description or discussion. Again, Mr. Henry Moore, though his limited art is not less than consummate of its kind, makes his white-crested waves break in the same crisp fashion, and his blue seas heave and play with the same buoyant cheerfulness as heretofore: there is no new departure, whether as regards point of view or execution, to record.

One of the most interesting things here is "The Close of a Stormy Day: Vale of Clwyd," by Mr. John Finnie—less because it is the work of an artist who possesses the secrets of his craft, than because it is the outcome of a power to divine nature in a solemn mood, and to evoke in the spectator the emotion naturally corresponding to that mood. The work of a poet, too, rather than a thoroughly skilled painter, is the canvas which hangs as a pendant to it, the beautiful sunrise by Mr. Ridley Corbet, called "Morning Glory."

The best thing that Mr. Ernest Parton has yet done, and an agreeable departure from the too well-worn formulae of former years, is the fair evening landscape, "When lingering daylight welcomes night's pale green." The hushed quiet of this scene of solitude, wrapped in a twilight air silvered already by the beams of the rising moon, is soothing to behold and soothing to remember, as a contrast to the discords of some of its garish yet unimpressive companions.

Spacious, well laid out, pleasant to look upon, is Mr. Alfred East's "Sunlit Harbour," with its foreground of luxuriant summer garden, strongly recalling one of Cecil Lawson's best-known landscapes, and its far-stretching prospect, gilded here and there with the rays of an afternoon sun. We wish only that this artist would show less timidity and more truth in his rendering of the veiled brilliancy of English sunlight.

Mr. David Murray has evidently been painting in Dorsetshire this last year, and mainly in and round Corfe Castle, which, if we mistake not—for his poetical titles afford no clues—is the central feature of his two principal contributions to the year's exhibition. The great square keep on its abruptly sloping hill-side, with its walls lighted up by the sunset, is an imposing feature in the vast landscape, "Peace at Eve"; but this, like its lesser companion, "Long after," suffers much from the scattered, straggling character of the composition, and the retention in it of some elements not in themselves essential or valuable for pictorial purposes, and serving chiefly to rob the scene of its power to impress itself on the eye and mind as a congruous whole.

The superficial observer, seeing for the first time Mr. Alfred Parsons's "Sunset after Rain" with its flaming sky, one threatening glow from end to end, may be apt to exclaim, not exactly in compliment, and to pass on. And yet the picture has narrowly missed being a very fine one. The vision of the simple yet striking subject is a powerful, a poetical, yet a boldly realistic one; the execution, in Mr. Parsons's own sincere but hard and over-deliberate style, is not that which is best suited to express it.

After the complete success achieved by Mr. Thomas Somerscales last year, connoisseurs and the public awaited his next picture with the greatest interest and curiosity. If in the large canvas, "A Summer Afternoon in the Atlantic a Hundred Years Ago," he has done nothing new, it cannot be said that he has disappointed expectation. The Catalogue tells us that the ships of last-century fashion which crowd the surface of the blue palpitating sea, modelled and painted in the same consummate fashion which caused last year's canvas to be so much admired, are the English and French fleets at the close of the fight off Ushant, June 1, 1794. The sea, which the artist has seen and studied with loving care, is true and convincing; the ships, which he must have been compelled to evolve out of his inner consciousness with the aid of hulks and models, are less so. The two elements—the seen and the imagined—somehow do not coalesce, so as to make up a scene which the spectator can without effort accept as an indivisible whole.

CLAUDE PHILLIPS.

EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND.

THE seventh ordinary general meeting of the Egypt Exploration Fund was held on May 23 in the large room of the Zoological Society, 3, Hanover-square, the president, Sir John Fowler, Bart., in the chair. The balance sheet and financial report for 1892-3 were then placed before the members, and official statements made as to the progress of the society's work, especially with regard to new arrangements which had been made for the conduct of its undertakings. The hon. secretary, Prof. R. S. Poole, was unavoidably absent.

The financial report was read by the hon. treasurer, Mr. H. A. Grueber, who first dealt with the accounts of the Egypt Exploration Fund, as apart from those of its Archaeological Survey (for the latter separate subscription has always been asked), showing that the expenditure for the year 1892-3 had been about £2140. This sum included M. Naville's expenses at Deir el Bahari, those involved by the continuation of Count d'Hulst's work at Behbeit el Hagar and by the transport of heavy antiquities from El Bersheh, Beni Hasan, and Tell Mokhdam, the cost of publications, and also ordinary and extraordinary office expenses. It further included an item of £146, representing the expenses incurred by Mr. Rogor and Mr. Howard Carter, when directed by the committee to continue the excavation for the recovery of the Mendes or Thmuis library at Tmei el Amdid, a work which M. Naville had commenced in the previous year. Unfortunately, on account of the absence of M. de Morgan in Upper Egypt, Mr. Rogor was not allowed to proceed with the unearthing of the library chambers; and in consequence, he was compelled to return to England without having been able to carry out the wishes of the committee. The total receipts for 1892-3 were over £2121, an income almost entirely due to annual subscribers in England, America, and the Colonies.

The expenses of the Archaeological Survey during the same year had amounted to over £1200, including the salaries of Mr. Percy

E. Newberry and Mr. Howard Carter, their travelling and living expenses to, in, and from Egypt, and the travelling and living expenses of Mr. John Newberry (architect) and of Mr. Percy Buckman (artist), who had otherwise given their valuable services to the Survey. The £1200 also comprised £469 for the publication of Beni Hasan I. Since subscriptions and donations to the Survey during 1892-3 had not reached £500, the Fund had advanced £700 to its assistance, and it is earnestly hoped by the committee that increased public interest in the Survey will justify their faith in its future. During the three seasons spent in Egypt by officers of the Archaeological Survey, sufficient material was collected to provide annual publications for five or six years. Beni Hasan I. (1890-1), and Beni Hasan II. (1891-2) have already appeared, and will shortly be followed by El Bersheh I. and II. (for 1892-3 and 1893-4).

The total receipts of the Egypt Exploration Fund had not fallen off during the year under consideration; but the expenditure had increased, owing to the fact that the work now being carried on at Deir el Bahari is a very large one. Enormous masses of rubbish and debris have to be removed to a considerable distance; many sculptures and blocks unearthed have to be replaced in their original positions; and in addition, the number of inscriptions which have to be traced, and of wall-paintings which have to be copied, far exceeds those in any previous excavation undertaken by the Fund. But the committee feel that the work, as now being carried out, will bring great credit to the society, and confidently appeal to their friends for that continued and increased support without which it cannot be successfully accomplished.

The adoption of this report having been proposed by the Rev. W. MacGregor, and seconded by Lord Amherst of Hackney, Miss E. Pater-son, the secretary of the Fund, proceeded to read her report. She stated that the forthcoming Memoir for 1892-3 would be a preliminary volume on Deir el Bahari, written by M. Naville, forming a sort of introduction to the series of Memoirs which is to cover the work of the Fund on this site. She also drew attention to a special publication of the Fund, viz., a small Atlas of Ancient Egypt, just issued, of which a few advance copies lay upon the table. In this Atlas each of the ancient maps is accompanied by the list of the nomes, of their capitals, and of their local deities. The maps are prefaced with letterpress, giving a brief account of the history of the Egyptians and of their foreign intercourse, together with a description of their country. The Atlas also contains a chronological table of the dynasties, a list of Egyptian sites mentioned in the Bible—identified when possible—and a short bibliography. In briefly recapitulating the various discoveries which had been made during the course of the excavations at Deir el Bahari, the secretary drew attention to some minor antiquities from that site, which were arranged on the table for exhibition, but stated that it had been decided to make no distribution of objects from Deir el Bahari until the work was completed, and all had been brought together for comparison.

Mr. John Newberry, the architect, who has for two seasons assisted professionally at the excavation of the temple of Deir el Bahari, then gave an account of the progress of that excavation and its present state, his audience being enabled to follow his description with ease, owing to the fact that he carefully pointed out the whole arrangement of the temple on two large plans of his own. Mr. Newberry's paper incorporated much that is already known to readers of the ACADEMY from the reports of M. Naville and of Mr. D. G. Hogarth, which have from time to time appeared in these columns. The paper will be printed in the forthcoming Archæological Report of the Fund.

The president referred to the various statements already laid before the meeting; and, having especially noticed the engagement of Mr. D. G. Hogarth as an officer of the Fund, he proceeded to describe the different engineering schemes now under consideration for the construction of a high and vast barrage to store the flood-waters of the Nile, and concluded by saying the work of the Egypt Exploration Fund was to preserve, and not to destroy, and it would not be out of place that they should express to the Egyptian Government their satisfaction with the official words of the distinguished Under-Secretary of State, Public Works Department of Egypt (Mr. Garstin) in his report—viz., "That any work which caused either partial damage to, or the flooding of the beautiful Temples of Philæ, would be rightly considered by the whole civilised world as an act of barbarism."

Mr. Cope Whitehouse spoke in defence of his own scheme for utilising the Wady Raian as a reservoir.

Mr. Maunde Thompson, C.B., returned thanks on behalf of the British Museum for certain antiquities which had been presented by the Fund. He then spoke, in his capacity of acting vice-president, of the delay which had taken place in issuing the Memoirs, and said that in view of the immense labour of publication which lay before the society in recording and interpreting the paintings, sculptures, and inscriptions of the temple of Deir el Bahari, it was a great satisfaction to know that the services of Mr. D. G. Hogarth had been secured; for Mr. Hogarth was not only a good scholar, and a well-known explorer in Asia Minor and Cyprus, but he was also an excellent literary man. The annual volumes issued by the Egypt Exploration Fund would henceforth take a much higher standard than they had ever done before. In order that the excavations at Deir el Bahari might not push too far ahead of the work of publication and of the artists employed in copying the sculptures and paintings which are laid bare, it might be necessary to suspend excavations there for a season. Moreover, Deir el Bahari, though involving great excavation and restoration, and providing large material for publication, is not rich in antiquities; and the society, being bound to consider the advantages of distribution of antiquities, did not propose to confine its work to Deir el Bahari for the next few years.

The meeting terminated with the usual votes of thanks.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHÆOLOGY.

MR. VAL. PRINSEP, A.R.A., has been elected a full member of the Royal Academy.

IN the list of "birthday" honours are the names of Mr. A. W. Franks, Keeper of British and Medieval Antiquities in the British Museum, who has been appointed K.C.B.; and Mr. F. Seymour-Haden, President of the Royal Society of Painter Etchers, who has been knighted.

A PORTRAIT of Dr. Richard Garnett, Keeper of the Printed Books in the British Museum, has been etched from life by Mr. T. W. Morris, and will shortly be published by Messrs. Ellis & Elvey. Mrs. Morris, whose etchings have been exhibited from time to time at the Royal Academy, is the daughter of the late Keeper, Mr. Bullen, and this will give an additional interest to her portrait of his successor.

THERE will be on view next week: (1) a picture of the Marriage of the Duke and Duchess of York, specially painted for the Queen by Mr. Lauritz Tuxen, at Mr. Mendoza's Gallery, in King-street, St. James's; and (2) a collection of photo-engravings after the Rembrandts in the Gallery at Cassel, at the Berlin Photographic Company's, in New Bond-street.

REPRODUCTIONS of important pictures by Sir Frederic Leighton, Mr. Peter Graham, Mr. J. McWhirter, Prof. Herkomer, Mr. Edwin A. Abbey, and other artists will appear exclusively in Royal Academy Pictures, of which Messrs. Cassell & Co. will publish the fifth and concluding part next week. Almost the entire number available for volumes has already been subscribed for by the trade in advance of publication, and the work will not be reprinted.

MESSRS. DEPREZ & GUTEKUNST have in their rooms just now a remarkable group of work by certain artists, chiefly of Berlin, which the connoisseur will thank us for informing him of. Thomas's lithographs we have no special sympathy with; Max Klinger's etchings and aquatints—whatever his art may owe generally to the Swiss Böcklin—have a sufficient measure of individuality, and are often very thoughtful and significant, as well as decorative works; but that which, with whatever leanings to the terre à terre and the tasteless, will yet be avowed to be of quite extraordinary power are the oil studies, and certain drawings, of the veteran Adolph Menzel. A study of armour—or rather of a group of figures, headless and footless perhaps for the moment, but fully armed and in movement—is an amazing display of Menzel's vigour and of his power of ensemble.

THEY have organised at Hampstead—the burial place of Constable, and the living place of many of the distinguished artists and writers of to-day—an Art Society with the object of instituting an annual exhibition; and of these exhibitions the first—a very promising one—was opened a few days ago by the Princess Louise. There should be ample material for such work as that which the Hampstead Art Society propose to accomplish, and we can scarcely doubt that the association, which obtains and deserves distinguished support, will succeed.

PROF. V. BALL, director of the Science and Art Museum at Dublin, has reprinted from the Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy a paper on "Two Large Spinel Rubies with Persian Characters engraved upon them," illustrated with a plate. One of these stones is now in the possession of Lady Carew, and it can be traced to Persia. The present whereabouts of the other is unknown. It is only certain that the inscriptions have been effaced by cutting; but, fortunately, Messrs. Hunt & Roskell took accurate impressions of them. Both stones have evidently come from the treasure-house of the Great Moguls, who had their own names and dates of accession engraved upon them, from Akbar to Anrangzeb. The second further bears evidence that it was an armet of Nadir Shah, who sacked Delhi in 1739. Prof. Ball points out that, in a portrait of Nadir Shah at the India Office, he is represented as wearing on his left arm just such a stone. He has also taken pains to collect all the information available with regard to engraved stones in the possession of the Great Moguls. Of one, which unhappily cannot be identified with either of those here described, Jahangir is reported to have said: "This stone will perhaps carry my name further down through time than the empire of the house of Timur."

WE quote the following from the Times:

"In digging for the foundation of the premises now being erected in Cornhill by the Union Bank of Australia, some most interesting discoveries have been made. At a considerable depth below the level of the street there has been found two parallel Roman walls, with cross walls at intervals, forming a series of quaternions about 30 ft. square. They stand on the original ballast, are some 5 ft. thick, and 10 ft. or 12 ft. high. They are faced with Roman tiles, and most probably are part of the same walls which were discovered some few years ago under the buildings opposite. It seems that about this spot was one of the boundary walls of the ancient Londinium. The workmen have had to cut a portion of the walls away, but found the work exceedingly arduous, it being quite as difficult as cutting through a solid block of granite. The wall is composed mainly of chalk, flints, Kentish rag, and cement. Several pieces of pottery, all more or less broken, have also been found, portions, for the most part, of water-bottles and vases, some of which are prettily marked. No bones or coins have been turned up at present."

THE STAGE.

"MONEY" AT THE GARRICK.

IT has been Mr. Hare's pleasure to revive Lord Lytton's "Money," a comedy which, in our opinion, was always somewhat overrated, and which can hardly, as we suspect, gain new vitality by the minor alterations which Mr. Hare has affected, and by the suppression of allusions to Almack's, or other places of resort at the earlier part of the century. The truth is, "Money" has aged terribly, and not merely on the surface. Like "The Lady of Lyons," it will soon have to be regarded, by all but the most conventional playgoers, as a mere curiosity of the past. In days when our satire is allusive, the satire of "Money" appears lamentably obvious. Its serious interest again—never very strong, we fear, though Macready at the first production did play the hero—is now essentially weak. For our part we consider that, save in remote provinces and the less desirable suburbs—where little count is kept of the real movement of things—it would have its best chance to-day were it presented precisely as it is written, with every change of scene indicated by the author, as in old days, with the introduction, or retention, rather, of every little character that gave it interest. So, it might be a literary curiosity, and attractive for a while as such. "Thus and thus," we should say, "were people apt to be amused in the early Forties." But to-day, of actual life, it represents little. It is as provincial as Ibsen, and not quite so naïve.

The performance at the Garrick is not bad at all—even where it can scarcely be brilliant. Perhaps it is the popularity of Lord Lytton's plays with actors that accounts for its revival—Lord Lytton was an admirable "feeder" for the actor's appetite for sometimes inappropriate display. Evelyn, Dudley Smooth, Graves—these are all good parts from the actor's point of view. They are not very natural; but that does not matter—they are very telling. They are almost as telling, now and then, as Claude Melnotte, Dumas, and Beausant. The part of Clara is somehow much less excellent than that of Pauline in the melodrama in which those characters appear that we have last named. Miss Kate Rorke, always agreeable, and with tact and charm, does her best with it. Evelyn is played by Mr. Forbes Robertson with much of the sympathetic power he has often found so valuable. Mr. Hare is perhaps one of the few character actors who could interest us in Sir John Vesey. He never overshoots the mark; and not so much in his mere restraint as in his quiet and most effective observation does he display himself an artist. Mr. Arthur Cecil is funnily lugubrious as Graves. And, in another part, not unimportant, Mr. Bouchier is thoroughly satisfactory. Mrs. Bancroft gives more colour and fun to Lady Franklin than that not very interesting member of society has been wont to possess. The reading is, to some extent, a new one, as Mrs. Bancroft's readings are wont to be. It is very clever of Miss Maud Millet to persuade us, as Georgina, that she can be disagreeable. But we enjoy her performance much more when no effort of this sort is exacted from her.

STAGE NOTES.

MISS ELLEN TERRY, Mr. J. Forbes-Robertson, and Mr. William Terriss will appear at Daly's Theatre on the afternoon of June 5 in a proverb in one act, "Journeys End in Lovers Meeting," by John Oliver Hobbs and George Moore. The occasion is Miss Jonathas' matinée, and the performance is given under the immediate patronage of the Royal Family.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

THREE pieces from Dr. Grieg's incidental music to Bjornson's tragedy "Sigurd Jorsalfar" were performed at the fifth Philharmonic Concert, May 24, under the direction of the composer. The music is interesting and the orchestration picturesque; but they are true stage pieces, and for their proper effect should be heard as such. The composer was received with extraordinary enthusiasm: his songs and pianoforte pieces, small in compass, have deservedly won for him a great reputation in this country. There were two other novelties in the programme: a "Fantaisie de Concert," by Tschalkowsky, and a "Fantaisie," by Mme. Menter, both for piano and orchestra. In these works the virtuoso element predominates; and as Mme. Menter's technique is equal to all demands, she achieved a brilliant success. Whether a Philharmonic Concert programme should contain such show music is, however, a matter for reflection. Virtuosity, as Beethoven, Schumann, Brahms, and others have proved, is of immense service, as means to an end; it is a good servant, but a bad master. The programme included Beethoven's Symphony No. 8, given under the careful direction of Dr. Mackenzie. Mlle. Landi was successful as a vocalist; but her Gluck Aria from "Elena e Paride" was accompanied by the Philharmonic band in a rough manner.

A Scandinavian concert was given at the small Queen's Hall on Saturday evening. The programme included Dr. Grieg's Quartet in G minor for strings (Op. 27), a work which is little known here, and has never been performed at the popular concerts. This, however, is scarcely surprising; for although the music is fresh and characteristic, it has a pianoforte, rather than a string flavour, and hence produces an unsatisfactory effect. The second movement, a Romanze, has much charm and delicacy; and the lively Finale is clever.

On Saturday afternoon M. Tivadar Nachéz gave his second concert, playing with his usual skill and taste. A detailed notice is unnecessary; but it is only right to say a word in favour of the programme, which contained so much that was serious and good. Besides the Max Bruch Concerto in G minor, there were violin solos by Tartini and Bach, and by Doctors Mackenzie and Parry. Some attractive songs, including one by the concert-giver, were well sung by M. Eugène Oudin.

On Monday afternoon Mr. Kuhe's Jubilee concert was held at the Queen's Hall. As teacher, pianist, and composer of light drawing-room music, Mr. Kuhe has achieved reputation; and a long and successful career has been crowned by a special concert, for which many distinguished vocalists and instrumentalists offered their services. Mr. Kuhe's neatly played solo "Etude de Concert" was thoroughly typical of the pianist-composer. To attempt a description of the lengthy programme would be absurd; and we shall only mention the favourable appearance, early in the afternoon, of Mr. Douglas Powell, a young baritone singer with good voice and good style. There are other pianists who have lived as long and laboured as hard in teaching as Mr. Kuhe; but he deserves special mention for his encouragement to English art at the festivals which he held at Brighton from 1870 to 1882.

Mlle. Kleeberg gave a very successful pianoforte recital at St. James's Hall on Monday afternoon. We cannot speak of her Bach and Beethoven playing, but in a number of short pieces by various composers she revealed many excellent qualities. She rendered Chopin's Berceuse with delightful delicacy, and in a clever piece, "Aeolus," by Gernsheim, dedicated to her, displayed great technical agility. Her programme concluded with a set of short pieces, "Poèmes Sylvestres," by Theodore Dubois. The writing, somewhat in the style of Heller, is clever and decidedly effective; and the interpretation of all the numbers by Mlle. Kleeberg left nothing to desire.

The concert given by the "Berner Liedertafel" at the Queen's Hall on Monday evening was one of special note. This Swiss male choir, consisting of 120 members, has been admirably trained by Dr. Munzinger; the voices, especially the bass, are of good quality, and the intonation wonderfully correct. The choir sings with perfect ensemble, with enthusiasm, and at times with immense power. The programme included ballads, part-songs, and, of course, "Schweizerlieder." The "Harald" Ballad, by Dr. Munzinger, is a little long, but an interesting composition. In future concerts, the conductor will act wisely in refusing encores; repetition of the last verse of a song only weakens the effect. The artistic singing of Frau Raebuz-Sandoz, in songs by Franz Schumann, was a specially pleasing feature of the concert. J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

A CORRESPONDENT writes from Brussels:—"On May 18, an interesting performance took place at the Cercle Artistique of this pleasant city; a young French singer, Mme. Jeanne Remacle singing the hymn to Apollo lately discovered at Delphi by M. Homolle, of the French School at Athens. M. Théodore Reinach, who has reconstructed the melody—such as it is—prefaced the performance with a long and somewhat technical lecture, in which he described the steps by which he had proceeded, and gave a general account of the work. The melody, he informed his audience, was in the "Doric mode," written in a key equivalent to our modern "A minor," in "5 time," a rhythm now abandoned. The song was accompanied, very lightly, by harp, flute, and clarionets; and the young lady delivered it with taste and a firm intonation. The weird timing, and the use of quarter-tones, gave it a dirge-like monotony, which was not without a certain charm; especially when Mme. Remacle, after giving it in the French version, repeated the performance in the original Greek, in a text restored by M. H. Weil."

WE may add that the Musical Times for June 1 contains the Delphic hymn in two forms: (1) with the original musical signs, rendered into modern notation; and (2), as transcribed by M. Reinach, with accompaniment for harp by M. Gabriel Fauré.

At the meeting of the Royal Archaeological Institute, on Wednesday next, Dr. E. J. Hopkins will read a paper on "An Early Seventeenth-Century Contract for the Making of an Organ for the Chapel in Chirk Castle by a hitherto unrecorded Organ-maker." There will be exhibited on the occasion—the original contract, the chased and illuminated organ pipes, and contemporary music-books from Chirk Castle, Denbighshire.

Now ready, Parts I. and II., to be completed in Sixteen Monthly Parts, imp. 8vo, price 2s. 6d. each net.

THE NATURAL HISTORY OF PLANTS:

Their Forms, Growth, Reproduction, and Distribution.

From the German of ANTON KERNER VON MARILAUN,

Professor of Botany in the University of Vienna.

By F. W. OLIVER, M.A., D.Sc.,

Quain Professor of Botany in University College, London.

WITH THE ASSISTANCE OF MARIAN BUSK, B.Sc., and MARY EWART, B.Sc.

With about 1,000 Original Woodcut Illustrations and Sixteen Plates in Colours.

* * Detailed Prospectus with Specimen Page post free on application.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, OLD BAILEY.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. ON CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.
BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE GUINEAS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO'S A1 SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also,
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.
SOLE ADDRESS
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST.

Crown 8vo, 9s. net.

GLIMPSSES OF FOUR CONTINENTS.

LETTERS WRITTEN DURING A TOUR IN AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, AND NORTH AMERICA IN 1893.

By the DUCHESS of BUCKINGHAM and CHANDOS.

With Portraits and Illustrations from the Author's Sketches, &c.

Just out, 8vo, 12s. net.

THE RISE AND EXPANSION OF THE BRITISH DOMINION IN INDIA.

From the Early Days of the East India Company to the Mutiny.

By Sir ALFRED LYALL, K.C.B.

A New Library Edition, with Coloured Maps and considerable Additions.

A NEW, ENLARGED, AND REVISED EDITION. 8vo, 18s.

SIR WILLIAM SMITH'S CLASSICAL DICTIONARY of MYTHOLOGY, BIOGRAPHY, and GEOGRAPHY. A New, Enlarged, and Revised Edition, with many New Plans and Illustrations. Edited by G. E. MARINDIN, M.A., formerly Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. With over 800 Illustrations.

2 vols., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net each Volume.

THE EPISTLES OF ST. PAUL TO THE THESSALONIANS, GALATIANS, AND ROMANS.

WITH NOTES AND DISSERTATIONS.

Including an Essay on the Interpretation of Scripture, originally published in "Essays and Reviews."

By the late B. JOWETT, M.A., Master of Balliol College,

Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Oxford, Doctor in Theology in the University of Leyden.

Edited and Condensed by LEWIS CAMPBELL, M.A., LL.D.,

Emeritus Professor of Greek in the University of St. Andrews.

This work was first published in 1855. A Second and thoroughly Revised Edition appeared in 1859, and was rapidly exhausted, but the Author did not resume the work during his lifetime.

The present Edition is so divided that the text of the Epistles, together with the Notes and Introductions, forms the First Volume, whilst the Essays and Dissertations are contained in the Second Volume.
The Volumes can be bought separately.

8vo, 12s.

A POLICY OF FREE EXCHANGE.

Essays by Various Writers on the Economical and Social Aspects of Free Exchange and Kindred Subjects.

Edited by THOMAS MACKAY,

Author of "A History of the English Poor," Editor of "A Plea for Liberty," &c.

THIRD EDITION, thoroughly Revised and in great part Rewritten, with 176 Illustrations, medium 8vo, 24s, just published.

A MANUAL OF NAVAL ARCHITECTURE.

For the Use of Officers of the Navy, the Mercantile Marine, Shipowners, Shipbuilders, and Yachtsmen.

By W. H. WHITE, C.B., F.R.S.,

Assistant-Controller and Director of Naval Construction, Royal Navy.

BOOKS FOR THE DAY.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE ENDOWMENTS and ESTABLISHMENT of the CHURCH of ENGLAND. By the Rev. J. S. BREWER. Edited by L. T. DIBDIN, M.A.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE MISSION of the CHURCH. Four Lectures delivered in the Cathedral Church of St. Asaph. By the Rev. CHARLES GORE, Principal of Pusey House, Oxford, Editor of "Lux Mundi."

THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

8vo, 16s.

THE BARONAGE and the SENATE; or, the House of Lords in the Past, the Present, and the Future. By WM. CHARTERIS MACHESON.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S LIST.

PROF. GEORGE ADAM SMITH'S NEW WORK.

Now ready, 8vo, cloth, 15s., with Six Maps, specially prepared.

THE

HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE HOLY LAND

Especially in Relation to the History of Israel and the Early Church.

By GEORGE ADAM SMITH, D.D.,

Professor of Hebrew and Old Testament Exegesis, Free Church College, Glasgow.

PROF. DRUMMOND'S NEW WORK.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

THE LOWELL LECTURES ON THE ASCENT OF MAN

By HENRY DRUMMOND,

Author of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World."

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

EASTERN CUSTOMS IN BIBLE LANDS.

By H. B. TRISTRAM, LL.D., D.D., F.R.S.

Canon of Durham,

Author of "The Great Sahara," &c.

FIFTH EDITION, 8vo, cloth, 12s.

CHRIST IN MODERN THEOLOGY.

By A. M. FAIRBAIRN, D.D.,

Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford.

THIRD EDITION, with Map and Illustrations, 8vo,
cloth, 12s.

THE CHURCH IN THE ROMAN EMPIRE,

Before A.D. 170.

By W. M. RAMSAY, M.A.,

Professor of Humanity in the University of Aberdeen.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

BOGLAND STUDIES.

By JANE BARLOW.

"Her notable little book."—British Weekly.

By the SAME AUTHOR.

FOURTH EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

IRISH IDYLLS.

"There are passages of much promise in 'Irish Idylls' as any to be found in 'Scenes of Clerical Life.'"—Truth.

J. M. BARRIE'S WORKS.

Buckram, gilt top, price 6s. each.

1. A WINDOW in THRUMS. Twelfth Edition.

2. AULD LIGHT IDYLLS. Ninth Edition.

3. MY LADY NICOTINE. Sixth Edition.

4. WHEN a MAN'S SINGLE. Eighth Edition.

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON,
27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1153.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JUNE 9, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
ENGLISH PROSE SELECTIONS, by LIONEL JOHNSON	467
THE DISCOVERY OF LAKES RUODOLF AND STEFANIE, by Prof. KEANE	468
SIR JOHN SRELEY'S GOETHE, by A. W. BENN	469
WILLEST'S HENRY OF NAVARRE, by R. SEYMOUR LONG	470
NEW NOVELS, by J. B. ALLEN	471
CURRENT LITERATURE	472
NOTES AND NEWS	473
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	474
ORIGINAL VERSE: "A POET'S WIFE," by GRANT ALLEN	475
ORITARY: CHARLES JAMES PEARSON, by J. S. C.
WALTER HAWKES TREGELLAS, by W. P. COURTNEY
KONSTANTINE KRISTALLAS, by Mrs. EDMONDS, &c., &c.	476
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	476
IN MEMORIAM: THE HON. RODEN NOEL, by E. H. H. and P. A.	476
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	476
CORRESPONDENCE—
The North Fictitious Inscriptions translated and explained, by E. W. B. NICHOLSON: The Septuagint versus the Hebrew Text of the Bible. VI., by Sir H. H. HOWORTH: The "Shield-Wall" at Hastings, by C. OSMAN	477
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	479
KENTON'S EDITION OF HYPERIDES, by B. P. GRENFELL	479
SCIENCE NOTES	480
PHILOLOGY NOTES	480
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	480
THE ARCHAEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF EGYPT, by Prof. R. S. POOLE	480
THE ROYAL ACADEMY, IV., by CLAUDE PHILLIPS	481
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	482
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	482

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS

115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

TYPE-WRITERS.—SECOND-HAND

MACHINES, equal to new, FOR SALE, EXCHANGE, or LEASE on HIRE. Machines sold by instalments on terms to suit purchasers. Use of Machine taught free to hirers or purchasers. Remingtons, Yosts, Hammonds, Caligraph, Barlocks, Fitch, &c., from £8. MS. Copied with accuracy and despatch at lowest rates. Highest references. Illustrated Catalogue free.—N. TAYLOR, Manager, National Type-Writer Exchange, 74, Chancery Lane, London (Holborn end).

POPULAR WRITERS OF FICTION

Wishing to secure the most extensive COPYRIGHTED PUBLICATION obtainable in United States, Canada, and elsewhere, should communicate with F. P. COLLIER, 521, West Thirteenth Street, New York City.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S

TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,

Importers of Foreign Books,
11, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,

FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS. CATALOGUES sent on application.

ROYAL IRISH ACADEMY.

The Council of the Royal Irish Academy are about to appoint for the incoming year, TWO ASSISTANTS to the EDITOR, in the preparation of the Academy's Dictionary of the Irish Language. The salary will be £150 a year to each Assistant, who must have a good knowledge of the Classical Languages and of Old Irish, together with a fair amount of training in the Methods and Problems of Comparative Grammar, especially as applied to the Celtic Languages. Applications, with copies of Testimonials, to be lodged with the TREASURER of the Royal Irish Academy, at the Royal Irish Academy House, Dawson Street, Dublin, before the 15th of June, 1894.

OWENS COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

BISHOP BERKELEY FELLOWSHIPS.—At least two, of the value of £100 per annum, to date from September 29th next, are OFFERED for AWARD. Evidence must be presented of ability to prosecute some special study or research in one, among several, of the chief subjects of the College curriculum in Arts, Science and Medicine. HONORARY RESEARCH FELLOWSHIPS.—A limited number of appointments will be made on the same date. For details as to the above Fellowships, apply to the REGISTRAR, to whom applications should be sent on or before June 22nd.

H. W. HOLMES, Registrar.

THE UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE
DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Turo, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best

University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEYRON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

ELEVENTH MEMOIR OF THE

EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND.

AMINAS EL MEDINEH, by ENOCH NAVILLE, and THE TOMB OF PAHERI at EL KAB, by J. J. TYLOR and F. L. GRIFFITH. With Twenty-eight Plates. Price 25s.

KNOX PAUL, TRENCHE, TANNER & Co., Ltd., London: BERNARD QUARITCH, London; ASNER & Co., London; and OFFICE of the EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND, 37, Great Russell Street, W.C. (opposite the British Museum).

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the President and Council will proceed to ELECT, on Tuesday, June 19th, ONE COUSIN ASSURANT. Applicants for the Annuity, which is of the value of not more than £50, must be deserving Artists, painters in Oil and Water Colours, Sculptors, Architects or Engravers, in need of aid through unavoidable failure of professional employment, or other causes. Forms of application can be obtained by letter addressed to the Secretary, Royal Academy of Arts, Piccadilly, W. They must be filled in and returned on or before Saturday, June 16th.

By order, FRED. A. EATON, Secretary.

FRENCH GALLERY, 120, Pall Mall.

The 41st ANNUAL SPRING EXHIBITION of PICTURES by British and Foreign Artists, including "The Meeting of the Waters," by J. M. W. TURNER, R.A., and a Collection of Pictures and Studies from Nature by Professor C. HEINEKE, is NOW OPEN. Admission, including Catalogue, 1s.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—ASSYRIAN

SCULPTURES.—Statuettes of Sennacherib, Assurbanipal, and his Queen. Also reduced Facsimiles of the unique and beautiful "Garden Scene," Winged Human-headed Lion and Bull, &c. Modelled from the famous Nineveh Sculptures, and made in Porcelain (partial). "Interesting and faithful reproductions."—Athenaeum, Oct. 7, 1883. Descriptive Prospectus on application to ALFRED JARVIS (Sole Publisher), 41, Willes Road, London, N.W.

THE UNIVERSITY of ADELAIDE.

HUGHES PROFESSORSHIP OF ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE AND MENTAL AND MORAL PHILOSOPHY.

Applications for the above PROFESSORSHIP (vacant in consequence of the transfer of Professor Boulger to the Chair of Classics) will be received at the office of the Agent-General for South Australia, 15, Victoria Street, Westminster, not later than the 1st of July next. Salary, £200 a year. Duties commence on the 1st of March, 1895. Particulars of tenure and duties may be obtained at the Agent-General's Office.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, London.

FOUNDATION SCHOLARSHIPS. AN EXAMINATION for filling up about 20 VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 4th SEPTEMBER NEXT.—For information, apply to the Rector, St. Paul's School, West Kensington, W.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL for BOYS.

Detached House, stands on top of Cliff, South Aspect: Private Playfield; Resident Masters.—MRS. JAMES MACDONELL, Gorse Cliff, Boscombe Chine, Bournemouth.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon-street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholaristic Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers, may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

Valuable Topographical and Miscellaneous Library of a Gentleman, deceased, from the North of England.

MESSRS. HODGSON will SELL by

AUCTION, at their ROOMS, 115, CHANCERY LANE, W.C., DURING the MONTH of JUNE, the valuable TOPOGRAPHICAL and MISCELLANEOUS LIBRARY of a GENTLEMAN, deceased, comprising ATKINS'S Gloucestershire, folio—Baker's Northamptonshire, 2 vols.—Blomfield's Norfolk, 5 vols.—Borlase's Cornwall—Clift's Cheshire, 3 vols.—Cussan's Hertfordshire, 3 vols.—Large Paper—Dugdale's Monasticon, 2 vols.—Drake's Devon—Drake's Dorset—Drake's Essex, 3 vols.—Nash's Worcestershire, 2 vols.—Ormerod's Cheshire, 3 vols.—Plot's Stafford and Oxfordshire, 2 vols.—Rudder's Gloucestershire—Shaw's Staffordshire, 2 vols.—Large Paper—Sutton's Durham, 3 vols.—Stukely's Stonehenge, &c., 2 vols.—Thornton's Nottingham—King's Vale Royal—Vetusta Monumenta, 5 vols.—Whitaker's Richmondshire, 2 vols.—Britton's Cathedrals, 5 vols.—and Antiquities—Houdon's Collinson's Somerset, 3 vols.—Ducaumont's Hereford, 2 vols.—Hutchinson's Cumberland, 2 vols.—Meyrick's Cardigan—Phipps's Somerset, 2 vols.—Polwhele's Cornwall, 5 vols.—Snodgrass's Suffolk, 2 vols.—Warner's Hampshire, 6 vols.—Westwood's Palaeographia, Moths, &c., 4 vols.—Bewick's Birds, &c., 4 vols.—Large Paper—Harvey's Phycologia Britannica, 4 vols.—Jarvis's Naturalists' Library, 40 vols.—Lowe's Ferns, 4 vols.—Lodge's Portraits, 12 vols.—Meyer's Birds, 7 vols.—Pratt's Flowering Plants, &c., 9 vols.—Sowerby's Botany, &c., 41 vols.—Yarrell's Birds, 3 vols.—The Zoologist, 18 vols.—Milton's Paradise Lost and Regained, 2 vols.—First Editions—Swimburne's Atlantica in Galden—Shelley's Queen Mab, First Edition—Tenison's In Memoriam, First Edition—Heures à l'Usage de Rome, with Illuminations, 1488, and other Missals, Books of Hours, &c., in MS. on Vellum, with Illuminations.

Catalogues are preparing.

THE CHAPLIN TRIO'S CHAMBER

CONCERT, QUEEN'S HALL, TUESDAY EVENING, JUNE 19th, at 8. Piano, Miss Nellie Chaplin, and her pupil, Miss Evelyn Ehrmann; violin, Miss Anna Lang and Miss Kate Chaplin; viola, Miss Rosabel Watson; violoncello, Miss Mabel Chaplin (First Prize, with distinction, Conservatoire, Bruxelles, 1893); and the Meister Glee Singers. The programme will include Trio in C minor Op. 27, E. Schurt, and Piano Quintette Dvorak. Tickets, 10s. 6d., 5s., and 2s. 6d., at the Hall; and the Misses CHAPLIN, 138, Marylebone Road.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary

Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Historical and Descriptive Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.
Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellences of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Holi, R.A., Onles, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle. Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided and easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing nearly 70 Miniature Photographs of notable autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

New Pamphlet, "Autotype a Decorative and Educational Art," free on application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE.

The THIRD EDITION of
"LORD WOLSELEY'S
 LIFE of the DUKE of MARLBOROUGH" will be ready at all Booksellers on Tuesday next, in 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits and Plans, 32s.

BY COLONEL RAIKES.

THE HISTORY OF THE HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY OF LONDON.

By Colonel G. A. RAIKES, F.S.A.,
 2 vols., with Portraits, Coloured Illustrations, and Maps, demy 8vo, 31s. 6d. each.

NEW NOVELS NOW READY.

NOW READY.

By the Author of "The Chilcotes," &c.

A TROUBLESOME PAIR.

By LESLIE KEITH,
 Author of "A Hurricane in Petticoats," &c.
 In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

A NEW NOVEL, NOW READY.

VICTIMS OF FASHION.

By A. M. GRANGE.
 In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

A NEW NOVEL AT ALL LIBRARIES.

IF MEN WERE WISE.

By E. L. SHAW.
 In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A distinctly clever and promising piece of work. Well written, and with a plot of considerable strength as well as interest."—Daily Telegraph.

NOW READY.

The POWER of the PAST.

By ESMÉ STUART,
 Author of "Joan Vellacott," &c.
 In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A strong and very good novel"—Scotsman.

NOTICE.

The THIRD Edition of
Miss BROUGHTON'S
New Novel,
"A BEGINNER,"
 may now be obtained at all Booksellers and Libraries, in 1 vol.,
 crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
 Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

BLISS, SANDS & FOSTER'S New and Forthcoming Works.

NOW READY.

By CHARLES I. ELTON,

Author of "Origins of English History," "The Career of Columbus," &c.

An ACCOUNT of SHELLEY'S VISITS to FRANCE, SWITZERLAND, and SAVOY, IN the YEARS 1814 and 1816.

With Extracts from "The History of a Six Weeks' Tour," and "Letters descriptive of a Sail round the Lake of Geneva, and of the Glaciers of Chamouni," first published in the year 1817.

Including 1 Photogravure Portrait of Shelley (by permission of Lady Shelley), 2 Etchings, 14 Pen and Ink Sketches, and Designed Title-page.

Crown 8vo, cloth, inlaid parchment, gilt top, 10s. 6d.
 50 Large-Paper Copies, colomblé 18mo, price on application to the Booksellers.

With Frontispiece by Sir E. BURNE-JONES, Bart.

THE QUEEN WHO FLEW.

By FORD HUEFFER.

Imperial 16mo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.; also a limited Edition de Luxe of 25 Copies only.
 Price on application to the Booksellers.

NEW NOVELS.

"The BOSS of TAROOMBA"
 a Novel in 1 vol., by E. W.
 HORNING, Author of "A Bride from the Bush," &c., is now ready at all Libraries and Booksellers, crown 8vo, 6s.

ALSO

"MISS PRECOCITY": a Novel in 2 vols., price 21s., by CHARLES T. C. JAMES, Author of "Wedlock," "Honours Easy,"
 &c., is now ready at all Libraries.

PUBLISHED LAST WEEK.

Cloth, 2s.

NEW VOLUME.

THE MODERN LIBRARY. A CONSUL'S PASSENGER.

Paper, 1s. 6d.

BY HARRY LANDER.

PREVIOUS VOLUME.

"HEAVENS!"

By ALOIS VOJTECH SMILOVSKY.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

LAME DOGS: an Impressionist
 Study. By WILLIAM BULLOCK-BARKER. Small crown 8vo, Irish linen, 1s. 6d.

VICTIMS. By F. W. Maude,
 Author of "A Merciful Divorce." Crown 8vo, price 6s.
 PRESS OPINIONS.

Manchester Guardian.—"Mr. Maude writes well, with a power of representing lifelike figures and movements."
Athenaeum.—"A good story, and strong characters. ....
 Deserves infinite credit."
National Observer.—"The author, to sum up, has proved that he is a clever and thoughtful person."
Morning Post.—"It is cleverly written."
Daily News.—"A fine study of an unhappy man."
Spectator.—"Fashionable horrors—realistic—fin de siècle."
Truth.—"Though of the kind in vogue, it is the reverse of platitudinous. ... A wholesome novel."

LONDON: 15, CRAVEN STREET, STRAND, W.C.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

TRAVELS AMONGST AMERICAN INDIANS

Their Ancient Earthworks and Temples.

By Vice-Admiral LINDESEY BRINE,
 Member of Council of the Royal Geographical and Hakluyt Societies.
 With 2 Maps, 8 Plans, 28 Full-page, and 12 Text Cuts.
 1 vol., demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

REMINISCENCES of an INDIAN
 POLICE OFFICIAL. By T. C. ARTHUR. Fully
 Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

"We have to thank Mr. Arthur for a very interesting and informing book, the illustrations to which are instinct with life and reality."—Daily Chronicle.

IN the LAND of the TUI: My Journal
 in New Zealand. By Mrs. ROBERT WILSON. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

OUR ENGLISH COUSINS. By
 RICHARD HARDING DAVIS. Fully Illustrated.
 Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

FEDERAL BRITAIN; or, Unity and
 Federation of the Empire. By F. P. DE LABILLIERE, Fellow of the Royal Colonial Institute, and Author of
 "The Early History of the Colony of Victoria." With
 Chapter on "Imperial Defence," by Sir GEO. S.
 CLARKE, R.E., K.C.M.G. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Mr. Labilliere's book is an extremely useful and interesting contribution to a great subject that appeals powerfully to the imagination and the patriotic sentiment of us all."
Daily News.

DANTE G. ROSSETTI and the
 PRE-RAPHAELITE MOVEMENT. By ESTHER
 WOOD. With 8 Photogravure Reproductions of Rossetti's Paintings. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

"Regarded as an appreciation of the wider significance of the pre-Raphaelite movement, and a critical account of Rossetti's art and poetry, her book is a fresh and luminous contribution to the literature of the subject. The photo-gravures of Rossetti's pictures in themselves make the book one to be coveted by all who are interested in art."—Times.

AMONG the MOORS. Sketches of Oriental Life. By G. MONTBARD, Author of "In
 Egypt," &c. Superbly Illustrated. Royal 8vo, cloth, 16s.
 LARGE-PAPER EDITION, strictly limited to 100 copies, each numbered and signed by the Author, printed on Japanese vellum, THREE GUINEAS each, net.

PERSEPHONE, and other Poems. By
 K. MCCOSH CLARK, Author of "A Southern Cross
 Fairy Tale." Dedicated by permission to H.R.H. the Duchess of York. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"A charming volume, outwardly and inwardly."—Sketch.

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES.

A BAIREUTH PILGRIMAGE. By
 EDITH E. CUTHELL. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.
 "The story will unquestionably interest a large circle of readers."—Scotsman.

SARAH: a Survival. By Sydney
 CHRISTIAN, Author of "Lydia." 2 vols., cloth, 12s.
 "A wholesome as well as a graceful book, full of charming and whimsical touches; and written with a decided distinction of style."—Athenaeum.

FIRE ISLAND. By George Manville
 FENN, Author of "The Black Bar," &c. Numerous
 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The EMIGRANT SHIP. By W. Clark
 RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," &c.
 New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NOW READY. PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

JUNE NUMBER.

CONTENTS.

MAXIMILIAN and MEXICO. By JOHN HEARD, Jun. Illustrated.
 THE LIGHTHOUSE. Painted by STANHOPE A. FORBES. By PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON. With Frontispiece and Portrait of Forbes.

THE DOG. By N. S. SHALER. Illustrated.
 THE STORY of a BEAUTIFUL THING. By FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT.

JOHN MARCH, SOUTHERNER. Chapters XXXV.-XLII. By GEORGE W. CARSON.

AMERICAN GAME FISHES. By LEROY MILES YALE. Illustrated.
 A POUND OF CURE: a Story of Monte Carlo. By WILLIAM HENRY BISHOP.

THE FUTURE of the WOUNDED in WAR. By ARCHIBALD FORBES.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
 St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, JUNE 9, 1894.

No. 1153, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

English Prose Selections. With Critical Introduction, &c. Vol. II. Edited by Henry Craik. (Macmillans.)

THIS second volume of English Prose Selections, edited by Mr. Craik, opens with Bacon, who was born in 1561, and closes with L'Estrange, who died in 1704. Stretching, then, from the "Sixteenth Century to the Restoration," it criticises and exemplifies the prose of Bacon, Ben Jonson, Burton, Selden, Hales, Hobbes, Chillingworth, Browne, Walton, Fuller, Clarendon, Milton, Taylor, Baxter, Cowley, and Cudworth. If to these greater lights, in the composition of prose, we add the minora sidera, Wotton, Donne, Overbury, Hall, May, Earle, Leighton, to name but these, we realise very forcibly the truth of the editor's remark, that "the period was a critical one for English prose."

The present volume does all that an anthology can to illustrate the rich variety, the magnificent successes and curious failures of that long period. No volume of selections from anything ever yet satisfied completely even its editor or compiler, much less its readers. In the present case, some readers will probably miss certain notable passages of Sir Henry Wotton, Ben Jonson, Sir Thomas Overbury, George Herbert, Hobbes, Owen Feltham, Jeremy Taylor, and Cowley. Where a writer does not wear his purple in patches but is all purple, it may not greatly matter what example be chosen of his splendour. In other cases it may be disputed whether the rare and occasional excellence be exemplified, or the more common and less remarkable merits. For instance, Owen Feltham wrote one delightful poem and one fine essay. The essay is that solemn Platonic piece, "Of the Worship of Admiration," which was a favourite with Fitzgerald, an unusually high and noble strain for a moderately inspired writer. Probably the aim of such a volume as this is best attained by an avoidance of these solitary achievements: the best of a writer's average work, his habitual style, is the more valuable for purposes of historical comparison.

Spence has preserved for us Pope's list of English prose writers, whose language and style might be quoted, as authoritative, in an English dictionary. The list is instructive. It is limited to the eighteen names of Bacon, Hooker, Hobbes, Clarendon, Barrow, Tillotson, Dryden, Temple, Locke, Sprat, Atterbury, Addison, Swift, Bolingbroke, with Ben Jonson, L'Estrange, Congreve, and Vanbrugh, "for familiar dialogues and writings of that kind." Sir Walter Raleigh was twice excluded "as too affected." And some such reason it was that forced Pope to reject Milton, Burton, Taylor, Browne; it was an unerring instinct that chose Bacon and Hooker, Hobbes and Dryden. To put it somewhat roughly, Pope rejected what Lamb would have chosen: all " quaintness," all cumbrous magnificence, all excessive Latinism, all defiant lawlessness or personal peculiarity, though sanctioned by mighty names, were not "authoritative" to the correct and polished Pope. He would have incurred the reproaches of Landor, who, in his superb vindication of Milton from the impertinences of Brougham, complained that "Waller, Cowley, and South were resolved to refine what was always pure gold, and inadvertently threw into the crucible many old family jewels, deeply encased within it." But Mr. Craik, in his judicious Introduction, points out how different in authority are the Elizabethan poetry and the Elizabethan prose. The latter is imitable, but only as a literary exercise: our poets can repeat the language, the cadences, the style of the great Elizabethan poets with no effect of deliberate strangeness. The rhythm of Shakspeare's Sonnets, the whole magical use of musical language, is no less acceptable in our day than in his; but Milton's prose is no longer possible. As Arnold said, "We pronounce that such a prose has its own grandeur, but that it is obsolete and inconvenient"; and, to quote him again, when we read the prose of Dryden, "we exclaim that here at last we have the true English prose, a prose such as we would all gladly use, if we only knew how." Pope was in the right: not in his probable unconsciousness of the beauty and the power in his excluded writers, but in his sense that they were no longer models for a manageable and serviceable prose. In Bacon, in Hooker, as became their genius and their studies well, there was a literary feeling for law in prose composition; the poetry of Milton, the poetic sentiment and eloquence of Taylor, gave ecstasies, and fiery flights, and sudden elevations to their prose, while they could not give the instinct of proportion, logical and rational. It is no small testimony to the genius of Johnson and of Lamb that they could convey, each after his manner and according to his needs, the very personal charm of Browne's style into their own. What ponderous Latinism, what irritating whimsicality, make intolerable the imitators of Johnson and of Lamb! Pope's perceptions told him the truth that, for the general purposes of prose, simplicity and correctness, strength and order and clearness were essential. A Carlyle should be very sure that he is a Carlyle before he begin his innovations. But no modern prose can be unconscious of law, though it may be a curiously recondite and sought-out prose; no critic, however great his distaste for the prose of Mr. Pater or of Mr. Meredith, dreams that it is not the work of a deliberate writer, who meditates his art. Certain great early prose-writers, on the other hand, can but have written at haphazard, blind and deaf to their own defects. No false following of the classics, no Ciceronianism or other deluding influence, can account for all the singularities, the confounding difficulties, that abound in company with all magnificence, lucidity, and strength. There are two classes of our classics in prose: the Elizabethans, with their rich majesty, their wealth of words and phrases for the expression and elaboration of thoughts, massive and sententious, fantastical and imaginative; and the last century men, with their enchanting clearness, an admirable union of dignity and ease. In poetry we go to Spenser and Milton; but for practical help in prose we "give our days and nights," as Johnson bids us, to Addison and to his fellows.

It is hardly necessary to say that Mr. Craik and his goodly company of writers have done their work well. Perhaps the best piece of criticism among the longer pieces is the study of Bacon, which reminds us how much we have lost in the death of its writer, William Minto. Mr. Saintsbury deals with Donne, Burton, Hobbes, Fuller, Harrington, and others, in his accustomed vein of humour, a mixture of sound learning with "a little judicious levity." Mr. Ward couples a very much wanted defence of Milton, against those who exaggerate the faults of his prose, with a defence of his character and conduct, very much less needed in a volume of this kind. Among other noteworthy contributions are the introductions of Mr. M'Cormick and Dr. Dodds to the Scotch writers. To the English reader, Spottiswoode, the ecclesiastical historian, is not what he has been elsewhere, an household word; nor do we know much more of Drummond's prose than the notes of his celebrated conversation with Ben Jonson. Mr. Chambers, who also writes of Usher and May, is very happy in his brief notices of Leighton and More, two typical men of a most fascinating kind, each in a marked way. Leighton, though he hated Papistry like any Covenantor, is indeed "a March swallow among Protestant theologians": perhaps Norris, of Bemerton, and William Law resemble him the most. For a mystical unction, as of a French saint, no English writer approaches him: Herbert, Ken, Taylor, have nothing of it. He has received, as Mr. Chambers observes, a shameful treatment from his mutilating editors. Here is a characteristic passage, as it stands in the older editions:

"So knit my will to thy most holy will, that I may have no other will but thine, and may be most heartily and fully content with whatsoever thou would do to me in this world; yea, if thou wilt, so that I hate thee not, nor sin against thee, but retain thy love, make me suffer the greatest pains."

That is from the wonderful "Rules and Instructions for a Holy Life." The true text runs, boldly and with the true audacity of mystical love:

"So knit my soul to Thy most holy will, that I may have no other will but Thine, and may be most heartily and fully content with whatsoever Thou wilt do with me in this world and for ever; yea, if Thou put me in hell, to suffer all the pains there, so that I hate not nor sin against Thee, but retain Thy love, I may be content."

It is painfully ludicrous to detect the editorial timidity "drawing the line" of resignation somewhere. Of no little interest also are Earle and Overbury, whose sketches of characters and fashions, typical humours and social ways, together with the general taste and liking for such things, are of importance in the history of English fiction. Unquestionably, if France and Spain, with their various forms of prose romance, influenced English writers of fiction, so, too, these sketches, with the final perfection of the art at the hands of Addison and Steele, had their part also in shaping the English novel. Then we have such curious persons as Sir Thomas Urquhart of Rabelaisian fame, and Sir Kenelm Digby, that prince of eccentrics: both well discussed and represented by Mr. Saintsbury and the editor. We cannot but regret that Mr. Kerr has so slight a part in this volume; his introduction to its predecessor was among the most memorable and masterly pieces of criticism produced for many a year. But his brief notice of Lord Herbert of Cherbury is a masterpiece of humour, perfectly just: and he also treats of the two incongruous writers, Mrs. Hutchinson and Butler.

One reflection of the reader is inevitable. Is there any country, but England, in which so many admirable, so many indispensable, so many valuable writers are out of reach, except in imperfect editions and rare volumes? A thorough knowledge of Donne, to take one instance, is only to be had with immense difficulty; yet Donne, his works, his life, his character, are of singular importance and attractiveness. There should be, accessible and convenient, the "Complete Works" of every writer quoted in this volume; of very few is it the case now. And when we have a final and scholarly edition of an old English author, it is often published in so limited an issue, as to become unprocurable very shortly. But to pursue this theme were to approach the thorny question of State Aid and Endowed Research. Let us merely thank Mr. Craik and his colleagues for an excellent volume of an excellent work.

LIONEL JOHNSON.

Discovery of Lakes Rudolf and Stefanie. A Narrative of Count Samuel Teleki's Exploring and Hunting Expedition in Eastern Equatorial Africa, by his Companion Lieut. Ludwig von Höhnel. Translated by Nancy Bell. In 2 vols. (Longmans.)

IN more than one respect the Teleki-von Höhnel expedition of 1887-88 may fairly be described as memorable. In geographical interest it can scarcely be surpassed, or even equalled, by any future journey of exploration in the interior of the African continent; because it practically solves the last remaining problem connected with the equatorial lake region, completes Thomson's surveys north of Masailand, determines the true character of the lacustrine Samburu depression heard of by that traveller, places beyond doubt the existence of still active volcanic forces on the mainland, and very nearly fills up the whole of the blank space between the Masai plateau and the South Ethiopian (Kaffa) highlands. Teleki's farthest point at the north end of Lake Rudolf comes within sixty or seventy miles of the farthest southern point reached in 1886 by Jules Borelli penetrating from Kaffaland southwards to the Omo basin. Those sixty or seventy miles are all that now remain to be traversed in order to connect the northern and southern itineraries, and thus complete the preliminary survey of the eastern section of the continent from the Cape to the Mediterranean.

Minor services to geography, but minor only in a relative sense, were: a visit to Mount Meru, which was ascended for the first time to a height of nearly 5000 feet; the ascent of Kilimanjaro to 17,387 feet and of Kenia to 15,355 feet, that is, up to the edge of the breached side of the crater; lastly, the discovery of the Loroghi and General Matthews Ranges, forming a northern extension of Thomson's Aberdare Range, and terminating in Mount Nyiro (9800 feet), and the Teleki volcano (2067), at the southern extremity of Lake Rudolf. That this and another cone in the same igneous district are still active volcanoes was made abundantly evident from the recently erupted lava streams and the clouds of black smoke and dense sulphurous vapours issuing from the craters, in one of which a native reported "the incandescent lava still bubbling and seething." On surmounting the last ridge, whence a panoramic view was commanded of the great Basso Narok, "Black Water," and surrounding landscape, the travellers

"gazed in speechless delight, spell-bound by the beauty of the scene before us, whilst our men, equally silent, stared into the distance for a few minutes, to break presently into shouts of astonishment at the sight of the glittering expanse of the great lake which melted on the horizon into the blue of the sky. At that moment all our dangers, all our fatigues were forgotten in the joy of finding our exploring expedition crowned with success at last. Full of enthusiasm, and gratefully remembering the gracious interest taken in our plans from the first by His Royal and Imperial Highness Prince Rudolf of Austria, Count Teleki named the sheet of water, set like a pearl of great price in the wonderful landscape beneath us, Lake Rudolf."

Thus was discovered the last of the great equatorial basins, which stretches for over 160 miles, like Tanganyika and Nyassa, in the direction from north to south by east, with a mean breadth of about 20 miles and an area of 3000 square miles, without any visible outlet. In any case its altitude (1300 feet) shows that it cannot possibly drain to Victoria Nyanza (3800), as had been supposed; and the same is true of the much smaller Basso Ebor, "White Water," renamed Stefanie (1740 feet), to which a flying visit was paid, and which appeared to be 65 to 70 miles long by 13 to 15 broad. Samburu is the name, not of a basin, but of the district; and Rudolf is thus identified beyond all doubt with the great "Lake Samburu," which so long glittered like a mirage before the eager eyes of explorers, and which at one time was even thought to be a vast inlet or extension of Victoria Nyanza itself, running for an unknown distance away to the north-east. All these hydrographic mysteries are now cleared up, although it is still uncertain and even doubtful whether the South Ethiopian Omo runs out in Rudolf, or forms the upper course of one of the great Somaliland rivers (Juba or Webi Shebéli?).

But the "Black Water" was found to be brackish and apparently undrinkable; and, as all the land seen from the heights at the southern extremity of the lake presented a superb picture of lifeless desolation as far as the eye could reach along both margins, all further progress seemed to be barred in the direction of the north. And here occurred perhaps the most striking incident of the expedition. Nine travellers out of ten would doubtless have turned back at this point, satisfied with having sighted and "fixed" the great lake; but, like Stanley, who decided at Nyangwe to rush the Congo, Count Teleki resolved, after much deliberation, to push still to the north and make a first rough survey of his great discovery. The water of the lake was found to be charged with soda, so that when mixed with tartaric acid it effervesced strongly, "and quenched our thirst more quickly than fresh water would have done." The aspect of the land also improved, according as the recently erupted matter gave way to older igneous formations, until inhabitable districts were at last reached before the supplies ran out. The expedition had struck inland from Mombasa by the now almost beaten path through Taveta and round the northern slopes of Kilimanjaro to Lakes Naivasha and Baringo. Here it plunged into the unknown by an easterly track, which was followed along the east side of the lake to its northern extremity. As the west side seemed to be quite impassable, the party had to retrace their steps by the same track as far as the south end. But here a fortunate divergence was made to the west and then round to the south, Lake Baringo being thus again reached by a new and more westerly route, through the territories of the hitherto unvisited Turkana and Suk peoples.

As the great Turkana or Elguma nation extends far to the north, where they meet and perhaps merge in the Nilotic tribes about the head waters of the Sobat, it will be seen that, thanks to this divergence, all the different populations have now been visited in the most interesting ethnological region in the whole of Africa. In this anthropological "divide" converge, commingle, or overlap all the indigenous races of the continent except the Hottentots—Somal and Galla Hamites from the north-east, Nilotic negroes from the north-west, Masai and Bantus from the south. Thus, from the ethnological standpoint also the expedition may be called memorable, although the rich materials collected are not yet properly sifted, and in fact are presented to the reader in a strangely perplexing manner. Nothing could be more confusing and even misleading than the inset "Ethnographical Sketch Map," unless it be the statement which this map is presumably intended to illustrate, that "whilst the negroes belong to the great Bantu stock, the Masai form the most southerly group of the Nilotic tribes, extending far away to the north, and are, so to speak, wedged in amongst the Bantu tribes and the people of Kamasia, Suk, Turkana, Karamoyo, and Lango, form a connecting link with the Shilluks and Bari" (i., p. 242). But for the map something might be suspected to have gone wrong with the translation of this chaotic sentence, in which the Masai, elsewhere rightly stated to be non-negro, appear to be brought into connexion with the Shilluks and other typical negroes of the Upper Nile region, and in which the terms Negro, Bantu, and Nilotic are hopelessly muddled.

The expedition must be pronounced equally memorable as a record of sport in the interior of the continent. Count Teleki proved himself a great hunter, worthy to be mentioned in the same breath with such nimrods as Oswell and Selous. But for his skill and pluck the expedition would have more than once broken down for want of supplies; and the unflagging interest of the narrative is largely due to the constantly recurring incidents of the chase, often of an extremely exciting character. Some of the regions traversed abounded in game to an almost incredible extent, and the view from an eminence in the Nyemps district is described in language that recalls the episode of Bishop Colenso and the Zulu chief.

"In the flat districts, overgrown with steppe grass or gleaming silver leleshwa bushes, stretching away on either side of the river, roamed such countless herds of animals as I had never dreamt of seeing anywhere. I counted eight separate herds of buffaloes, each containing many hundred, with zebras, rhinoceroses, elands, water-bucks, harte-beests, gazelles, wild boars, and ostriches in such numbers that I forgot all about my observations, and gave myself up entirely to the delight of watching all these creatures in their life in the open. . . . In the fifty days since we left Nyemps the count had killed with his own rifle no less than 113 large animals, viz., ten elephants, sixty-one buffaloes, twenty-one rhinoceroses, nine zebras, six kaama antelopes, four elands, and two kobus antelopes or water-bucks."

It should be added that this was no reckless slaughter, but needed to provide the food required by the caravan on its march through the Sukuta salt steppe, and the other uninhabited tracts that had to be traversed on the route to Samburuland.

A word of praise may be awarded to the translation, which is fairly well done. Such solecisms as "to hearten up" for to cheer up, "misleading" for disappointing, and "but for one cow" for all but one cow are rare; and on the whole the work loses little in its English dress. It is well equipped with a large number of illustrations, mostly prepared by Herren A. Mielichhofer and L. H. Fischer from rough sketches taken on the spot. There are also two excellent large scale maps, covering the whole field of exploration, and based chiefly on Lieut. von Höhnel's surveys. A. H. KEANE.

Goethe reviewed after Sixty Years. By J. R. Seeley. (Seeley.)

THIS little volume is a reprint, with large alterations and additions, of three papers on Goethe contributed ten years ago to the Contemporary Review by Sir John Seeley—as we must now call him. It is not, like so many of the small books on great writers with which enterprising publishers have recently familiarised us, intended to spare very busy or very idle readers the trouble of studying the original at first hand. Its object is not to furnish either a connected sketch of Goethe's life or a full account of even his principal writings, but rather to open certain commanding points of view from which the man and his work may be most profitably surveyed. It is, perhaps, impossible altogether to elude the rapacity of the superficial conversationalist, but on the whole he has been kept pretty well at arm's-length in the present volume.

Neither does Sir J. Seeley go very deeply into the aesthetic appreciation of this great literary artist. Indeed, beyond a quite incidental tribute to the transcendent excellence of his lyrics and the beauty of his female characters ("unfortunates" for the most part), I do not remember any express criticism in this direction. It seems to be assumed as generally admitted that Goethe is "the greatest modern poet since Shakspeare" (p. v.). But the assumption is one that would be widely challenged. Most Englishmen would put Milton, and most Spaniards Calderon, above the author of "Faust." Most Frenchmen would probably rank at least one of their own poets higher. Mr. Ruskin places Scott higher as a literary genius. The enthusiasts for Shelley and Browning would have a word to say about the claims of their respective favourites. At any rate, Sir J. Seeley is quite aware that his hero's right to count among "the small first class of the select spirits of all time," to be ranked, for instance, with Shakspeare, will not pass undisputed; and the objections that might be raised against such an exaltation are enumerated with great candour (pp. 7, 8). The reply is, that we must take into account the disadvantages under which the great German creator worked: we must consider how little his age and country did for him, and how much he did for them. Shakspeare lived in a world of great men and great deeds. Scott came after great literary models and inherited a great romantic tradition. Goethe lived in petty, prosaic surroundings, and had no poetic masterpieces in his own language to fall back on, while the prevailing literary standards were poor and grotesque. He had not only, like the English dramatist, to create a national literature, but also, like Wordsworth, to reform a public taste.

I cannot help thinking that this plea involves some exaggeration, and ignores some important facts. Klopstock, Lessing, and Wieland, who surely ought to count for something as reformers and models, are altogether passed over. And if Germany was unaccustomed to good literature, at least she welcomed it warmly when it appeared. The author of Götz had not, like the author of the Lyrical Ballads or the author of Sordello, to fight against obloquy and neglect. Sir J. Seeley himself reminds us how each successive achievement of the young master was received by his countrymen with rapturous applause. The anomaly, the thing to be explained, is that Goethe could not sustain a steady flight in any one direction, and therefore did not leave behind him a coherent mass of finished artistic production. Schiller, coming only ten years later, with less genius, with less than half the working life, hampered by weak health and narrow means, was able to complete that great series of masterpieces which still holds the German stage and will probably hold it for ever. Had Goethe worked his way up through a succession of imperfect or ephemeral essays, one could understand that the want of a firm and elastic literary spring-board was responsible for his miscalculations and failures. But, on the contrary, the first step costs him nothing; it is when he tries to follow up his successes that he breaks down. "Clavigo" and "Stella," the "Natural Daughter," the second "Faust," the happily unfinished "Achilleis," the later portions of Wilhelm Meister's Apprenticeship and the whole of his Travels, the Elective Affinities, one may add in science the Farbenlehre, are so many disasters coming after as many triumphs in the same fields. Matthew Arnold has called him "the greatest critic of all times," but after the review of "Hamlet," what single detailed and finished appreciation of a great work or of a great man has he to show? Nay, take him in the character on which Sir J. Seeley dwells with most enthusiasm, study him as an educator of the German people, and there seems to be the same story of a brilliant start ending in a lamentable breakdown. Except for Heine, as the author reminds us, German poetry died with him, and the influence of Wilhelm Meister on the German novel has been entirely mischievous. The great conquests of the German intellect have been won on lines that he avoided or despised: scholarship, history, systematic philosophy, experimental science, and patriotic statesmanship. Music, the supreme German art, owes nothing to him. On the other hand, he has exercised a great and salutary influence on other countries, particularly our own, to which full justice is done in this volume. But it seems to me more than an exaggeration to say that Wilhelm Meister "has been the model on which the novel of the present day is formed" (p. 122). Rather is it the last survival of the old picaresque novel—the novel represented by such works as the Metamorphoses of Apuleius, Don Quixote, Gil Blas, and Tom Jones—or not quite the last if we count Pelham as a somewhat effaced type of the same school. In the modern novel the interests of passion and sentiment dominate every other as they certainly do not in Meister.

When Goethe found that his poetic invention was flagging—which, as we have seen, happened rather often—he tried to supply its place by reflections on the conduct of life, the management of affairs, horticulture, the fine arts, natural science, and so forth. Unhistorical as he was, he even treats us to an account of the feudal system in the second "Faust." Most readers find him very dull on these occasions. Sir J. Seeley seems to resent the charge. He implies that it is all the fault of their own frivolity, that what they call dulness is really the serious treatment of serious subjects. If they are not interested they ought to be (p. 30). M. Scherer was serious enough in all conscience, and interested in serious subjects; if, as we are here told, he found Goethe dull, the fault cannot have been entirely in himself. It must, I think, be admitted that certain discussions are duller in a novel or a poem than elsewhere, just because the romantic element puts us out of tune for them. About a third of the Elective Affinities is occupied with the laying-out of an ornamental garden. This might be interesting in one of Mrs. Beeton's publications, but it becomes highly exasperating when what we want is to hear more about the unlawful passion of Edward and Ottilie. And, apart from this consideration, Goethe, like other Germans, is apt to treat his serious subjects in a rather heavy and pedantic style. But there is one important point that Sir J. Seeley must be held to have made out. Whether or not Tennyson's "Palace of Art" was intended as a satire on Goethe, the satire does not apply to him. He was no apostle of an unmoral, merely aesthetic culture, but rather one who strove to make life all round something better and nobler than he found it. This is exactly the sort of appreciation that Goethe himself would have desired, since what most struck him in Carlyle was that the young Scotch critic drew attention above all to the intellectual and moral substance of German literature.

If, in the foregoing remarks, I have ventured to differ on some points from a writer whom I so much admire as Sir J. Seeley, I trust that this will not be attributed to the inspiration of Goethe's own Mephistopheles, "der Geist der stets verneint," but rather to the influence of the book itself, which, like everything by the same distinguished author, is not only learned, tasteful, lucid, ingenious, but also pre-eminently suggestive.

ALFRED W. BENN.

"HEROES OF THE NATIONS."—Henry of Navarre and the Huguenots in France. By P. F. Willert. (Putnam's Sons.)

MR. WILLERT is well known to all students of French history as a thorough master of the subject; and in this volume he has given us in a moderate compass a lucid narrative of one of its most important and critical periods, associated with the interesting if somewhat enigmatical figure whose name stands on the title-page.

The epoch of the Reformation in France has been treated by many English writers, but perhaps no one has given a clearer or more concise sketch of its earlier stages than Mr. Willert has done in his opening chapter. The whole story is full of startling changes and surprising vicissitudes; and of these none is more remarkable than the importance into which the Huguenots suddenly rose in 1560, on the death of Francis II. and the commencement of the minority of Charles IX. Hitherto a small and despised sect, meekly enduring persecution, they now appear as a powerful body with influential leaders, and form a numerous contingent in the States-General of 1561. Mr. Willert draws attention to the importance of this assembly.

"Its proceedings would, had we space, be deserving of our most careful attention, because they show that there was at that time in France a large party in favour of a policy of religious, constitutional, and administrative reform which, could it have been adopted, might have changed the whole future of the country, and have saved it from many years, perhaps from centuries, of war, suffering, despotism, and revolution; because then for the first time we find the great principle of toleration authoritatively laid down: 'It is unreasonable to compel men to do what in their hearts they consider wrong, for whatever we do against our conscience is sin.'"

This was, in fact, the time at which the reforming party had the best chance of success. "It is probable that the number of the Protestants was never greater than during the first years of the reign of Charles IX." As in most other European countries, the principal support of the reforming movement came from the middle classes. The Huguenots have often been regarded as an aristocratic party; but they never comprised more than a decided minority of the nobility, and included but few of the great nobles. On the other hand, the movement took but little hold of the lower classes. The mob of Paris and most other large towns were fanatically hostile; and "there were few proselytes among the peasantry, except where, as in Languedoc and the country of the Vaudois, the ground was prepared by older traditions of resistance."

Of the character of many of the Protestant leaders, Mr. Willert writes in a very eulogistic strain, but he does them no more than justice when he says:

"The noblest traditions of feudal chivalry, the culture of the Renaissance, a piety inspired and sustained by the constant study of the Gospels, produced men in whom the best characteristics of their nation were combined with a moral elevation, a purity and dignity of character, an heroic breath of soul animated by a simple piety and chastened by a chequered experience, rarely, if ever, equalled."

Our author, however, is unjust to his own countrymen when he draws this invidious comparison: "By the side of the Colignys, the La Noues, and Du-Plessis Mornays, the characters of the Eliots, Hampdens, and Hutchinsons of our own Civil Wars appear narrow and incomplete." It is surely no disparagement to the former to say that the latter were fully worthy to be ranked beside them.

Coligny himself is truly described as "one of the noblest characters, and one of the ablest soldiers and statesmen, produced by the French Reformation." There is hardly a character in French history, and few in any history, who can vie with him in the combination of intellectual and moral greatness; and, with the exception of his contemporary, William the Silent, there was none of that age whose untimely end was so great a loss to his country and to mankind. Henry of Navarre has no claims to be compared with such men for single-mindedness of purpose and grandeur of character; and we feel that, from Coligny to him, the descent is great in every way.

One who changed his religious opinions no less than three times in a space of little more than twenty years, and twice at least when influenced by motives of personal advantage, was clearly lacking in steadiness of principle. Some excuse may be pleaded for Henry's forced conversion to Catholicism after the Massacre of St. Bartholomew, considering that his life was in peril, and few would be disposed to judge him harshly for returning to the Protestant party as soon as he found himself free. But his subsequent return to the Roman Church, without any serious pretence of change of conviction, merely in order to secure the French crown, admits of little extenuation. Mr. Willert rightly refuses to accept the validity of the pleas which have been urged in excuse of this act.

"We cannot join those who praise the conversion of Henry IV. as a sacrifice of private feelings to public welfare. No doubt it facilitated the work of pacification, and shortened the material sufferings of France, but at the price of setting up before the nation an example of the sacrifice of honour and principle to expediency. The king assured the friends, whose faith he formally abjured, that he would never forget them; that if need were he was ready to die in their defence; and when in his coronation oath he swore to drive all heresy from his dominions, he had fully determined to secure toleration and equal rights to his heretical subjects. This the Romanists knew, and therefore his abjuration did not preserve him from their plots, nor ultimately from the assassin's knife. If it was necessary that the King of France should be a Romanist; if the connexion between Church and State was so intimate that all heresy was politically dangerous, then Richelieu, who deprived the Huguenots of their political privileges, and Louis XIV., who refused toleration to their doctrines, were better statesmen than Henry IV. The dragonnades of his grandson were the logical consequences of the conversion of the first Bourbon king."

The romantic history of the wanderings and battles of Henry is well told by Mr. Willert; but in this field he has had several predecessors. No English writer, however, has given an equally detailed account of the king's administration after he was securely established on the throne. The difficulties of the task were certainly considerable in the state to which the country had been reduced.

"The most pressing need of the Government was to find some escape from the terrible financial embarrassment, due as much to extravagance, maladministration, and dishonesty, as to thirty-five years of civil and foreign war. Henry IV. was fortunate in having by his side the right man for the task, and he showed himself worthy of such good fortune by giving to that man full confidence and support."

The personal character of Henry's great minister, the Duke of Sully, has been very variously judged, and his own Memoirs do not present it by any means in a favourable light. But of his administrative talent there can be little question, and Mr. Willert expresses a very high opinion of his financial measures.

"The services which he rendered to his country were so opportune as to be of inestimable value; yet what he effected was very simple. He introduced an orderly and business-like method of keeping the public accounts, prevented speculation, and raised the taxes to be levied in a manner as economical to the Government and as little oppressive to the public as was possible without a complete change in the existing system. At the same time, supported, or rather urged on, by the king, he did much by the wise encouragement of productive enterprise to assist the wonderful recuperative power which France had always shown during her short periods of respite from foreign war or domestic disorder."

High estimates have sometimes been formed of the prosperity of the lower classes in France at the close of Henry IV.'s reign, and the king himself has been credited with the main share in bringing it about; but on both points there has been much exaggeration.

"So far was the proverbial fowl from being in every pot, that there were still many parts of France where the lower classes scarcely knew what it was to have a full meal, and yet more where the standard of living was so low that a short harvest was followed by famine."

It is very doubtful, too, whether the improvement which unquestionably did to some extent take place in the condition of the French people at this epoch was, in any great degree, attributable to the measures of the Government. It has been, with considerable reason, ascribed to the fact that after the long continued civil wars a considerable quantity of land was thrown on the market, of which the peasantry became large purchasers. As the French historian, Michelet, expresses it, the prosperity which resulted from this cause was "baptized with a royal name."

Mr. Willert concludes his work with an attempt at a general estimate of Henry's character. The task, as he confesses, is a somewhat difficult one, by reason of the apparently discordant features which the subject presents. There is certainly much in Henry that repels us. An utter looseness of principle, combined with an addiction to vicious pleasures of a rather coarse nature, reminds us strongly, as Mr. Willert remarks, of his grandson, Charles II. of England. But we instinctively feel that it would be unjust to place the two on the same level, and that Henry certainly possessed many good qualities of which Charles was utterly destitute. There was in him a genuine humanity and readiness to forgive enemies, which was a very different thing from the mere careless good nature of his descendant. "No faults were so unpardonable in his eyes as those of cruelty and vindictiveness." And when we consider what the atrocities of civil strife in France had been in that age, we must recognise some real nobleness of character in one who, after passing through such scenes, could still show himself merciful.

"There was that about him which, whatever he did, prevented him from being mean or hateful; and it is not without reason that, of all the kings who have occupied the French throne, Henry of Navarre still retains the first place in the memory and affections of his people."

R. SEYMOUR LONG.

NEW NOVELS.

Orchard Damerel. By Alan St. Aubyn. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

The Husband of One Wife. By Mrs. Venn. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

A Man of To-day. By Helen Mathers. In 3 vols. (White.)

Just Like a Woman. By Mrs. Edward Kennard. (White.)

The Temple of Death. By Edmund Mitchell. (Hutchinson.)

The Monk of Mar Saba. By Joseph Hocking. (Ward, Lock & Co.)

Between the Silences. By Curtis Yorke. (Jarrold.)

Neuroomia. By G. McIver. (Sonnen-schein.)

A Sleep Walker. By Paul H. Gerrard. (Henderson.)

NOTHING is more pleasant to a critic than the task of reviewing an author whose works show progressive excellence with every fresh effort. Nobody who remembers the wild eccentricities and inaccuracies of A Fellow of Trinity, published some four or five years ago, would readily believe that the charming three volumes just issued under the title of Orchard Damerel had been penned by the same hand. The latter work is not, indeed, perfect, even of its kind: the plot, such as there is, is thin enough; and the well-meaning but weak-minded young clergyman who forms the central figure here, as in so many successive works by Alan St. Aubyn, might well have been exchanged for some other kind of hero, if only for the sake of variety. But the character-drawing is very creditably done, and the whole story reads smoothly and wears an easy air of probability. Very amusing is the accident by which Robert Lyon, curate of Stoke Lucy, comes in for a living, and is enabled to marry. Being suddenly called upon to preach an Advent sermon in a distant town, he had hurriedly caught up one written by his father half a century before, and preached it without previously reading it through. Its narrow old-fashioned views about the Millennium were directly at variance with his own broader doctrines; but they went to the heart of one of his hearers, the old Countess of Aylmerton, who, within a year afterwards, bestows on him the family living. The blunders committed and the debts contracted during Robert Lyon's first twelve months in his new parish, and the unhappy necessity under which he labours of having either to confess to his patroness that she has been mistaken with regard to his views or else to keep up the deception by preaching the whole series of his father's old sermons, instead of his own—he adopts the latter course—are told with much point and humour. The author should have acquainted herself with legal procedure sufficiently to avoid confusing an execution with a writ, and should be aware that service of the latter precedes levying of the former; otherwise there are no flaws in the book that call for notice.

In The Husband of One Wife are narrated the escapades, frivolities, and freaks in which a pretty and wilful young woman indulges during the interval between her first and third marriages. Victoria Goldenour, who, by the death of her husband in a railway accident, has been left a widow with one child, first appears on the scene as a well-dressed woman of five or six and twenty occupying lodgings in Cambridge, where she speedily scandalises the austere society of the University by extravagances in dress, manners, and style of living, but establishes herself on a friendly footing with that eminent divine and philanthropist, Dr. Terence Garfoyle, vicar of St. Amwell's and Canon of St. Ives, who is instrumental in bringing her child safely through a dangerous illness. The aged minister, having fallen a victim to the widow's fascinations, succeeds, after considerable difficulty, in inducing her to marry him; and the remainder of the story is a chronicle of the surprises and tortures inflicted upon him by the madcap behaviour of the wife he has chosen. Much patience is required to read this narrative. The author is to be credited with unusually subtle powers of analysis; but that is no reason why the reader should be treated to a too liberal exhibition of them, which fails in its purpose of carrying him in the way she would evidently wish. To most people Dr. Garfoyle will only appear as a pious, dreamy, and tender-hearted old noodle of fifty, who, having chosen to marry a stagey and, in some respects, rather vulgar little woman of half his age, arouses in us no sympathy when he finds that the result does not come up to his expectations. We do not believe, and scarcely care to read, the elaborate sophistries by which he persuades himself of the wisdom of his choice; nor is it credible that a woman of so volatile and dissatisfied a nature as Victoria Goldenour could have led a life of undisturbed peace and domestic felicity with her first and third husbands. Further, Mrs. Venn might have written a pleasanter book if she had refrained from the constant introduction of dialogues in which each speaker delivers himself or herself of elaborate essays, sometimes two or three pages long, expressed, no doubt, in choice English and embellished with a rich variety of fanciful metaphor, but neither natural nor entertaining.

Readers of A Man of To-day must be prepared for an introduction, at the outset, to a country family whose members are for the most part alluded to by their nicknames only. The Chief, Maria, Easter, Nan, Hugon, Melons, the Ancient Mariner, Bunkulorum, Sweet William, Dinkie, Daddy Gardner, Whipper Snapper, and the Shavers, confront us almost from the start; and the author, sailing along apparently under the easy assumption that we are all following and understanding her, nowhere, or in very few instances, condescends to offer the smallest explanation of this remarkable nomenclature: so that even when we have finished the book it is still not clear whether, for instance, "Melons" is a baptismal name or not, and but for the personal pronouns we should not know whether it represented a boy or a girl. There is a touch of effrontery about this style of writing which is sure to irritate people who wish to have a clear and distinct idea of the personalities they are reading about. Apart from this feature, the story is not without interest in connexion with Basil Strokov, a Russian prince and notorious lady-killer, with whom the heroine, Easter Denison, becomes involved in some dangerous predicaments, first as an unmarried girl, and afterwards as the wife of Jem Burghersh, in the end apparently eloping with him. The device by which she is rescued from the elopement, and kept in hiding from her husband for six months, does little credit to the author's ingenuity. It is so entirely devoid of probability—the concealment being effected close to the husband's mansion, in a country village where such a secret could not possibly have been kept for a week—that the plot, which is strong in parts, completely collapses at the finish. Throughout, the writer would do well to try and distinguish between brevity and obscurity: she has an unpardonable trick of substituting keywords for sentences, and cutting down what should be a description of ten lines in length to an outline of two, leaving it to the imagination to fill up gaps, a process odious to every novel-reader.

To some extent Mrs. Edward Kennard has improved upon her ordinary performances in Just Like a Woman, though the old familiar features every now and then crop out. Of course, there is the ignorant and brutal husband, united to an intellectual and refined woman. Eve Carlingford had a lord and master whose nature was "cast in a coarser, more sensuous"—the writer meant "sensual," no doubt—"and material mould than her own," and accordingly "she withdrew like a sensitive snail into her shell." Happily she was not long destined to remain in the position suggested by the remarkable simile we have just quoted, for Mr. Carlingford dies, and leaves her free to take London by storm as a pretty widow, and to accept an offer of marriage from the Duke of Bombay, a little wizened old gentleman, "frail and old and shaky," but with the wealth and position for which she craves. Becoming ashamed of herself, she throws him over, and escapes to Norway, where she falls in with Thorvald Turgersen, a dramatist, whose realism, unlike Ibsen's, points out the better side of human nature, instead of dissecting vice and ignoring the good. Just Like a Woman is merely a light society novel; but it is entertainingly written, and will give pleasure to those who like this class of literature.

The Temple of Death is to be recommended on several grounds. The subject is an unusual one, being a narrative of the collapse of "one of the most mysterious and bloodstained creeds ever met with among the many strange and revolting religions which survive, despite the British conquest, from remote antiquity in Hindustan," and of which we know absolutely nothing. The discovery of a hideous charnel-house, deep in the bowels of a limestone mountain, sacred to Yama, the Hindu God of Death, and the horrible orgies celebrated in his honour, are related with singular vividness and power. It is seldom one meets with a tale purporting to be the narrative of an eye-witness, and written in the first person, which so completely succeeds in enlisting the reader's interest, and inspiring a belief in the reality of the events narrated. The fact that it is written in simple and unpretending language throughout adds an additional feature of merit to the book.

The volume entitled The Monk of Mar Saba contains also a story of nearly the same length called "Elrad the Hic." The scene of both is laid in modern Palestine, the convent of Mar Saba being situated on the edge of the desert of Judaea, a few hours' journey from Jerusalem, while the Hics are a peculiar religious sect inhabiting a locality on the shore of the Sea of Galilee, and not far from the town of Tiberias. There is not much to call for comment in the two stories, which are fairly well written and interesting throughout. In the first, a young monk of Mar Saba breaks his monastic vows and flies from the convent, with a view of rescuing an English maiden who is being carried off by Bedouin robbers. In the second, the young chief of the Hics abandons his religion for the sake of a maiden, also of English extraction. There is a good deal of general resemblance in the treatment and scenes of both tales.

Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine, &c. But Mr. Yorke has not pursued an analogous plan in his republication of magazine stories, within the covers of a book named Between the Silences. In the arrangement of such collections it is customary for the longest, if not necessarily the best, tale to be placed first in the series and to give its name to the volume, a usage sanctioned not only by custom but by obvious expediency. It is singular, therefore, that Mr. Yorke should have elected to lead off with a tale which is not only the shortest in the whole collection, but is so flimsy in texture and lugubrious in subject that a reader after perusing it might well be excused if he laid the book down and declined to try the quality of the remainder. Story number two is equally poor. It is a pity that such an arrangement should have been hit upon, because "Conyer's Brilliant Idea" which comes third, is most amusing, while several of the pieces towards the end are of considerable length and merit, especially "Two on an Island" and "The Mystery of Belgrave-square," and certainly deserve a more prominent position in the book.

Utopias have rather overstocked the market of late years; and as the subject inspires but a languid interest in the reading public, a production of this sort must be possessed of a good many fresh features to win much success. If Neuroomia attracts attention, it will not be due to any originality of conception or treatment displayed by the writer. The subject matter is the discovery of a new continent at the South Pole by Montague Periwinkle, captain of the Penguin. He finds the civilisation and scientific appliances of Neuroomia greatly in advance of anything known to exist elsewhere on our planet, and his heart is captivated by the beauty of its female population. In connexion with this latter point, an element of rather broad humour is allowed to appear, which one can hardly reconcile with the dignity attaching to the general subject of the book, though illustrating the polygamous disposition which is proverbially ascribed to the sailor.

A shilling romance, entitled A Sleep Walker, is written in the most approved style of this class of fiction. The diabolical villainy and ingenious plotting exhibited in its pages leave nothing to be desired.

JOHN BARROW ALLEN.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

"THE RHIND LECTURES ON ARCHAEOLOGY."—Scottish Land-Names: Their Origin and Meaning. By Sir Herbert Maxwell. (Blackwoods.) By the publication of this volume, Sir Herbert Maxwell has thoroughly justified his selection as the Rhind Lecturer for 1893. The book challenges direct comparison with a meritorious work which appeared some two years ago, in which Mr. Johnston, with great and conscientious labour, collected from the earliest documents the older forms of Scottish place-names. Sir Herbert, on the other hand, though he gives us few dates, and fewer references to authorities, has not only mastered the difficulties of Gaelic phonology, but shows a firmer grasp of scientific principles than Mr. Johnston, by whose labours, it is needless to say, he has greatly profited. More especially is he to be commended for eschewing the fanciful and poetical etymologies which have proved a snare to some of his predecessors, holding that the most prosaic and commonplace derivation is, as a rule, to be preferred, and also for insisting on the importance of stress in determining which is the qualitative element in compound names. The investigation of Scottish names is beset with special difficulties which do not apply to the place-names of England, Ireland, or Wales. One of these difficulties is the absence of early charters, which hardly exist prior to the twelfth century; while another is due to the multiplicity of tongues, Gaelic, Cymric, Pictish, Norse, or Anglian, in which the name may prove to be significant, and also to the fact that a name is frequently first recorded by a scribe familiar only with the vernacular of some other race. Sir Herbert is conspicuously successful when dealing with names in the region with which he is personally acquainted: less so when he steps across the border on to less familiar ground. Thus, he volunteers the information that Hendon, in Middlesex, means the "old fort," regardless of the extreme improbability of the occurrence of a Welsh name in Middlesex, and also of the fact that in a ninth century charter the name is spelt Heán-dūn, which is manifestly an Anglo-Saxon name meaning the poor or mean hill. Again, he goes out of his way to derive the name of the river Eden in Cumberland, as well as that of the Eden in Fife, from the Gaelic aodann, which means "forehead," or "brow," forgetful of the fact pointed out by Mr. H. Bradley, that the first may be identified with Ptolemy's Ituna, a name apparently cognate with the Cymric river-name Ithon, or Ythan, which means a flowing stream, while the river in Fife, where the occurrence of an early Gaelic name is almost as improbable as in Cumberland, is probably the Tina of Ptolemy, also to be explained as Cymric, and doubtless cognate with the names of the Teign and the Tyne. But such oversights are few, and detract little from the usefulness of the book. It does not pretend to be exhaustive, otherwise we might regret the absence of any notice of Prof. Rhys's ingenious explanation of the name of Glasgow from an endearing nickname of St. Kentigern.

The Writings of Thomas Paine. Collected and edited by Moncure Daniel Conway. Vol. I. (Putnam's Sons.) Mr. Conway does not do anything by halves. Having written the most complete biography of Thomas Paine, he now prepares the first really complete edition of his works, to be contained in four large octavo volumes, of which this is the first. It will include practically everything Paine wrote, the contents ranging from newspaper letters and magazine articles to the most famous of his essays. The first volume covers the period from 1774 to 1779, and commences with Paine's earliest published essay, reprinted now for the first time, from the Pennsylvania Journal for March, 1775. The subject of this essay is African slavery in America, and it is signed "Justice and Humanity." Other subjects which claimed Paine's attention were "Duelling," "Unhappy Marriages," and the claims of women. But his chief concern at that time was, of course, the struggle for American independence, which produced the two most noteworthy items in the present volume—"Common Sense," and the series of papers here called "The American Crisis." Mr. Conway lays proper stress on the historical value of Paine's writings, but there is still something to be learned from him, for although the circumstances have greatly changed since his day, it is to be feared that the present generation is not much nearer to a right understanding of the principles of justice and liberty than was the generation to which he preached. Some of his views on government have since been taught by authorities so eminent as John Stuart Mill and Herbert Spencer, but, seemingly, taught almost in vain. "Society," he says, "is produced by our wants, and government by our wickedness"; and, again, "society in every state is a blessing, but government, even in its best state, is but a necessary evil; in its worst state an intolerable one." "Government, like dress," he says, "is the badge of lost innocence." Three-quarters of a century later, Mr. Herbert Spencer wrote of government: "To the bad it is essential; to the good, not. It is the check which national wickedness makes to itself, and exists only to the same degree." Mr. Conway deserves thanks for the conscientious way in which he has performed his task as editor. His notes are judicious and helpful, and his painstaking industry in this labour of love is manifest throughout the volume.

Natural Value. By Prof. Friedr. von Wieser. Translated by Mrs. C. A. Malleoch. Edited, with Preface and Analysis, by Dr. Smart. (Macmillans.) Prof. Wieser's thoughtful and original book (published in 1888) has found a worthy translator. There are not many cases where the reader might not fancy himself reading an English author. Something better might indeed, have been found for the title of Book III: "The natural imputation of the return from production," where the original is Die natürliche Zurechnung des productives Ertrages. The meaning is, the assignment to the several factors in production of their several shares therein: how much credit, for example, the land, the farmer, the ploughmen, the manure, the seed, and the season, are severally to have for the production of the harvest. So, too, when we read of the "Law of Costs" (instead of Cost) we know at once we are on the track of a German book. Nevertheless, the translation is distinctly well done on the whole; and Dr. Smart's explanations of the subject matter (given in his Preface) bring it more surely within the grasp of the English reader. The Austrians have had a fair hearing in this country and America, for the last six years or so. It is now their own fault if they do not establish a permanent body of disciples among us. It is surprising that the acknowledged founder of the school has seen none of his books translated into our language. It may be because he is held in special honour in his own country, where, at a meeting of the great Currency Commission two years ago, it was reported that a speech of his had caused a fall in the value of stock exchange securities.

Sentences and Paragraphs. By John Davidson. (Laurence & Bullen.) There are some good sayings, and some that are not over good, in Mr. Davidson's little volume. The title suggests a collection of aphorisms merely; but, besides aphorisms on various subjects, we have stray literary criticisms, sometimes extending over several pages, on Ibsen, on Emily Brontë, on Lenau (two or three of whose poems are translated), on Nietzsche (from whom also Mr. Davidson translates), on Carlyle, and on Hazlitt. The book is something of a medley. Of the intermingled reflections, here is a specimen or two:

"There is no greater illusion than disillusion."

"From calamities that seem to flay the very soul, art elaborates sweetness and delight. They say the finest kid is made of human skin."

In this, as again in the following, one has a feeling that there is something wrong: that the nail has not been hit on the head.

"Literary criticism is constantly attempting a very absurd thing—the explanation of passionate utterance by utterance that is unimpassioned: it is like trying to paint a sunset in lamp-black."

But does literary criticism try to "paint sunsets" at all? Or is "painting" the same as "explaining"? And, after all, the "unimpassioned" reader is apt to say to himself, Were such sentences worth the saying? Perhaps in a full page, and as casual suggestions, they might pass; but to print paragraphs as aphorisms, each with its neat Roman numeral, and much space around it, is to put them under a microscope: to challenge leisurely inspection. It is only a peculiar order of mind that is fitted to reproduce itself in detached thoughts, weighty enough in matter, flawlessly lucid enough in expression, to stand alone; and such minds have mostly had this gift, and only this. Mr. Davidson does not appear to belong to that order. He has other gifts, which everyone recognises; but he does not do them justice in Sentences and Paragraphs.

Middle Temple Table Talk. By W. G. Thorpe. (Hutchinson.) There are two kinds of writers. Those who rivet our attention, like Bishop Berkeley in his Siris, which is a closely reasoned argument beginning with the cure for all diseases by means of tar-water and ending with the doctrine of the Trinity; and those who entertain us, like Sterne in his Tristram Shandy, in which logical sequence has no place and which bubbles over with digressions from start to finish. Is Sterne caviare to the general? If so, he has left a numerous progeny of authors more popular than their parent. Mr. Thorpe is nothing if not discursive; and having no axe to grind and no sermon to preach, he tells story after story until his reader is surfeited with good things. We do not say that we have not heard some of his bon mots before, or that some might not have been omitted; but "taken in the lump" they are good. Mr. Thorpe is not only a narrator of the good things of other people: he is a humourist himself. You can see that from a glance at his portrait, or at his scraps of autobiography scattered through the book. We take the following at random. The author was at a little public-house half-way between Barmouth and Dolgelly. He did not join the lodger at the inn in eating a dish of seuse (Welsh for Irish stew):

"My conduct made my companion very uneasy: he dropped hints, made remarks, intended to be unpleasant, and when these produced no effect, asked what the deuce I meant by sitting down to dinner with a gentleman, and 'turning up my nose at the vittles.' The lodger made such a rumpus that it brought the landlord in to see what it was all about. While the angry one was rearranging his ideas, I got a word in—'Landlord, have you got a raw sheepskin on the place?' 'No, haven't killed a sheep for weeks.' 'Then,' with a look at the landlord, 'that mutton must have killed itself.' There was a faint call for 'Brandy, quick!' a rush to the outside, and sounds as of great disturbance of the digestive organs, during which I withdrew."

This anecdote is followed by another, possibly better, but not autobiographical; and so on throughout a book which no one can find too long. Dip into this table talk when you will, and you will find something amusing, something interesting. It is a holiday book, from which the writer probably derived as much amusement as the reader.

The Queen at Balmoral. By F. P. Humphrey. (Fisher Unwin.) Britons sometimes show their inquisitiveness about the Queen in a very offensive manner. Mr. Humphrey tells us that visitors at the Presbyterian kirk near Balmoral use their opera-glasses on Her Majesty. One person visited the kirk on Sacrament Sunday, and, as the Queen left the table, arose from her seat and swept a low curtsey. This account of the Queen's private life is written in a pleasant and not at all in a Paul Pry strain. We are told many details about the gardens, the monuments, the "shields," and the pets of Balmoral. Perhaps the most curious detail is the account of Her Majesty's train.

"It used to be preceded by a pilot-engine, but of late years a new system has been adopted. There are ordinarily three men at work on the line in every one-and-a-half miles. These are turned for the time into signmen, and wherever necessary additional men are placed. They are so stationed that together they command the line. So that really every foot of the line from Ballater to Windsor is under supervision."

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. GEORGE ALLEN informs us that the publication of Mr. Ruskin's Verona and other Lectures is now finally fixed for June 15, when it will be issued simultaneously in America, arrangements having been made with Messrs. Macmillan to copyright the work there. The Letters to a College Friend, which will also be ready about the same time, are of exceptional interest, having been written when Mr. Ruskin was full of his plans for Modern Painters; and the intimate character of the correspondence is shown in the unfettered and diffuse expression of his opinions on such various subjects as: the history of a penny, Lakeland and its nomenclature, men of letters, the scheme of the Creation, the presence of death in Eden, the art of shading (with illustrations of his methods), the choice of metaphor in his poems, scenes of his travels, &c., together with discussions on art and artists, extending over some twenty-five pages.

MR. GEORGE MEREDITH's new novel, "Lord Ormont and his Aminta," which has been running through the Pall Mall Magazine, will be published in three volumes by Messrs. Chapman & Hall in the course of the present month.

MESSRS. LONGMANS have in preparation a series of books, to be entitled "Climbing in the British Isles," by Mr. W. P. Haskett-Smith. The first volume, England, is nearly ready; and it will be followed by two other volumes on Wales and Scotland.

MR. THOMAS POWEL, professor of Celtic at Cardiff, proposes to publish by subscription a photographic facsimile of the Welsh Psalter printed by Bishop Morgan in 1588, of which only four copies are known to be in existence. It is a foolscap quarto volume of 168 pages, in black-letter, and was probably printed by the deputies of Christopher Barker. The text will be preceded by a short introduction, with illustrations of Bishop Morgan's birthplace and the residence of William Salesbury, and with facsimiles of autographs of the bishop and others. Subscribers should address themselves to Mr. C. J. Clark, Lincoln's Inn-fields.

MRS. EDMUND BOGER is writing for Messrs. William Andrews & Co., of Hull, a book on Bygone Southwark, which will deal in a popular manner with historical Southwark and London Bridge. Ecclesiastical, literary, dramatic, and antiquarian associations will be noticed at length; a good deal of attention will be paid to local celebrities; the famous fair and other forms of amusement will be fully noticed; details of local industries will also be included. Numerous illustrations, maps, and plans will be given, and no pains will be spared to render the volume of lasting interest. The authoress is the wife of Canon Boger, of St. Saviour's Grammar School, Southwark.

THE Cambridge University Press will shortly publish a work, entitled The Apostles' Creed: its Relation to Primitive Christianity, by Prof. Swete. Its purpose is to supply educated members of the English Church who are not professed theologians with materials for forming a judgment upon a controversy which originated in Germany, and has recently attracted attention in England. The substance of the book was delivered in the form of lectures at Cambridge during last Lent term.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. announce a volume by the Bishop of Manchester, entitled Church Work: its Means and Methods.

MESSRS. LONGMANS, GREEN & Co. have in the press a new volume of verse by May Kendal, to be called Songs from Dreamland.

EXTRACTS from the works of Robert Greene, M.A., edited by Dr. A. B. Grosart, under the title of Green Pastures, is announced by Mr. Elliot Stock as the new volume of the "Elizabethan Library," to be published immediately.

MESSRS. GEORGE BELL & SONS have in the press a book by Mrs. Edmonds, to be called Amygdala, a Tale of the Greek Revolution.

MR. BLOUNDELL-BURTON'S novel, "The Silent Shore," which is about to appear in serial form in several papers, has already been dramatised and produced in London. The author is now writing a serial for Young England.

AN edition of one thousand copies of Mr. W. M. Conway's Climbing in the Himalayas has been nearly sold out in England. Large numbers have also been sold for the colonies and India, and Messrs. Appleton & Co. have arranged to issue it in the United States. A special edition of the work is now being prepared, in two volumes, the latter of which will contain the scientific memoranda of the expedition, edited by Profs. Roy and Bonney, besides the larger map of the ground explored.

A SECOND edition of the Hon. Roden Noel's Livingstone in Africa, with illustrations by Mr. Hume Nisbet, will shortly be published through Messrs. Ward & Downey.

MR. BENJAMIN KIDD'S book on Social Evolution has already reached a sale of three thousand.

THE demand at the libraries for The Green Bay Tree has already nearly exhausted the first large edition; and Messrs. Hutchinson have a second edition now in the press, also in three volumes.

THE National Home-Reading Union will this year hold two summer meetings—at Buxton during the last week of June, and at Salisbury during the first week of July. At Buxton, geological excursions will be conducted by Mr. J. C. Marr, who will also lecture on "The Building of the Pennine Chain." At Salisbury, special attention will be paid to archaeology, under the direction of Dr. Humphry Blackmore, Prof. T. McKenny Hughes, and Baron Anatole von Hügel.

AT the last meeting for the season of the Library Association, to be held on Monday next at 8 p.m., at 20 Hanover-square, Sir Edmund Verney will read a paper on the public library established under the Library Acts in the village of Claydon, Bucks.

AT the annual meeting of the National Indian Association, to be held in the Indian Conference Room of the Imperial Institute on Friday next, June 15, at 5 p.m., Mrs. F. A. Steel, author of Miss Stuart's Legacy, will read a paper on "Pupils and Teachers in the Punjab."

FOR next week Messrs. Sotheby have included in one catalogue several interesting collections. On Monday they will begin the sale with forty-five lots selected from the library of Mr. Birket Foster, whose collection of pictures fetched such high prices the other day. Almost every one might be placed in the class of "rarissima." Of Shakspere, Mr. Birket Foster had acquired not only all the four Folios, but also six of the Quartos, and the first collected edition of the Poems (1640). Scarcely next in importance may be mentioned—a rather imperfect copy of Caxton's Myrrour of the World; the first edition of the Compleat Angler; Walton's Lives, with his own corrections of the errata; the fourth edition of the Pilgrim's Progress (1680); first editions of Spenser, Suckling, Herrick, Sterne, and Tennyson; and books with the autograph of Martin Luther and Milton. Next follows—two series of Persian drawings that had once belonged to Warren Hastings; a collection of books from the library of Charles Dickens, including some of his own rarest pieces; a MS. inventory of the household effects of Oliver Cromwell; a series of engravings by Cruikshank, belonging to Mr. Spielmann; an extra-illustrated copy of Blomefield's Norfolk, together with a quantity of Norfolk portraits; and two autograph MSS. of Sir Walter Scott from Abbotsford.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

MR. A. AUSTEN LEIGH, provost of King's College, has been elected to the office of vice-chancellor at Cambridge for a second year.

THE following names have to be added to the list of those upon whom the honorary degree of D.C.L., will be conferred at Oxford, on June 20: Prof. R. Lanciani of Rome, and Prof. D. Mendeleef of St. Petersburg.

MR. R. WARRINGTON, of Harpenden, Herts, has been elected to the Sibthorpe chair of rural economy at Oxford, in succession to Sir John Henry Gilbert, with whom he has been long associated in connexion with the agricultural experiments of Sir John Lawes.

THE University of Halle-Wittenberg will celebrate its bicentenary in the week of August. Oxford will be represented on the occasion by Prof. J. Cock Wilson; and Cambridge, by Sir Gabriel Stokes, Dr. J. Sandys, and Prof. J. Armitage Robinson.

THE Smith's Prizes at Cambridge have been awarded to Mr. S. S. Hough and Mr. H. C.

Pocklington, both scholars of St. John's College, who were third and fourth wranglers in Part I. of the mathematical tripos in 1892. The former took for the subject of his essay, "The Oscillations of an Ellipsoidal Shell containing Fluid"; and the latter "The Steady Motion and Small Oscillations of an Electrified Hollow Vortex."

THE Rev. Dr. C. H. H. Wright delivered his terminal lecture as Grinfield Lecturer at Oxford on Wednesday of this week, his subject being "The Septuagint Translation of the Last Vision of Daniel (chaps. x-xii)."

THE Ellerton prize essay will be read in the Divinity School at Oxford, next Monday, by Mr. C. D. Chambers, of Hertford. The subject is: "The Light thrown upon Old Testament History by Egyptian Monuments."

AT a meeting of the Ashmolean Society, to be held in the University Museum at Oxford next Monday evening, Prof. Frank Clowes will read a paper, with experimental and other illustrations, on "The Application of the Hydrogen-Flame to Gas-testing."

THE new buildings of the Indian Institute at Oxford—consisting of an extension of the library and a large lecture-room—were formally opened last Saturday, when speeches were delivered by the Vice-chancellor (Dr. Boyd) and Sir M. Monier-Williams, and Sir W. W. Hunter gave an address on "Indian Education," with special reference to the Hindu and Muhammadan systems. Sir Monier-Williams expressed his intention of presenting at once to the Institute his own Oriental library of between three and four thousand volumes, including a large number of very valuable works. He also announced that the Thakore Sahib of Gondal had offered the money still required for the completion of the museum connected with the Institute.

THE following is the Latin letter, written by the public orator, which was presented by Mr. Oscar Browning, on behalf of the University of Cambridge, at the inauguration of new academical buildings at Caen on June 2:—

"Nuper a Rectora vestro benignissime ceteriora facti, ineunte mense proximo Academiæ vestrae in usum quasi palatium novum auspiciis optimis dedicatum iri, de re tam felici vobis omnibus ex animo gratulamur. Etenim, quamquam cum omnibus doctrinae domiciliis studiorum communium commercio sumus aliquatenus consociati, vobiscum praesertim per saecula compluria necessitudinis vinculo quodam singulari fuimus coniuncti. Primum enim ipsa urbs, quae Academiæ vestrae sedes tam diu fuisse gloriatur, per annos plusquam octingentos temporum splendore gemino ornata est, quae Regis nostri Wilelmi, Normannorum Ducis, et Reginae eius memoriam in perpetuum conservabat. Deinde Academiæ vestram, patriae per tot saecula fidelissimam, fere quadringentos sexaginta abhinc annos Principem nostrum serenissimum Henricum Sextum inter conditores suos habuisse constat. Etiam noemet ipsi Universitatis nostrae inter ornamenta Collegium numeramus fere eodem tempore ab eodem Rege fundatum. Eo libentius igitur hoc ipso anno, quo Collegii Regalis Praeses Universitati toti est praepositus, Collegii eiusdem Socium ad Academiæ vestram honoris causa legatum mittimus; quem tum alias propter causas ea qua solertia comitate et benevolentia accipietis, tum propterea praesertim, quod solus Universitatis nostrae inter praecipuos Reipublicae vestrae illustratissimae a Praeside honoris titulo haud ita pridem est ornatus."

AS the academical year at Cambridge has practically closed, the Registry announces that the total of matriculations during 1893-4 amounts to 935, being the smallest number in any of the last ten years (excepting 1891-2). The high water mark was reached with 1027 matriculations in 1889-90.

At Mason College, Birmingham, Dr. Percy F. Frankland has been elected to the chair of chemistry, in succession to Prof. Tilden; and Mr. W. McNeile Dixon, of Dublin, to the chair of English, in succession to Prof. Arber.

At a meeting of graduates of London, held last week at the chambers of Mr. H. M. Bompas, in the Temple, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

"(1) That this meeting is of opinion that, if a local teaching University for London be desirable, it ought to be constituted apart from the existing University of London;

"(2) That a committee be appointed for the purpose of giving practical effect to the foregoing resolution, to consist of the following gentlemen (with power to add to their number):—Messrs. H. M. Bompas, J. George Joseph, Mr. Heber Hart, Dr. M. Baines, J. Sinclair, Benjamin Whitehead, Dr. Robert Bryant, Pascoe Daphne, H. Broughton Edge, Dr. H. J. Macevoy, Dr. R. M. Williams, and Dr. J. M. Gover."

Graduates who are in sympathy with the objects of the committee may communicate with the hon. secretary, Mr. Heber Hart, Goldsmith-buildings, Temple.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

A POET'S WIFE.

(In memoriam M. Le G.)

A WHITE little soul was cast on the world,
As pure and fair as the falling snow.
Her white little wings on her breast were furled
As she glided down to her home below.

If this white little soul had met with her worth
In a queenly crown she had been arrayed;
But the blind caprice that is god of this earth
Gave her the garb of a simple maid.

And she grew as a lily that lurks in a wood
And scents with its breath a desolate place,
Till she bloomed into beautiful womanhood,
And the light that was in her lighted her face.

Then a poet, walking this weary world,
Like a flash of dawn on her vision broke;
And around his heart her tendrils curled
As a creeper lithe round a shielding oak.

And she turned and twined till the two were one,
And a fresh young life within her stirred;
And a baby soul from beyond the sun
Swam into her ken to a tune unheard.

Across our path the poet strayed;
A tremulous thrill through our woodland ran;
We saw and loved the white little maid,
We saw and loved the white-souled man.

Ah me! had we known for how short a spell
She was lent to our love by the dumb design—
Ah me! but in truth we had loved her well—
My heart, and the heart that is one with mine.

We had shown our love in a thousand ways:
We had brought her flowers from a garden of song;
We had strayed with her soul where the deep brook
Strays:

We had sat where the sunset lingers long.

We had wandered mazy, hand in hand,
Through the summer meads where the sweet birds sing:

And when autumn flared through the golden land,
We had cheated winter with talk of spring.

But we looked through the arch of the coming years,
And we said, "For life she shall still be ours,
Why steal the honey of joys and tears?
Why haste to pluck all time's fair flowers?"

We spake, but the sands of her fated days
Ran swiftly out ere the word was sped:
And the faded wreath of our tardy praise
We can but lay by our Mildred dead.

GRANT ALLEN.

OBITUARY.

CHARLES HENRY PEARSON, LL.D.

THOUGH Mr. Pearson had almost all his life been in weak health, the news of his death (on May 29) comes as a shock to those who have fresh in their minds his one great success, the publication of National Life and Character.

Charles Henry Pearson was born at Islington in 1830, being the fourth son of the Rev. J. N. Pearson, some time vicar of Tunbridge Wells. His eldest brother was Sir John Pearson, a judge of the High Court. He was educated at Rugby in its palmy days, and for a short while at King's College, London. In June, 1849, he matriculated at Oriel College, Oxford, but in the following year gained a scholarship at Exeter. In Michaelmas term, 1852, he was placed in the first class in classics, along with the late Earl of Carnarvon and the late Prof. Chandler. He had intended to adopt medicine as his profession, but his health would not permit of this. In 1854 he was fortunate enough to be elected to a fellowship at Oriel, which still retained not a little of his earlier glory; and this he held until his marriage in 1872. The versatility of his interests may be gathered from the fact that he was both treasurer and president of the Union, and that he also won the prize for the English poem on a sacred subject. From 1855 to 1865 he was professor of modern history at King's College, London, and from 1869 to 1871 he lectured on modern history at Trinity College, Cambridge. To this period of his life belongs his editorship of the short-lived National Review (1862-63), and the publication of two important historical works—A History of England during the Early and Middle Ages (2 vols., 1861-1868), and Historical Maps of England during the First Thirteen Centuries (1869, third ed. 1884).

In 1872 the state of his health compelled Mr. Pearson to emigrate to Australia, where he soon began to take an active part both in education and in politics. In 1874 he lectured in modern history at Melbourne University; and from 1875 to 1877 he was head of the Presbyterian Ladies' College at Melbourne. Henceforth, Mr. Pearson devoted himself more and more to politics, being elected to the Legislative Assembly of Victoria in 1878, and retaining his seat until 1892. But even in politics his chief interest lay in education. His tenure of office as minister of public instruction (1886 to 1890) is notable for his efforts to make primary education compulsory and secular, and also to stimulate secondary and technical instruction in special schools. Besides being a regular contributor to the local press, Mr. Pearson found time to write a third historical work—English History in the Fourteenth Century (1876)—to compile a Students' English Grammar, in co-operation with Prof. H. A. Strong; and (with the same assistance) to edit Juvenal for the Clarendon Press Series (1887).

In 1892 Mr. Pearson returned to England again under medical advice; but to the very last he worked hard as secretary to the Agent-General for Victoria—an appointment formerly held by another man of letters, Mr. Cashel Hoey.

J. S. C.

WALTER HAWKEN TREGELLAS.

THE literary enthusiasts connected with the West Country have to mourn the loss of a friend who was engaged in the same pursuits. Mr. Walter Hawken Tregellas died suddenly at Deal, on May 28.

His father was John Tabois Tregellas, the writer of humorous tales in the Cornish dialect, and his mother was a Miss Hawken. He was born at Truro on July 10, 1831, and educated at its grammar school from 1845 to 1847, where he became friendly with many other clever lads who have since made their way in the world.

A few years ago he wrote for the Journal of the Royal Institution of Cornwall an excellent history of the school, its foundation, its masters, and its pupils. When it became necessary for him to adopt some profession in life, he entered the War Office as Draughtsman. This was on July 10, 1855; and on May 24, 1866, he was promoted to the post of Chief Draughtsman. After thirty-eight years of faithful service, he retired on August 1, 1893, and talked hopefully to his friends of finishing the History of the Tower for which he had long been collecting the materials. But this was not to be.

His chief delight was in his native county and his profession, and fortunately for him his calling suited his tastes and his talents. He compiled in 1878, for Mr. Stanford, a useful Guide to Cornwall, and superintended the revision and printing of the numerous issues which have since been absorbed by the public. From the materials indicated in the Bibliotheca Cornubiensis he compiled two interesting volumes on "Cornish Worthies;" and for the earlier volumes of the Dictionary of National Biography he wrote the lives of the principal Cornishmen who have been embalmed in its pages. To the Journal of the Royal Institution of Cornwall, which is printed in the city of Truro, he contributed many papers: among them articles on the brothers Lander, who were among the early explorers of Central Africa, and Henry Bone, the famous artist on enamel.

Tregellas enjoyed the elucidation of antiquarian remains and ancient buildings. If he spent a holiday at Llangollen, his hours were not wasted in idleness; for he was diligent in tracing the dimensions and description of Castle Dinas Bran, a favourite object of visit in its vicinity, and in noting the objects of interest in the entire Vale. When he wandered on Wimbledon Common, his steps naturally turned to Caesar's Camp; and his description is styled by Mr. Thorne, in the Environs of London, the best account of that entrenchment. His working days were passed in the Horse Guards; and among the most valuable of his contributions to literature was the reproduction of a dozen views of that building and its surroundings as they appeared under the Stuarts and the Georges. For the papers of the Corps of Royal Engineers he drew up an "Historical Sketch of the Permanent Coast Defences of England," and for their Institute at Chatham he compiled a similar paper on "The Defences of Malta."

Tregellas wrote in the Magazine of Art, the Art Journal, and the Nineteenth Century. Most of his topographical articles were inserted in the Archaeological Journal. When the members of the Civil Service determined upon bringing out a magazine of their own, he was called upon for an introduction descriptive of its objects and for contributions to its pages. It was duly started, with the title of Under the Crown; but it appealed only to a limited circle of readers, and its course was soon run.

All the literary work of W. H. Tregellas was done thoroughly, and therefore well.

W. P. COURTNEY.

KONSTANTINE KRYSTALLIS.

A FEW weeks ago, by the premature death of Konstantine Krystallès, a poet was lost to Greece, who, if he did not show the highest genius, has written lines that must for ever live in the hearts of the people. The word "people" is here used advisedly; for his poems, written in the tongue or dialect which is still the language of a large majority of Greeks, appeal to the "people" more than to any other class. Yet who can be insensible to that wonderful charm with which he invests things unreal, so as to make them appear the most real of all? He writes as if he knew all the Nereids, and the witches of the hills and streams and woods, as intimately as the fisher-folk and the Mavromata, of whom the shepherds sing on their pipes; and by the magic of his pen he makes the reader know them also. Always in delicate health, always poor, Krystallès must yet in his rich and peculiar gift have found compensation for the disappointments and wearying care which his humble occupation as a clerk, in order to acquire the τὰ πρὸς ζῆν, must have brought to him.

Let everyone who can read Modern Greek procure his Ανθράκας, and the fascination of his verse must needs be acknowledged by such. It was to one of the shortest poems in the collection bearing the above title, that the prize was adjudged in the poetical competition of 1890. The title of this graceful conception, τὰ ποδὰ τῆς Μαρίας, does not admit of any more poetical translation than "Mary's aprons." Difficult as it is to conceive any inspiration arising from such a prosaic subject, the case is quite different in respect to the ποδὰ worked by the hands of the beautiful Maria, and embroidered all over with stars. Washed and spread out on the river bank to dry, an eagle flying on high saw and pounced upon it, and, carrying it up into the heavens, lost it among the stars, leaving the maiden weeping for her loss. The apron being afterwards discovered upon the ground by some officers of a certain king, and taken to the palace, a reward was offered to whomsoever should find the fair owner, with the result that, Maria being found, the king took her to wife. As Roidis and Politès were the judges, one can hardly question their decision; but ἡ φλογερὰ "the Shepherd's Pipe," appears to me to have far more power as well as pathos than τὰ ποδὰ τῆς Μαρίας.

At the funeral oration delivered in the Parnassos by Kostas Palamas, a poet who is more widely known, the orator likened Krystallès to a bird which flutters and warbles among the low herbage, and does not itself recognise that its wings are made for flying in the high heavens. Perhaps, had Krystallès lived longer, he might have discovered that he possessed that power; but who knows whether, if he had left the earth, he would have carried all hearts with him in his lofty flight, as when hovering near the ground he sang his songs of earth to spellbound listeners? As a prose writer, he showed the same faculty for beautifying small things. His travels among the Vlach mountains, which first appeared in the Εἰδημας, were full of minute details, told so feelingly and graphically that each of his readers went with him all the way.

ELIZABETH M. EDMONDS.

THE Rev. Mark Wilks, who had been in indifferent health for some time past, died on Wednesday, June 6, in the sixty-fifth year of his age. He was well known as having been one of the most active and influential members of the first School Board for London. As chairman of the School Management Committee, he made himself familiar with every school and every teacher under the Board. Mr. Wilks was also for more than thirty years minister of the Congregational Church at Holloway, and was distinguished for the breadth of his theological views and for the natural eloquence with which he expounded them.

We have also to record the death of Edward Capern, at one time well known as the "postman poet." All his life was spent in North Devon. He was born at Tiverton in 1819, and died at Branton, near Barnstaple, on June 5. During his later years he enjoyed a pension of £80 on the Civil List.

IN MEMORIAM.

THE HON. RODEN NOEL.

THERE can scarcely be a more difficult task than to write of a dear and intimate friend immediately after his death. But when he is one whose name is familiar in circles that widen out far beyond that of home ties and close friendships, private feeling must give way; and it seems fitting that these few in memoriam words should appear in the pages of a journal which has printed so many of his own utterances, both in prose and in verse, and which has given to his work so much fair and generously expressed recognition.

The bereaved friends of Roden Noel speak of the charm of his personality, the loveableness of his nature, the warmth and loyalty of his friendship: they speak too of the greatness of his work, and the nobleness and beauty of the song that lived in "the golden mouth."

He was not merely charming in the attraction of his childlike openness, his readiness to receive and to give sympathy, his delicate fun, his hearty enjoyment of the common pleasures of common life, he had also height of vision, depth of insight, and largeness of grasp. So that he must have been a powerful influence, whether he had chosen to leave any expression of himself in literary form or not.

His many-sided nature did find much expression in work which was in its essence great: work dealing with sensuous beauty, "divine philosophy," many-mooded nature, and human life with its joy and its sorrow—its sorrow more than its joy; often its bitterness and anguish.

But if the iron of the world's woe had entered into his soul, he had, too, a message of hope for the sorrowful, of faith for the tempest-tossed: a message that came from the heart of no mere optimist, but expressed the conviction of a thinker, as well as told of the vision of a seer.

He never posed as a teacher; but to know him and his work was to gain a widened outlook, a keener spiritual vitality, an intenser love of man and of nature, and a stronger desire for truth.

E. H. H.

ALAS, that even poets die!

The men who keep the old world young,
Who know God's deepest mystery,
But fall e'er half their song is sung.

Still had the sun, the stars of night,
And waves of haunted Cornish seas,
A hundred jewels exquisite,
Stored for you in their treasuries.

The doors are shut, the locks are sealed,
And many weep above your grave,
Some for the secrets unrevealed,
And all remembering what you gave.

But I who loved your songs and you,
A gracious presence still shall meet,
On peaceful days of August blue,
Haunting Port Wrinkle's tiny street.

Together we'll the footpath take
That winds to high cliff solitudes,
And see the tower of far Landrake,
The autumn-dyed St. German's woods.

Gaze far across the sea-fed tide,
The Hamaze waters glancing bright,
Towards Plymouth, dazzling as a bride,
Sun-smitten in her robes of white.

And when Tregantle's brow is won
And, mid the bracken and the grass,
We hear the solemn unison
Of wild bees singing as they pass,

And those great waves of Cornwall roar
Along the coast from Rame to Looe,
The truths of God and earth once more
I know that I shall learn from you.

P. A.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Expositor for June contains at least two specially interesting articles. One is by Mr. Conybeare, on some New Testament passages which may be illustrated out of Philo. The first, on the representation of the descent of the Holy Spirit as a dove, deserves special attention. It is shown that the supposition of an actual bird is to be found in the earliest forms of the tradition, and that the symbolic use of the dove for the divine wisdom or reason was in vogue among the Hellenised Jews at the beginning of the first century. Another note is on the "seamless coat" of John xix. 23, and a third on the "holy kiss," "kiss of love," "kiss of peace" in early Christian writings. Mr. McLean, of Christ's College, gives a loyal and admiring disciple's description of the late Prof. Robertson Smith's work at Cambridge. Articles by Prof. Macalister on Prof. Sayce, by Dr. Bruce, and by Sir J. W. Dawson (who again forgets all intellectual modesty) complete the contents of the number.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BORINSKI, K. Baltasar Gracian u. die Hoflitteratur in Deutschland. Halle: Niemeyer. 3 M. 60 Pf.
BAUN, J., et L. BACHELIN. Nept contes roumains. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 3 fr. 50 c.
CASE, Jules. L'Etranger: roman. Paris: Ollendorff. 3 fr. 50 c.
DUPONT, E. Les chasses du Soudan. Paris: Challamel. 3 fr. 50 c.
FLAT, Paul. Seconds essais sur Balzac. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
JUBERAN, J. J. Histoire littéraire du peuple anglais des origines à la Renaissance. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 7 fr. 50 c.
LACOMBE, Ch. de. La jeunesse de Beryer. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 8 fr.
MARY, Jules. Pantaloon rouge: roman. Paris: Chailley. 7 fr.
MELEY, L. Poètes Beauregards antérieurs au XIX<sup>e</sup> siècle. T. I<sup>er</sup>. Paris: Bouillon. 5 fr.
NAGEL, W. Geschichte der Musik in England. 1. Th. Straßburg: Trübner. 4 M.
PLATNER, J. Kritische Beiträge zur Erkenntnis unserer sozialen Zustände u. Theorien. Basel: H. Müller. 8 M.
SCHNEIDER, F. J. G. Fichte als Sozialpolitiker. Halle: Kaemmerer. 1 M. 20 Pf.
SCHULTZE, S. Der junge Goethe. Ein Bild seiner inneren Entwicklung. (1749–1775). Halle: Kaemmerer. 10 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- ANER, G. Das antike Mythenwesen in seinem Einfluss auf das Christentum. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 5 M. 50 Pf.
CASPARI, C. P. Das Buch Hiob (1, 1–38, 18) in Hieronymus' Uebersetzung aus der alexandrinischen Version nach e. St. Gallener Handschrift saec. VIII. Christiania: Dybwad. 2 M. 30 Pf.
JUSTINUS' Rechtfertigung d. Christentums (Apologie I. u. II.). Eingeleitet, verdeutsch u. erläutert v. H. Veil. Straßburg: Heitz. 5 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- ANDREU, J. Histoire de l'Agenais. Paris: Picard. 14 fr.
FAVRE, E. Eudes, comte de Paris et roi de France (892–898). Paris: Bouillon. 8 fr.
GESCHICHTSQUELLEN, Osnabrücker. 2. Bd. Osnabrück: Bachhorst. 10 M.
LIEBERMANN, F. Ueb. die Leges Anglorum saecule XIII. ineunte Londonis collecta. Halle: Niemeyer. 3 M.
NEUBERG, M. J. Geschichte der bayerischen u. der pfälz-bayerischen Archive der Wittelsbacher. IV. München: Ackermann. 12 M.
NICOLE, J. Le livre du préfet; ou, l'édit de l'empereur Léon la Sage sur les corporations de Constantinople. Traduction française du texte grec de Genève. Basel: Georg. 2 M.
PERRV, Lucien. Le Roman du Grand Roi: Louis XIV. et Marie Mancini. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
VASEL, J. B. Les Bénédictins de Saint-Germain des Près et les Savants lyonnais. Paris: Picard. 10 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BONNIER, G., et G. de LATENS. Flore de la France. Paris: Dupont. 10 fr.
ENOEL, Ueb. iranké Ammonitenformen im schwäbischen Jura. Leipzig: Engelmann. 5 M.
LONARDI, A. Gli Insetti nocivi. Vol. II. Lepidopteri o farfalla. Napoli: Margioli. 5 fr.
MANNHIM, A. Principes et développements de géométrie cinématique. Paris: Gauthier-Villars. 25 fr.
NAVILLE, E. La définition de la philosophie. Basel: Georg. 4 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BEER, T. de. Die Widersprüche der Philosophie nach Al-Gazzali n. ihr Ausgleich durch Ibn Rosa. Strassburg: Trübner. 5 M. 60 Pf.
- BOISSIER, A. Documents assyriens relatifs aux préjugés. T. 1. 1re livr. Paris: Bouillon. 12 fr.
- GRIMM, J. u. W. Deutsches Wörterbuch. 9. Bd. 1. Lfg. Bearb. unter Leitg. v. M. Heyna. Leipzig: Hitzel. 2 M.
- JÉQUIER, G. Le Livre de ce qu'il y a dans l'Hadès. Paris: Bouillon. 9 fr.
- JOB, L. Le Présent et ses dérivés dans la conjugaison latine. Paris: Bouillon. 10 fr.
- JOHANSSON, K. F. Der Dialekt der sogenannten Shäb-bäghri-redaktion der 14 Edikte d. Königs Açoka. 2. Thl. Upsala: Lundström. 4 M.
- NOREN, A. Abriss der urgermanischen Lautlehre m. besond. Rücksicht auf die nordischen Sprachen. Strassburg: Trübner. 5 M.
- QVISTAD, J. K. Nordische Lehnwörter im Lappischen. Christiania: Dybwad. 8 M.
- FOURNIER, P. Studien zur lateinischen Lautgeschichte. Strassburg: Trübner. 5 M. 60 Pf.
- URKUNDEN, ägyptische, aus den königl. Museen zu Berlin: 11. Hft. Berlin: Weidmann. 2 M. 40 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE NORTH-PICTISH INSCRIPTIONS TRANSLATED AND EXPLAINED.

VI.—The Remaining Stones.

Bodleian Library, Oxford.

In this letter I shall deal with all the remaining stones, in order of their illegibility.

I. I ought to have mentioned in a former letter a fragment found close to the Conningsburgh Stone in Shetland. Prof. Rhys (p. 206) read it as IR, followed by an apparent U, and Lord Southesk (Oghams of Scotland, p. 203) agrees with him. Mr. Allen, according to Prof. Rhys, treats it as ER, followed by an apparent o; but Mr. Allen's drawing, now before me, seems to regard it as ORE. It is, indeed, a question which is the upper and which the lower side of the stem-line; and at present one can only say that, if the fragment contains the letters ER, they may be the preposition er, Pictish for air ("upon" or "in front of"), as in the Conningsburgh Stone itself.

II. A fragment from Abernethy, showing "certain portions of the legs of a horse, so that it was probably . . . ornamented with a hunting scene" (Rhys, p. 263). The only Oghams left may be read either imn or qmi: the latter is more likely—query, (Meq)q Mi . . ., "Of Mac Mi . . ."

III. The Brodie Stone was discovered in digging out the foundations of the present kirk of Dyke and Moy (New Statistical Acc. of Scotland, Elginshire, p. 221), which was built in 1781, but behind the site of an old one (Sinclair's Stat. Acc. xx., p. 224). On one side it has a cross, and ornamentation not distinctively Pictish: on the other side a number of symbols, none of them sacred, and some of them distinctly Pictish. And it differs from our previous examples of the kirkyard march-stone, in having Oghams on the side which bears the cross as well as on the other. Unhappily Stuart does not copy the Oghams, Brash does not give the stone, and I have seen no photograph or squeeze of them; but I have rubbings kindly lent me by Mr. Romilly Allen, and the published readings of Prof. Rhys and Lord Southesk.

The inscription on the cross-side runs along the right-hand edge. Prof. Rhys, after giving a liberally queried transcript, says "It is useless to try to make anything out of this, which is imperfect at the beginning and the end, as it is also in the middle" (p. 288). Lord Southesk and Mr. Allen's rubbing have suggested to me the germs of a reading and translation; but it would be waste of time to discuss the inscription at present.

On the other face of the stone are two rows of Oghams, one on each of the long edges. In the only similar case which we have had, that of the Bressay Stone, the inscription begins on the right-hand edge. Taking the right-hand row first, then, we find it beginning, quite unmistakably, Eddarrnon; but after that almost everything is missing or conjectural. There are strokes below the line which Prof. Rhys (p. 287) regards as probably part of another n; then comes a gap; after which he reads a possible hh, followed by tum and a possible o; and then no more can be read.

Edd is that same variant of ett which we have already found on the Golspie Stone. It is followed by the name of the stead Arrnen(n) = Arr'n'on(n), "in front of the gorse" (or, less probably, "in front of the stone"), a name which, as in the case of the Golspie edd, describes its physical situation. The few remaining letters must wait till I can form an opinion on the conflicting readings of them.

The inscription on the left edge is copied by Prof. Rhys in twenty-one characters; but, as twelve of them are queried, I am obliged, in this case also, to wait for more light.

IV. The Aquhollie Stone, about five miles north-west of Stonehaven, has no obvious ornamentation, and its vowel-marks are notches rather than lines. Prof. Rhys, regarding certain marks in the stone as just possibly indicating an a at the beginning and an i at the end, suggests that in this case we should have a common ending of a Celtic genitive, and the whole would be Vinoni Tedovi, or else Avi Nonitedovi, meaning "the grave of Vinon Tedov, or of O'Nonitedov;" "but this is sheer guesswork" (p. 271), and on p. 304 he says that this stone "may be wholly Celtic."

All, however, that Prof. Rhys fairly satisfied himself of was Vi(or uo)noni(?)ted(?)ov, and his only reason for reading the second i was that Mr. Allen found the space occupied to be the same as filled by the previous i: he himself "could not decide whether to count four considerable depressions, or exactly twice the number by including less perceptible ones."

Mr. Allen has kindly lent me his rubbing of the stone. I see no trace of initial a; and the marks at the end are separated by an abnormal interval from the preceding v. As for the doubtful second i, there are four notches so close together that it is incredible that a single notch should have filled the remaining space between the n and the d; and, as Prof. Rhys found eight depressions, I shall read with confidence Vi Non e(ht)t Edov, and construe O'Non's: Hearth—"Edov."

Vi = ui, gen. of ua, "grandson" or "descendant," the modern O'. We have already had an unquestionable example of the Ogam for v being used as = u, in the Nahhtvddaðs of the Bressay Stone; even if we did not, as we do, know the derivation of that name, we know that neither in Norse nor in Gaelic would htvd be a possible sequence of sounds, however divided. The reason doubtless lies in the fact that both in Irish and Scottish Gaelic a v is frequently sounded as w or u (O'Donovan, Ir. Gr. p. 47, Stewart, Gaelic Gr., p. 12); and I have previously pointed out that in the Dean of Lismore's Book we have vor and wor side by side.

Non may = the Nan and Nun of the Newton stone; for the Golspie Stone shows us o as = the breath-vowel (hhallor = Norse hallr). I suspect Non and Nun to be genitives of a nom. No or Nu (cf. O. Ir. bró, gen. brón; cá, gen. con), the same, perhaps, which on the Golspie Stone makes its genitive Nu according to the common rule in Scottish Gaelic. And I suspect that the genitive Nan in the St. Ninian's Stone is another variant.*

* The correspondence between Pictish phonetics as exhibited by me from these inscriptions and as exhibited by Dr. Whitley Stokes in Bezzenger's Beiträge, xviii., pp. 111, 115, from the Irish Annals is very marked, but only in this case have I borrowed an idea from it. Dr. Stokes suggests that we have "Traces . . . of the n-decl.

Edov = Fhedov, our Ogam inscriptions being all phonetic, and fh silent in Gaelic; the Newton Stone has already given us Rosir = Rosfhir. This Fhedov is the aspirated form of fedov = feduib, O. Ir. dat. pl. of fid, a tree (Zeuss, p. 40). I have previously pointed out, at second-hand from Prof. Mackinnon,* that in the Dean of Lismore's Book we get seanov = Fiannaibh; and we have already had another locative-dat. pl. in -ov (-obhv) in the Legie Elphinstone Stone. The cause of the aspiration of the initial is that Ehtt-Fhedov was used as a compound name, of which, according to the rule in later Gaelic, the second member would take aspiration; we shall have a parallel instance in the Aboyne Stone.

The name Edov is, of course, as if an Englishman should call his house The Fir, or The Grove. And I am inclined to guess that the additional strokes at the end of the inscription, which Mr. Allen's rubbing does seem to show, somewhat like this:

are a rough representation of a tree.

Lord Southesk, in a paper read to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland on December 14, 1885, writes that the stone "is said to have formed part of a circle recently removed" (p. 37). In that case the circle was doubtless a very large one, and the other stones marked the boundary of the stead at other points.

V. The Seconie Stone is an exact parallel in site and design to the Golspie Stone, like which it served to divide a kirkyard and an homestead. It was found in the old kirkyard of Seconie, in Fife (Stuart ii., Notices, p. 6). It has a cross on one side (the side, doubtless, that faced the kirk), and on the other three men on horseback hunting a stag with dogs; on this latter side it has also the so-called elephant-symbol and an Ogam inscription, together with a small plain cross of two lines, very like that on the Lunasting Stone. I maintained that in the case of the Lunasting Stone this cross was really a pointer, indicating the position of the stead in relation to the line on which the stone stood; and I maintain the same here.†

Prof. Rhys (p. 304) gives the inscription as Ehtarrmnnonn. The two strokes after the second r have, however, been read as ba by Lord Southesk (Pictish Symbolism, p. 75); and from a rubbing kindly lent me by Mr. Romilly Allen, and a squeeze kindly sent me by Dr. Anderson, I consider that they are probably a b followed by an angled a facing left. I divide Eht arr bavonn, and construe "Hearth with enclosure for cows." Bavonn I take to = babhun, which the Highland Society's dict. gives as "An inclosure for cattle, a fold where cattle are milked"; for ö instead of ü see Zeuss, p. 14. Arr is, of course, the preposiin Canonn . . . Manann," which are genitives of Cana (p. 91) and Mano (p. 104). But he also quotes the gen. Manonn, and asks, "Is the 'Gland Canan' of Bk. of Deir, V miswritten for 'Gland Canonn'?" And the conclusion is natural that genitives in -n from a nom. in -na or -no were written indifferently as -nan or -non; but I presume that in these cases (unlike Nan, Non, Nun) the variable vowel was unaccented.

* From him and Dr. Joass I also learnt that in Sutherland Catuv is said for Cataibh, and Galluv for Gallaibh.

† I may add that the horizontal line of the "cross" is on a distinct slope, and that at the left end of it another short line seems to run at right angles—facts which support the theory that it is a miniature ground-plan.

tion* ar or air, of which the literal meaning is "upon"; idiomatically it = "with," in such cases as this, as a reference to the Highland Society's Dictionary will show. I have before me a manuscript story dictated by a Scottish Gael, and edited by his children, in which occur the words, "our house is on one bed," meaning "is one-bedded, has only one bed."

VI. This stone now stands in Aboyne Castle. In 1874 it was said to be "in the churchyard of Aboyne" (Proc. Soc. Ant. Scot. xi., p. 524), but Lord Southesk in 1884 said that it was "Found in the old churchyard of Formaston, about two miles from Aboyne." I have searched Gazetteers and Ordnance-maps in vain for Formaston, in the hope of tracing our Pictish place-name near it.

The stone, of which a great part is lost, bears, according to Lord Southesk, "portions of an embossed and interlaced cross" on the same side as the Ogam, and the photograph attached to the offprint of his paper makes it morally certain that the interlaced work when complete did form a cross. On the right of it is a mirror, a frequent object in Pictish stones: it was cut before the Ogam, which make a bend to avoid it.

Prof. Rhys writes the inscription Maqgo Talluorrrn-ehht Vrobbaccennevv. The first o is the same peculiar character which he considered (p. 272) to = an Ogam given as o or oi in the Ballymote book: I suggest that it is borrowed from the Roman alphabet, and represents an o with an i (the stem-line) lying across it, like the ø of the St. Vigean's Stone. Lord Southesk's photograph shows a distinct cut joining it to the T. The rr is followed by a "deep barb-like mark," and a new line begins. Prof. Rhys takes it to show that the word is unfinished, and accordingly carries up the first letter from the next line: there is in the original no hyphen between the n and the e. The Ogamist, however, had no excuse for carrying over a single letter on to the second line, as Lord Southesk's photograph shows that there was ample room to write it on the top line. The blank space left after the rr means that they end a word; and the barb-like mark, like the similar mark on the Bressay Stone, is merely an indication that the inscription is continued in a second line. Read—

Maqgo Oitall Uorr
nehht Vrobbaccennevv

and translate

Son of Oitall-Mor
The hearth "Vrobbaccennevv."

I divide Maqgo Oitall and not Maqgoi Tall for three reasons—(1) the oi and t have a special connecting stroke, (2) neither Maqgoi nor Maqgo has yet been found in Scottish Ogam, (3) the name Tall makes gen. Tail (which in Pictish might be Tell) in the only case known to me (War of the Guedhill, Rolls ser., p. 120). I suggest that Oitall is a gen. of Otall = **Odall* = an older form of the Irish Odhall, "Deaf." This last word is indeed a compound of o + dall, and in our oldest Irish the second element would not have been aspirated: for t in place

* In Scottish Gaelic this does not invariably aspirate the initial consonant of the following noun (Stewart, Gael. gram., p. 160).

† In the Addenda since printed in the Proceedings of the same society for 1892-3, he now prefers (p. 411) a form found in the Book of Leinster, fol. 38b: "it is there named or." The form mentioned is, indeed identical with that on the Aboyne Stone. Or, of course, is the name of the letter, not its value: all the names given at the reference in question are names of diphthongs (Contents, p. 22), and we know (O'Donovan, p. xxxii.) that in the Old Irish alphabet the diphthong oi bore the names ordinos and oir, the latter of which looks like an infected form of an earlier or.

of d, see Zeuss, p. 61. The genitive Uorr we have already had in the Burrian Stone, and have paralleled it with the wor of the Dean of Lismore's book.

Nehht = n' ehht, the article being in the dative in accordance with the regular use of that case as a locative. Vrobbaccennevv is another of the dat. pl. place-names, the place being called, as in so many other instances, from its inhabitants. The people who had once lived here were apparently named Spot-heads or Speckleheads, from the roots of brob "a speck, a spot" and cenn "head," which had cennaib for a dat. pl. in Old Irish. They may have worn caps of spotted deer-skin, and in an "Ossianic" poem in the Dean of Lismore's Book we find battalions of soldiers called Cat-heads and Dog-heads (Gaelic, p. 56, English, p. 80). The name is here given with an initial V instead of B, because, doubtless, the stead was known by the compound name Ehht-V, just as the Aquhollie stead was known as Ehht-Fheolov, and so in accordance with the later practice the second element was aspirated. But Vrobbaccennevv is itself a compound, and we should have expected its own second element to begin with ch not c; it is possible that the word was older than the time at which the aspiration of second elements began, but the Dean of Lismore's Book shows us, on p. 56 referred to above, a like inconsistency, giving catchennith (l. 3), catkenich (l. 3 from foot), chonchinnich (ib.).

Assuming that we have remains of a cross on the same side, we shall conclude that the land, though occupied by Mac Oitall-Uor, belonged to a religious foundation. The top part of the stone and all the left margin being broken off, we cannot tell that it did not also specify the name and ownership of other property, from which it served to mark off the tenure of Mac Oitall-Uor (as is done on the Newton and Lunasting Stones).

I have now given "a simple, consistent, and grammatical explanation" of every one of the inscriptions, so far as it is decipherable,† which I undertook to deal with, and have proved them to be, so far as that, nothing but old Gaelic. To three critics I wish to reply as follows:—When Mr. Mayhaw says: "At no period of the Gaelic language could such a form as uorr have been the gen. sing. of mōr," obviously overlooking the fact that I had produced the gen. sing. uor from the Dean of Lismore's Book, he shows the unwisdom of hasty dogmatism in phonetics: as regards his description of my methods I will only say, in the words of Henry Bradshaw, Memoir, p. 410, "When charges are so absolutely without foundation, I always find them easy to bear." Mr. McClure is very possibly right (against Skene) as to the Tully and Tilly * O'Donovan (pp. 57-8) gives 14 combinations of consonants (within a word) between which modern Irish pronunciation inserts "a very short vowel," e.g., garg, pronounced garig. I have no serious doubt that the insertion of a between bb and cc in the word before us is to be thus explained, though bc is not one of the combinations mentioned. Zeuss (p. 166) states that vowel-insertion between the more difficult combinations is undoubted in O. Ir., though he gives no instance of this particular one.

Otherwise (as the adj. termination -ach = prehistoric -ac) we might suppose in this case broblac = brobach, which latter would be a correct adj. from brob.

† I have not included the Papa Stronsa Stone (Orkneys), being confident that it is merely Latin, though, peuding the sight of a photograph, I read, not as Prof. Rhys, dne iefu, but dne Gisev, "of the lady Gisa." . . . The inscription is written above a cross, and doubtless, like that at Bressay, indicates a burial-place of, or belonging to, a woman: both stones are on ground conquered by the Norsemen.

names, and the analogy I drew is not in the least necessary to my case. Mr. Macalister will see why the ss's in the Bressay Stone must be ss's and not ds's, if he will look at the illustration in Stuart or in Brash: the Ogam are absolutely unique characters, formed out of, but differentiated from, || || (the characters for dd) by curling the tops. As to the difficulty of the stone being bilingual, Nahhtvdda88s: dattrr, although it can be analysed into three Norse words, is simply a proper name (like the surname Þorgrimsdóttir in an Icelandic funeral notice of 1892 now before me): it no more makes the inscription partly Norse than the name of Mercy Greenhill occurring in a French letter would make that letter partly English.

I hope to examine each stone in August, and in the autumn to publish my revised reprints of these letters, with chapters on the ages of the stones and on the linguistic and historical information which they yield—to which I may add a glossary and accidence. Anyone, not already in correspondence with me, who wishes to receive details of publication later on has only to send me his name and address on a postcard; and, though I have no time for controversy, I shall be grateful for any corrections or suggestions on points of detail which anyone may communicate to me.

Lastly, I beg to express my very special thanks to the editor of the ACADEMY for an indulgence far greater than at the outset I anticipated having to ask for, and to him and the printers for the great accuracy with which my letters have been printed.

EDWARD W. B. NICHOLSON.

THE SEPTUAGINT VERSUS THE HEBREW TEXT OF THE BIBLE.

VI.

Athenaeum Club.

If the facts I have collected and the inferences I have drawn in the letters you have kindly permitted me to print are sustainable, it must be granted that they involve a very serious departure from the methods and perhaps the results of a good deal of modern Biblical criticism. I do not mean to say that the main results arrived at by Kuenen and Wellhausen and others will be broken down; but I certainly do hold that some details of their work, so largely based upon the integrity and value of the Masoretic text, will have to be reconsidered. It is assuredly a very remarkable fact that those who have devoted so much time and patience to the sifting of every statement in the Bible, should have done so little to justify their faith and ours in an edition of the Bible whose claims to confidence have been questioned in various ways for several hundred years.

Obiter dicta there are in abundance, but few or no proofs that the stupendous difficulties which surround the Hebrew text have been faced. Yet these difficulties require in many cases neither special philological knowledge nor training to appreciate. The materials are the common property of us all, and their adequate use only needs the not uncommon faculty of being able judicially to weigh evidence.

The necessity for this reconsideration seems to me to be especially incumbent upon distinguished English scholars like Dr. Driver, Dr. Cheyne, and others, who were largely responsible for selecting the Masoretic text as the foundation of the revised version of the Old Testament in the English Bible, and who thus stamped with unusual authority a text which seems to have every mark of having been purposely altered and falsified. These charges, as is well known, were made at a very early date, and have been repeatedly iterated since.

The Early Fathers distinctly charged the Jews with having altered the numbers in Genesis, with the apparent purpose of giving authority to the Jewish Messiah Barchobas at the expense of the Christian Messiah. At the Reformation it is well known that Capellus, Vossius, and others championed the same cause; but it was Whiston, a most remarkable man, the successor of Newton in his chair at Cambridge, not only a proficient Semitic scholar but who also had the rare accomplishment in those days of knowing Armenian, who first faced the problem in a scientific way, and who for the first time showed, as it seems to me, that the Masoretic text was purposely and deliberately altered, at the instigation of perhaps the most bitter foes which Christianity ever had to face: namely, the Rabbins who in the second century created Neo-Judaism, and made it the secluded faith it still remains. It was they who, as we have seen, first created and defined the Canon, as we understand the word, and introduced fantastic criterions of canonicity, rejecting or accepting Books according to absolutely new and arbitrary standards, and thus creating untenable distinctions between certain Books which were considered to be specially inspired, and others having quite equal claims to the same distinction, if such a distinction was a valid one. It has already been suggested, with, it seems to me, every probability, that the division of the Old Testament Books into classes and the introduction of the Kethubim as a special division dates from this time. This was a marked departure from old ways of looking at the Biblical Books, and first introduced notions which culminated in the later theory about Canonical and apocryphal Books. Up to this time we have no evidence whatever that any such distinction was known among the Books generally received; on the contrary, neither in Josephus nor in the New Testament is it recognised. The introduction of this new division, with its tendency to create a differential value for the various Books, necessitated a new arrangement of the order of those Books, accounting thus for one at least of the apparently purposeless changes which the varying order in the different lists points to.

Again, as is well known, the Jews, in pursuance of their mystical methods, equated the number of their Sacred Books with the number of letters in their alphabet, at one time twenty-two, at another twenty-four. When, by their new methods of interpretation, they discarded some Books, they were under the necessity of filling up the gap. Thus, the Book of Ruth was separated from that of Judges; thus, again, Chronicles was separated from Ezra and Nehemiah, Lamentations from Jeremiah, and, perhaps, other similar changes took place. All these, however, were changes rather of form than of substance, and it is the change of substance, that is really important. How far it extended is hardly realised. A measure of it may be gathered from the fact that not even the Pentateuch was spared.

I must express my obligations to Mr. W. H. Hazard for his timely and valuable letter on the relative value of the Masoretic and Septuagint texts of Exodus. The materials for a due examination of this problem have recently been recruited by some important new materials. Every one knows the old polemic as to the relative value of the Samaritan and the Masoretic texts of the Pentateuch, and how the opinion of Gesenius has dominated scholars to our own day and induced the conclusion that, when the two differ, the Samaritan is to be discarded.

A very different opinion must be held by those who approach the problem in future. The discovery of the Book of Jubilees, the Leptogenesis as it is otherwise called, has been a very important one indeed for Biblical criticism. In the opinion of so good a judge as Dillman, the Book was originally written in Hebrew or Aramaic by an orthodox Palestinian Jew. It was probably composed by a Pharisee, and evidently before the fall of Jerusalem, to which no reference is made in it. It was therefore written before the time when, according to the arguments in these letters, the Urtext of the Masorets was compiled and put together by the Rabbins at Jamna under the influence of Akiba; and it ought to furnish some important evidence on the question in discussion. What do we find in it therefore. In the opinion of the best judges, it is plain that its author had a text before him differing greatly from the Masoretic text, and approximating in a large number of cases to the Samaritan and Septuagint versions. This is notably the case in the patriarchal numbers before the Flood, and in many other respects. The subject has been dealt with by Dillman in a memoir entitled "Beiträge aus dem Buch der Jubiläen zur Kritik des Pentateuch-Textes," in the Sitzungsberichte of the Berlin Academy for 1883; and perhaps you will let me enlarge upon some of the results in another letter, since the Memoir and its importance seem to have been largely overlooked in England. Meanwhile, I would content myself with saying that it seems clear that the Masoretic text of the Pentateuch, like that of other parts of the Bible, was distinctly tampered with by the Rabbins, and that we must re-open the question of the relative values of that text and of the Samaritan and Septuagint versions if we are to do justice to the Bible.

HENRY H. HOWORTH.

THE "SHIELD WALL" AT HASTINGS.

Oxford: May 27, 1894.

My attention has been drawn to a letter of Mr. Round, published in the ACADEMY of May 19, in which he claims to have converted me to his view that there were no palisades at the battle of Hastings.

He seems to have arrived at this conclusion from the fact that I do not mention them in the few lines on the battle which occur in my short contribution to Social England.

Silence does not mean a change of opinion; and I think it fair to Mr. Archer to say that I still hold to the belief that there was an abattis of some sort in front of Harold's line.

C. W. C. OMAN.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, June 10, 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "A Practical Policy for Working Women," by Miss Orme.
MONDAY, June 11, 8 p.m. Library Association: "Music in Public Libraries," by Mrs. Clarinda A. Webster; "A Village Public Library," by Sir Edmund Verney.
TUESDAY, June 12, 4 p.m. Asiatic: "The Khalasat-at-Tawarikh of Jubban Rai," by Mr. H. Beveridge.
8 p.m. Society of Architects: "The Threatened Temples of Philae," by Major F. Seymour Leslie.
8.30 p.m. Anthropological: "Skulls and other Remains of Esquimaux, collected by Dr. Eliot Curwen," by the President; "Australian (Queensland) Skulls from Tree Burials," by Mr. W. L. H. Duckworth; and "Ethnographical Notes on the Bantu Tribes of the Congo Basin," by Mr. Herbert Ward.
WEDNESDAY, June 13, 9 p.m. Royal Society: Conversazione.
THURSDAY, June 14, 8 p.m. Mathematical: "The Solutions of Two Differential Equations," by Mr. F. H. Jackson; "A Theorem in Inequalities," by Mr. A. R. Johnson; "Properties of a certain Circle," by Mr. R. Tucker; "Four Special Circles of Inversion of a System of Generalised Brocard Circles of a Plane Triangle," by Mr. J. Griffiths; and "The Order of the Eliminant of Two or More Equations," by Dr. R. Lachlan.
8 p.m. Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings: Annual Meeting, "Protection and Production," by Mr. Heywood Sumner.
8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
FRIDAY, June 15, 5 p.m. National Indian Association: Annual Meeting, "Pupils and Teachers in the Punjab," by Mrs. F. A. Steel.
SATURDAY, June 16, 4 p.m. Zoological: "Sketches in Geographical Distribution," V., by Mr. F. E. Beddard.

SCIENCE.

Hyperides' Orations against Athenogenes and Philippides. Edited, with a Translation, by F. G. Kenyon. (Bell.)

In this beautifully printed little book Mr. Kenyon gives a revised text of the two recently discovered speeches of Hyperides, with Latin critical notes, a palaeographical and historical introduction, and a translation facing the Greek. The papyrus containing the speech against Athenogenes, which is at Paris, was first edited by M. E. Revillout, and has received the attentions of, among others, Diels, Weil, and Blass, while the two last-named have also done much for the text of the speech against Philippides since it was first edited by Mr. Kenyon in 1891.

Mr. Kenyon in this book has put together in a convenient form the results of his predecessors, which have not hitherto been collected. But that is not by any means the only claim of this book to notice. The difficulty connected with these two papyri has not been so much in making out the actual text which is there; for the Paris papyrus has not suffered much by rubbing, and the London papyrus has hardly suffered in this way at all: it has been rather in filling up the gaps with which the papyri, both unfortunately much mutilated, abound. Hence the task of the palaeographical expert here is generally not—as, for instance, is the case with the Herondas papyrus—to decide which conjectures fit the fragments of letters that may remain, but to settle which conjectures will suit the spaces left vacant. For the former purpose facsimiles are, compared with the original, valueless; but for the latter they are, as Mr. Kenyon says, equally good. And since the questions at issue in the text of these papyri are generally connected with supplementing the lacunae, Mr. Kenyon is entitled to speak with as much weight about the Paris papyrus, of which he has seen only the facsimile, as he can speak about the London papyrus. In numerous cases his criticisms are of great value in deciding between rival conjectures. Where the question in filling up a lacuna becomes one for broader criticism, Mr. Kenyon exercises sound judgment in his selection from the suggestions of his predecessors, occasionally offering some new supplements of his own.

To those who associate Mr. Kenyon chiefly with the technicalities of Greek papyri, his translation of these two speeches will come as a very pleasant surprise. The task of translating Hyperides, whose speech against Athenogenes is mentioned by Longinus as a masterpiece of the lighter vein of Attic oratory, is far harder even than the task of translating Aristotle, which Mr. Kenyon essayed so successfully in his version of the Ἀθηναίων Πολιτεία. Hyperides, to quote his editor, "possessed the rare gift of a perfectly untrained style, in which art has achieved the appearance of entirely unstudied ease." Mr. Kenyon's translation has, in its remarkable brightness and clearness, caught something of the spirit of the original. His rendering flows on easily and naturally in the most vigorous and even lively English. Few, if any, translations of the Attic orators have reached such a standard of excellence.

In conclusion, may we express the hope that Mr. Kenyon will not rest content with these two speeches of Hyperides, but will some day give us a similar edition of the remaining speeches, an undertaking for which his rare combination of technical knowledge and literary taste so pre-eminently qualifies him."

B. P. GRENFELL.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE annual Ladies' Conversazione of the Royal Society will be held at Burlington House on Wednesday next, June 13.

MR. CHARLES BARON CLARKE has been elected president of the Linnean Society, in succession to Prof. C. Stewart.

AT the annual meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, held last week, Mr. Clements R. Markham was re-elected president; the Hon. G. N. Curzon was added to the list of vice-presidents; Sir John Kirk was elected foreign secretary, in succession to the late Sir C. P. Beauchamp Walker; Major Leonard Darwin, joint hon. secretary (together with Mr. H. Seebohm), in succession to Mr. Douglas Freshfield; and the following new members of council: Dr. Robert Brown, Mr. Hugh Childers, General Goodenough, Lord Lamington, Admiral A. H. Markham, Admiral E. H. Seymour, and Colonel J. K. Trotter. The presidential address was largely devoted to the polar expeditions of the present year.

AT the annual general meeting of the Institution of Civil Engineers, held last week, Sir Robert Rawlinson was elected president, in succession to Mr. Alfred Giles. The number of members, &c., now amounts to 6557; the income for last year was £25,576; and the invested capital is £133,673. It was stated that the work of cataloguing the library is now completed; and that Mr. Charles Barry had been commissioned to prepare designs for a new building for the institution, to occupy the site of Nos. 24, 25, and 26 Great George-street, Westminster.

TO the June number of Natural Science (Macmillans)—which, we may add, completes the fourth volume—Dr. Alfred Russell Wallace contributes an article, entitled "The Palae-arctic and Nearctic Regions compared as regards the Families and Genera of their Mammalia and Birds." In continuation of a paper which he read at the jubilee meeting of the Cambridge Natural Science Club, supporting the six zoological regions established by Dr. P. L. Sclater, he here maintains, by an elaborate array of statistical facts—in opposition to the views of those who would make a united Holarctic region—that "The Palae-arctic and Nearctic regions, instead of being so much alike that they should be united to form a single region, are really exceptionally distinct. They are certainly much more distinct than are the Oriental and Aethiopian regions, and are probably quite as distinct as any two continuous regions."

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

AT the meeting of the Royal Asiatic Society, to be held at 22, Albemarle-street, on Tuesday next, at 4 p.m., Mr. H. Beveridge, of the Bengal Civil Service, will read a paper entitled, "The Khalāsāt-at-Tawārikh of Subhān Rāi," being the history and description of India as told by a Hindu two hundred years ago.

THE March number of the Indian Antiquary (Kegan Paul & Co.) contains an interesting communication from the late E. Rehatsek, summarising the contents of a very lengthy Persian chronicle, written by a vakil at the court of Ranjit Singh. After an account of the origin of the Sikhs, the contemporary history of the Panjab, and the rise of Ranjit Singh, the author transcribes from his diary all the events of which he had been an eye-witness at Lahore from 1831 to 1849. He dwells particularly upon Ranjit Singh's relations with the English, describing in detail the interviews with successive Governor-Generals, and quoting conversations with Alexander Burnes and others. Unfortunately, the chapters relating to the Sikh War are missing, having been lent by the author to Herbert Edwards, and never returned. Mr. L. A. Waddell translates the "refuge-formula" of the Lamas of Sikkim, pointing out how it differs from the "triple" formula of primitive Buddhism, by the inclusion of appeals not only to the innumerable deities and demons of Tibet, but also to the deified saints of India. Mr. G. Fr. D'Penha prints a list of corruptions of Portuguese names, chiefly Christian names, in Salsette and Bassein; Mr. W. Crooke tells some more folk-tales of Hindustan; and Major Temple himself gives two counting-out rhymes from Burma, the first of which we quote (in translation):

"Made of lines
Three houses,
Intended for us!
Off you go,
Save yourself, run!"

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

PHILOLOGICAL.—(Friday, June 1.)

THE Rev. Prof. Skeat, vice-president, in the chair.—Mr. Whitley Stokes read a paper by Prof. Strachan, entitled "Contributions to the History of the Deponent Verb in Irish." The object of this paper was threefold: (1) to ascertain the extent to which the r-deponent prevailed in Irish; (2) to fix as accurately as possible the date of its disappearance in the old deponent verbs; and (3) to investigate the starting-point and development of new deponent forms, such as the 2nd sg. pres. indic. in -air, -ir and the 1st sg. subjunctive. For the first point Prof. Strachan brought forward a copious collection of deponential forms drawn (a) from the Old-Irish glosses, where these forms are already beginning to decay; (b) from two of the oldest Middle-Irish MSS., the Book of the Dun (about A.D. 1100) and the Book of Leinster (about 1150); and (c) from other sources, such as Cormac's Glossary (about 900) and the Saltar na Rann (about 1000). For the second and third points the material had been for the most collected, but not yet put into shape. The r-deponent is found only in Irish and the Italic languages (compare sechur, sechthar, sechemmar, sechetar with Lat. sequor, sequitur, sequimur, sequuntur); and this was a strong proof of a close connexion between Italic and Celtic. If the Irish deponent were, as Zimmer asserts, a late Irish development, how is it that in nearly every case where there is a corresponding verb in Latin, Greek, or Sanskrit, it is either deponent or middle? Thus sechur, Lat. sequor, Gr. ἐκραι: -iluchur, Lat. loquor: moiniur, Gr. μαλινωαι, Skr. manyāte (Lat. reminiscor, &c.): gainiur, Skr. jāyats (cf. γίγνεται): miduor, Gr. μῆδουαι: āgur, Gr. ἄγουαι: sissiur, Gr. ἰσσιωαι. Such forms were the representatives of the Indogermanic middle voice; and no sinithar "he stretches himself," in the Fled Brierend, l.v. 110<sup>b</sup>, is an instance of a distinctively middle meaning. The presence or absence of deponent forms is a test for determining whether a particular text is old or young; for the deponent inflexion had disappeared, except in certain forms, well before the end of the tenth century.—Prof. Skeat then read and commented on the following new and genuine Balade by Chaucer. He would not tell his audience where it came from, but said they must wait till next Saturday, and set it in the columns of a contemporary. We have therefore had to find the Balade and copy it for ourselves, and supply the missing line in it with one suggested to us by a verse in Chaucer's "Pit." Prof. Skeat took his insertion from the "Rosamundo." Chaucer students will recognise that the metre is like part of the "Anelida," has (like the first term in the "Complaynt of Venus") only two rymes, -aunse and -esse, though the Eavoy substitutes -hade for -esse.

Addit. MS. 34, 380, ff. 21 bk. Called in the "Catalogue of ye Poems in this Volume": "3 A. Ballade of Chaucer to his mistris, fol. (i.e., page) 26." The MS was bought at Sir Thomas Phillipps's sale, lot 122, June 19-22, 1893:

"BALADE THAT CHAUCIER MADE (1)

"So hath myn hert(e) . caught in remembraunce 1
Yowre beaute heole . and stidefast govern- 2
aunce
Yowre vertues al(le) . and yowre hie noblesse
That yow to serue . is sette al my plesaunce
So wele me likith (.) yowre womanly conten- 5
aunce
Yowre freshe fetures . and yowre comlynesse
That while I live . myn hert to his maystresse
Yow hath ful chose . in triev persueuraunce
Neuer to change . for no maner distresse 9

(2)

"And sith I shal do [yow] . this observaunce 10
Al my live . withouten displeaunce
Yow for to serue . with al my besynesse
[Takith me, lady, in yowre obeisaunce *]
And have me somewhat . in yowre souen- 14
aunce
My woful hert[e] . suffriith grele duresse
And [looke] how humb[le]ly . with al sym-plesse
My wil I conforme . to yowre ordynaunce
As yow best list . my paynes for to redresse 18

(3)

"Considryng eke . how I hange in balaunce 19
In yowre service . snobe too is my chaunce
Abidyng grace . whan that yowre gentillesse
Of my grete woo . list do allegaunce
And with yowre pite me som wise avaunce 23
In ful rebutyng . of myn hevynesse
And thynkith be raisou . that wommanly noblesse
Shuld not desire . for til do the outraunce
Ther as she fyndith . non vnboxumnesse.

LENUOYE.

"Aucteur of nature . lady of plessaunce
Soueraigne of beaute . flour of wommanhede
Take ye non hede . vnto my Ignoraunce
But this recyvyth . of yowre goodelyhede
Thynkyng that I have caught in remembraunce
Yowre beaute hole . yowr stidefast govern-
aunce."

—The following resolution, proposed by Prof. Skeat and warmly supported by Dr. Furnivall and Mr. Henry Bradley, was unanimously passed: "This meeting of the Philological Society desires (1) to record its deep sense of the great loss which Teutonic and Pali Philology have suffered by the lamented death of the late Dr. Richard Morris; and (2) to offer its sympathy and condolence to Dr. Morris's widow and family."—The hon. sec. announced that the Council had elected Prof. A. S. Napier a vice-president of the society in the place of Dr. Morris, and Mr. Henry Hicks Gibbs an ordinary member of council in Prof. Napier's place.

FINE ART.

THE ARCHAEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF EGYPT.

Beni Hasan. Parts I, II. Published under the auspices of the Egypt Exploration Fund. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

THIS splendid publication is the beginning of the record of the Archaeological Survey of Egypt, the last project of Miss Edwards, the late secretary of the Fund, and not the least important. The survey has been undertaken by Mr. Percy Newberry, aided by several competent artists, Mr. Percy Buckman, Mr. John E. Newberry, and Mr. Howard Carter, and in the plans by Mr. G. W. Fraser. The result is an eminently satisfactory and most valuable work. The labour of editing has been undertaken by Mr. F. L. Griffith, of the British Museum, a hieroglyphic scholar competent to read and translate the inscriptions, a task of no small responsibility.

* Cf. "Ye sleen hem that ben in your obeisaunce."—Pit., 84.

These volumes form the first exhaustive publication of a series of Egyptian monuments. Notwithstanding the labours of Champollion, Rosellini, and Lepsius, this is the first attempt, and it is one that may be called completely successful, at the thorough examination and reproduction of a great range of Egyptian monuments.

The grottoes of Beni Hasan are excavated in the eastern cliff overlooking the Nile valley, south of Minyeh. They have been long known as the most valuable records of the life and manners of the ancient Egyptians under the XIth and XIIth Dynasties of Theban kings, from B.C. 2800 downwards. They were the tombs of the local governors; and their beautiful paintings portray the every-day life of these old-world potentates, their occupations and amusements, accompanied in some cases by long and interesting inscriptions, in others by short explanatory legends. In spite of the injuries of time and much wanton destruction, the aid of older drawings, particularly those of Mr. Robert Hay, has enabled the workers on these memoirs to restore the inscriptions which, in the longer ones do not present important gaps in the legends.

The minute labour of Mr. Newberry and Mr. Griffith has been enormous, and the result is eminently satisfactory. Where much was shirked by earlier artists and students, nothing is here omitted, and the work is literally monumental. It is impossible to enumerate the subjects of eight plates, of which some are double or treble, but it would be wrong not to notice those which are historically most important. These are, first, the representations of foreign immigrants and mercenaries. The most remarkable is a procession of foreigners of Semitic type, thirty-seven in number, of whom eight men, four women, and three children are represented, armed and with asses, one man playing a lyre. The chief, of whom there is a coloured plate, wears a woven shawl dress, and leads an antelope. He is called "Prince of the desert Abesha." His followers are also more fully clad than the Egyptians (Tomb No. 3). Foreigners again appear, apparently Libyans and Egyptians, in sham or actual fights (Tomb 2), and Libyan soldiers and their wives and children are shown as immigrants (Tomb 14).

There are thirty-three sepulchral grottoes at Beni Hasan. Of these ten were anciently decorated with frescoes or inscriptions, or both. These are Nos. 2, 3, 13, 14, 15, 17, 21, 23, 29, and 33. Probably no others had any adornment of a commemorative kind. Some of them are now almost defaced, and it is only by comparing old drawings, especially the admirable ones of Mr. Robert Hay, that they can be restored. All that can now be seen or has been copied is carefully reproduced in the present work.

A mere enumeration of the frescoes in the Tomb No. 2, of Amenemhat, or Ameni will suffice to show the great variety of subjects in those tombs, and their ample illustration of crafts, manners, and customs. The other tombs present certain varieties, but the general tenor is the same. In fourteen plates, vii.—xx., the whole series is displayed. First, we have the exterior inscription, then the biographical inscription, not very long; then the architrave inscription; and next, a coloured plate of Anebi, a maid servant, carrying a bird, and on her head a basket.

The chief subjects in order are the following: Makers of flint knives, a proof of the continuance of that industry in Egypt; sandal-makers, carpenters, bowyers, coopers, arrow-makers, chair and box makers, goldsmiths, potters, flax cultivation, linen manufacturers, harvesting, ploughing and sowing, vintage, fishing and fowling, fruits and herbs, meat, bread, beer, toilet utensils, bakers, musicians, confectioners, oxen, hunting in the desert, procession of naos containing statue of Ameni, officers and servants bringing cattle and agricultural produce, wrestlers, soldiers attacking fortress, pilgrimage by boat to Abydos and Busiris, a similar subject, funeral offerings for Amenemhat, other funeral offerings. It is obvious that there is no system of arrangement. Other tombs present the same variety and the same absence of order.

The sepulchre was not merely a record of the great man's life; but he did not forget to state what he did, first for the king, then for the subjects under his immediate control. Thus, in the main inscription in the tomb of Amenemhat, the governor gives the date of his sepulture, records the services he had rendered to Useratesen I., first king of the XIIth Dynasty, and closes with an account of the able and kindly manner in which he had administered his province. "Not the daughter of a poor man did I wrong. Not a widow did I oppress." "There was not a pauper around me. There was not a hungry man of my time. (When) there came years of famine, I arose, I ploughed all the fields of the Oryx nome, to its southern (and its) northern boundary. I made its inhabitants to live, making its provision. There was not a hungry man in it. I gave to the widow as to her that possessed a husband. I did not favour the elder above the younger in all that I gave. (When) therefore the great rises of the Nile took place, producing wheat and barley, producing all things (abundantly), I did not exact the arrears of the farm." This is a parallel to Joseph's administration, and reveals the secret of the prosperity of the province under Amenemhat. The story of Baba as told in his tomb at Eileithyia is a nearer analogy, as it agrees in date with about the time of Joseph.

Tomb No. 3 of Chnemhotep, a later prince than Amenemhat, is remarkable as containing a long biographical inscription of 222 lines. Then follow the usual crafts and occupations, Pl. xxix.—xxxvii. The subjects are carpenters, fullers, boat-builders, the journey to Abydos (twice), weavers, bakers, sculptors, filling granaries, husbandry, threshing, ploughing, orchard, vineyard-garden-scene, oxen fording a stream, fishing scene, officers and members of household, procession of thirty-seven Aamu or foreigners, officers of household, servants leading cattle, driving tame birds, fowling, bulls fighting and farmyard scenes, scribes registering accounts, men driving cattle and donkeys, Chuemhotep hunting in the desert, fowling, fishing, &c.; and, finally, lists of offerings. Among other subjects are girl-acrobats playing at ball, a very unusual representation in the Egyptian monuments, and apparently peculiar to this time.

What, it may be asked, was the motive which led to this costly representation of the magnificence of a single prince? The Egyptians had an ardent desire to leave behind them lasting memorials, hence the origin of the pyramids; when their monuments were inscribed and decorated with frescoes, the object was modified from the idea of magnificent sepulture to that of biography, or rather autobiography. When it is remembered that the magnificent work of Lepsius is without text, and that the dissertations on Egyptian manners do not comprehend any exhaustive essay on those of any special period, the value of Mr. Griffith's and Mr. Newberry's researches may be estimated, as giving us a complete account of the household of an Egyptian local potentate. The mere addition to the vocabulary is enormous. It is to be hoped that those scholars will reproduce their labour in dictionary form. Their work has also thrown much light on the social and legal relations of the ancient Egyptian family, at a period apparently somewhat exceptional, and has given much historical information.

It is important to add that no cost and labour has been spared by author and artist—Mr. Newberry is both—and editor. It is to be trusted that the Survey of Egypt will be encouraged, and that a series of volumes equally valuable and interesting will follow these. There is already much in preparation in a very forward state.

There is a very important change in vol. ii., Mr. Griffith having abandoned Prof. Erman's system of transliteration, and practically adopted Mr. Renouf's simpler method.

REGINALD STUART POOLE.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

IV.

THE collection of sculpture is small, but of more than average quality; and it contains fewer altogether uninteresting things than are usually to be found grouped in the two halls of the Academy.

On entering the Central Hall, one is at once struck with the number of reappearances here of works which have already become familiar to the public in their inchoate plaster stage. We have, to begin with, Mr. Hamo Thornycroft's noble, Millet-like "Mower," the first exhibition of which dates back now some years. It looks well in its final bronze embodiment, though the treatment of the flesh is too archaic in its stiffness. His equestrian statuette, "Edward I.," originally destined for Blackfriars Bridge, has been exhibited here more recently in the less definitive material. It is one of the very few completely successful things of the kind by an English artist, and is so truly monumental that it would well bear execution on a colossal scale. We must therefore continue to regret the mischance which has prevented its being carried out in the dimensions originally intended. Here, too, are those other old friends, Mr. Henry C. Fehr's "Perseus rescuing Andromeda," based, as may be assumed, on a well-known picture of Sir Frederic Leighton's; Mr. Goscombe John's fine "Morpheus"; and that charming decorative invention, the "Circe" of Mr. Alfred Drury, which last gains greatly by execution in bronze. Mr. Adrian Jones's large group, "The Rape of the Sabines," is vigorous, but the reverse of happy in composition. The small bronze group, "Satan," by Countess Feodora Gleichen, has some clever points, especially the figure of the fallen archangel, and the little demon amorini who crawl under his marble throne; but that throne, so unfortunate in design and so disturbing in colour, is fatal to the effect of the whole. Were it replaced by one of bronze, but of a different tone from the rest of the composition, the gain would be immense.

The most interesting thing in the Lecture Room is Mr. Alfred Gilbert's "Sketch Model of the Tomb of the late Duke of Clarence." The recumbent effigy of the deceased prince lies wrapped in knightly robes on a square sarcophagus, at his head being placed the decorative figure of an angel holding a crown suspended over him, while another smaller figure crouches mourning at his feet. The whole is enclosed, somewhat after the fashion of Henry VII.'s tomb in Westminster Abbey, within a railing or grille of astonishing elaboration. In style this is midway between late Gothic and early Renaissance, with a licence, however, in the direction of only half-conventionalised natural forms, which is peculiarly characteristic of Mr. Gilbert's art. The little decorative and heraldic figures under architectural canopies suggest those of the pleureurs which occur so frequently on the great Burgundian tombs of the fifteenth century. The tomb, if we may judge it thus early, is, notwithstanding its brilliancy and inventiveness of design, the work of the decorator and the goldsmith rather than of the true sculptor. There is lacking, as we see the composition in its reduced shape, the earnestness and the concentration which should mark a funerary monument of this type. It need not of necessity be less elaborate or wrought out with less exuberance—for are not the typical Florentine and Burgundian tombs of the fifteenth century among the most profusely adorned architectural structures of their kind?—but the dominant motive should surely be more forceful and more deeply impressive.

Mr. Onslow Ford has not produced anything more exquisite in its simplicity, more subtle in the beauty of its execution, than the toned marble bust called merely "Study of a Head." This is inspired by, and worthy of, the Florence of the great Quattrocento time. Brilliantly modelled, too, are the same artist's two bronze portraits: "Walter Armstrong, Esq., Director of the National Gallery of Ireland," and "Arthur Haacker, Esq.," of which the latter is, on the whole, the more personal and the more successful.

Mr. Harry Bates's delicate marble bust, "Dorothy, Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. Freeman," suffers much from the exaggeration of mass and weight given to the hair which, on either side, overshadows the child's face. A tour de force has here been attempted, but not accomplished without a disproportionate sacrifice.

The curious bas-relief, "My Thoughts are My Children," by Mr. George J. Frampton, is, as to its conception, a tribute to the fashionable pseudo-mysticism in art, which acquires a peculiar and rather sinister flavour in virtue of a treatment half realistic applied to visionary motives. Passages of the composition are successful, and show some familiarity with the difficult art of bas-relief; but, as a whole, it is pictorial and fleeting, rather than sculptural—wanting in strength and permanence of expression from the plastic standpoint, and in unity.

The marble statue, "Sappho," by Mr. Ferdinand Sechœck, is an elaborate exercise in the Greek style of the fourth century B.C.; and academic too, in its reflection of classic art is Mr. C. J. Allen's "Perseus Returning Victorious to the Gods," some portions of which are rendered with power. Great skill in modelling is displayed by Mr. George Wade in two decorative statuettes, "Torch-bearers"; but why, in works of this class, seek to adhere closely to natural movements almost grotesque in their realism, and merely to reproduce nature in its least attractive phases of accidental imperfection? Worthy of a better place is Mr. G. Nathorp's bronze statuette of a nude girl called "Knuckle-bones"; in this are to be observed some very delicate and accomplished passages of modelling.

CLAUDE PHILLIPS.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE trustees of the National Gallery have passed the following resolution, on the occasion of Sir F. Burton's retirement from the post of director:

"The trustees of the National Gallery cannot permit Sir Frederic Burton's resignation of the directorship to pass without recording their high sense of the eminent services which he has rendered to the Gallery during the time that he has held that office. The trustees owe to him some of the most valuable additions that have been made to the collection, such as the Blenheim Raphael and the Holbein and Velasquez from Longford Castle, besides many other examples of artists previously unrepresented in the gallery which are too numerous to record—additions which have placed the National Gallery among the first collections in Europe. By his arrangement of the pictures according to their schools, he has added greatly to the usefulness of the Gallery as a means of public instruction. The Catalogue which he has compiled of the contents of the Gallery, from its literary merits and knowledge of art history, has made it, perhaps, the best of any European work of the class."

THE following is a complete list of the works in this year's exhibition at the Royal Academy that have been purchased out of the funds of the Chantrey Bequest: "Beyond Man's Footsteps," by Mr. Briton Riviere, R.A. (169); "August Blue," by Mr. Henry S. Tuke (307); "Sunset at Sea," by Mr. Edwin Hayes (203); "Morning Glory," by Mr. M. Ridley Corbet (300); "Industry," by Mr. H. S. Hopwood—a water colour—(959); and "Perseus rescuing Andromeda," by Mr. Henry C. Fehr—a group in bronze—(1747).

MR. THOMAS BROCK has finished his sketch-model for the statue of Sir Richard Owen, which is to be placed in the Natural History Museum, Cromwell-road. The statue represents him in his robes as Hunterian professor of the Royal College of Surgeons, with a bone of the Dinornis in his hand.

THERE will open next week, at the Fine Art Society's, in New Bond-street, an exhibition of drawings by Mr. G. H. Boughton, illustrating Washington Irving's Rip Van Winkle and Sleepy Hollow.

THE seventeenth annual meeting of the Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings will be held on Thursday next at 8 p.m., in the Old Hall of Clifford's Inn, Fleet-street, with

Mr. J. T. Micklethwaite in the chair. A paper will be read by Mr. Heywood Sumner, on "Protection and Production."

At the meeting of the Society of Architects, to be held at St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, on Tuesday next at 8 p.m., Major F. Seymour Leslie, R.E., will read a paper on "The Threatened Temples of Philae," illustrated with lime-light views.

MUSIC.

OPERA AT COVENT GARDEN.

"LES HUGUENOTS" was performed in French last Thursday week. Mme. Adini was the Valentine, and, notwithstanding certain shortcomings, displayed ability. Mlle. Simonnet was acceptable in the part of Marguerite de Valois. M. Plancon, as Marcel, gave signal satisfaction. M. Cossira was the Raoul and M. Dufliche the St. Bris.

Meyerbeer's opera drew a fairly good house; but on the following Saturday there was a still larger audience to welcome Mme. Melba in Gounod's "Faust." She was in splendid voice, and loud applause and numerous bouquets were bestowed on her. The whole opera, together with the ballet scene introduced by Sir A. Harris in 1887, was admirably performed. The church scene, by the way, was presented before the duel and the death of Valentin. With regard to this arrangement, a letter was once addressed to Gounod from the conductor of the opera house at Port Mahon (Balearic Islands). Gounod replied that, according to the dramatic order observed by Goethe, which he himself had followed, the scene of the death of Valentin should precede the church scene, but that, at Paris, spectacular considerations had caused them to be given in reverse order.

"In consequence of many requests," so ran the note on the playbill, Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor" was performed on Tuesday evening, with Mme. Melba in the title-rôle; she sang all the showy music with wonderful ease and grace. There is nothing new to say about this old work; and now that the style of libretto and of music has changed, it is interesting, from time to time, to hear an opera once so admired, so popular. It must be remembered that, with all its weaknesses, "Lucia" contains much beautiful melody.

RECENT CONCERTS.

A CONCERT was given by the "Handel Society" at the Queen's Hall last Thursday week. There was, however, very little of Handel in the programme, the chief features of which were Bach's "Ein feste Burg" Cantata, Goetz's "Noenia," and Haydn's twelfth London Symphony. Surely the society might devote special attention to Handel, of whose music, apart from the Handel Festival, one now hears so little in London. The orchestra and choir were under the able direction of Mr. A. Manns. There were shortcomings in the performances; but this amateur society, which exists for the practice of classical music, vocal and instrumental, deserves encouragement rather than criticism. There was a very large attendance.

"Gabiella," a one-act lyric drama by Emilio Pizzi, was given in recital form at the Albert Hall on Saturday afternoon. This work was written specially for Mme. Adelina Patti, who sang the part of Gabiella. Works written to order, even by the greatest masters, have seldom proved of great value; and we imagine that Signor Pizzi would not like this opera to be taken as a test of his powers as a composer. The libretto is moral enough, but singularly tame; and the past teaches us that a feeble book is indeed a serious drawback to a composer. Moreover, an opera performed on a concert platform stands but a poor chance, unless, as in the case of the recent opera concerts at the Queen's Hall, it is a work which has already become successful, and therefore familiar to the public. Signor Pizzi has a certain gift of melody; and though evidently in sympathy with composers temporis acti, he has felt to a certain extent the influence of Wagner, as seen in some of the orchestration, and also of the neo-Italian school. Mme. Patti, who was scarcely at her best, was supported by Miss L. Moody and MM. Kaufmann, Bantock, Pierpoint, and Franklin Clive.

The first of the short series of Richter Concerts was held at St. James's Hall on Monday evening, when the conductor received a hearty welcome. The continued success of these concerts is easily explained: the programmes are interesting, and the performances, as a rule, excellent. There was one novelty in Monday's programme—viz., a Symphonic Poem, "Vysehrad," by the talented Bohemian composer, Friedrich Smetana. In this work an attempt is made to depict the famous castle in its pristine splendour, in its decline, and in its ruined condition. There is a certain patchiness in the music, but the characteristic themes are interesting, and the orchestration is, at times, extremely picturesque. The performance of the "Meistersinger" Vorspiel was not the best we have heard under the direction of Dr. Richter; but the splendid Brahms Variations on a Haydn theme, and the "Parsifal" Prelude were admirably rendered. The concert concluded with a fine performance of Beethoven's "Pastoral."

National concerts seem the order of the day: we have had the Swiss "Liedertafel," and now we have a select choir of singers, members of the Swedish "Young Men's Christian Association." They sang at the Queen's Hall on Tuesday afternoon some attractive songs by Swedish composers, of whose life and works interesting details were given in the programme-book. This choir sang with perfect ensemble and surprising delicacy, under the able conductorship of the Hon. Axel Taube. Solos, vocal and instrumental, were contributed by Miss A. Janson and Mme. A. Lang.

Mr. J. Ludwig conducted a Symphony of his own composition at a concert given by him at St. James's Hall on Tuesday evening. The composer deserves praise for having, in these days of fugitive pieces, attempted a Symphony, and the attempt is worthy of high praise. The first movement, though full of good musical feeling, seems somewhat tame: such, at least, is the impression after a first hearing. The Adagio is an excellent movement, clear in form, offering in the middle section effective contrast; and it is of moderate length. The Scherzo is clever, but shows, in marked manner, the influence of Beethoven. The Finale has also good points: the quiet close is striking, for such a thing is rare. The orchestration throughout displays great taste and experience. The programme included Brahms' Concerto in A minor, well rendered by Messrs. Josef and Paul Ludwig. Brahms' enthusiasts accept every note he has written, but surely sober admirers of the great composer must admit that this is a dry, insipid, and in many places ugly work.

J. S. SLEDLOCK.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

"Very frank in tone, and modern in application."

The Bookman.

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHERD, Fumival Street, E.C.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 7.45. THE TWO ORPHANS. Messrs. William Rignold, H. Fleming, E. Leicester, D. S. James, H. Budd, W. Cheesman, and Charles Cartwright; Mesdames Ellis, Jeffries, Alice Lingard, Alma Stanley, D. Drummond, H. Polini, E. Cole, and Marion Terry.

AVENUE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.50. ARMS AND THE MAN. Messrs. Yorke Stephens, Bernard Gould, James Welch, A. E. W. Mason, O. Barnett; Mesdames Alma Murray, Chas. Calvert, and Florence Farr. Preceded, at 8.10, by THE MAN IN THE STREET. Messrs. J. Welch, G. R. Foss; Miss W. Fraser.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.10. FRUG-FRUG. Messrs. Brandon Thomas, Cyril Maude, H. B. Irving, Will Dennis, Crawley, &c.; Miss Vane, Miss Marie Linden, Miss Radclyffe, Miss O'Brian, Miss M. Butler, and Miss Winifred Emery.

CRITERION THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE CANDIDATE. Mr. Charles Wyndham, Messrs. Wm. Blakeley, Geo. Giddens, C. W. Somerset, F. Worthing, F. Atherley; Miss F. Coleman, Miss Pattle Browne, Miss Miriam Clements, and Miss Mary Moore. Preceded, at 8.30, by MRS. HILARY REGRETS.

DALY'S THEATRE, LEICESTER SQUARE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30. ELEONORA DUSE in LA LOCANDIERA and CAVALLERIA RUSTICANA. Signors Mezzanotte, Pero, Bella, Christina; Signori Piperno, Caravaglia, Rosaspina, Cantinelli, Masi, Sainati, Colombari.

GAIETY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, DON JUAN. Messrs. Arthur Roberts, Robert Pateman, Edmund Payne, Willie Warde, Colin Coop; Mesdames Millie Hylton, Louise Montague, Lillie Belmore, Lettice Fairfax, Topey Stenden, Earle, Monckton, Henderson, Vivian, Cannon, Benton, Collier, Durkin, Sutherland, and Katie Seymour.

GARRICK THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, MONEY. Mr. John Hare, Messrs. Forbes Robertson, Arthur Cecil, H. Kemble, C. Brookfield, G. Hare, A. Bourchier, Aynesworth, Rock, Du Maurier, Sims; Miss Kate Burke, Miss Mauda Mallett, and Mrs. Bancroft.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, CHARLEY'S AUNT. Mr. W. S. Penley, Messrs. Walter Everard, Sidney Paxton, H. Farmer, Cecil Thornbury, and H. Reeves Smith; Misses Ada Branson, Emmie Meyrick, Kate Graves. At 8, IN THE EYES OF THE WORLD.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, A BUNCH OF VIOLETS. Mr. Tree; Messrs. Lionel Brough, Nutecombe Gould, G. W. Anson, Holman Clarke, C. M. Hallard; Miss Lily Hanbury, Miss Audrey Ford, and Mrs. Tree.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8 punctually, FAUST. Mr. Irving, Miss Ellen Terry; Messrs. Wm. Terris, Julius Knight, C. Hague, Haviland, Tyars, Johnson, Harvey, Tabb, Archer; Reynolds, Buckley, Belmore, Espinoza, Seldon, Cushing; Misses Kate Phillips, Lacy, Forster, De Silva, M. A. Victor.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15. Christmas Edition of LITTLE CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS. Messrs. E. J. Lonnen, John F. Sheridan, F. Cook, G. Tate, W. S. Laidlaw, R. Carae; Mesdames Holland, Moore, Alice Letbridge, G. Whiteford, E. Greville, Thorne, F. Wilson, M. Maraden, M. Bonheur, and Miss May Yohé. Preceded by, at 7.40, WEATHERWISE.

OPERA COMIQUE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, A SOCIETY BUTTERFLY. Mrs. Langtry, Misses Rose Leclercq, E. Brinsley Sheridan, Walsingham, L. Morand, E. Norton, E. Williams, E. Vernon, G. Evisson; Messrs. W. Herbert, A. Beaumont, E. Rose, H. J. Carvill, S. Jerram, H. Templeton, C. R. Stuart, and F. Kerr.

SAVOY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, UTOPIA, LIMITED. Messrs. Rutland Barrington, W. H. Denny, J. Le Haye, W. Passmore, Scott-Fishe, Gridley, S. Russell, and C. Kenningham; Mesdames Nancy McIntosh, Florence Perry, Emmie Owen, and Rosina Brandram.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, THE MASQUERADERS. Mr. George Alexander, Messrs. Herbert Waring, Elliot, H. V. Esmond, Ian Robertson, A. Vane-Tempest, Ben Webster, William H. Day, &c.; Misses Granville, Miss Irene Vanbrugh, Miss Beryl Faber, Mrs. Edward Saker, and Mrs. Patrick Campbell.

TRAFALGAR THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, GO-BANG. Mesdames Jessie Bond, Agnes Hewitt, Adelaide Astor, Maggie Roberts, Maud Lockett, Lydia Flopp, and Letty Lind; Messrs. H. Gratton, George Grossmith, jun., Arthur Playfair, George Crawford, Edgar Stevens, Fred Storey, and John L. Shine. At 7.40, THE SILVER HONEYMOON.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE NEW BOY. Mr. Weedon Grossmith, Messrs. J. D. Beveridge, J. Beauchamp, S. Warden, K. Douglas, T. Palmer, F. Volpe, J. Hatfield; Mesdames Gladys Holfrey, May Palfrey, Esme Beringer, Helena Dacre. Preceded, at 8.20, by THE GENTLEMAN WHIP.

NEW NOVEL AT ALL LIBRARIES.

A CRUEL DILEMMA.

By MARY H. TENNYSON,

AUTHOR OF "LOVE WILL FIND OUT THE WAY,"
"PAID IN FULL," &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

FREDERICK WARNE & CO.,
BEDFORD STREET, STRAND.

SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS OF THE EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND.

AN ATLAS of ANCIENT EGYPT.
With Complete Index, Geographical and Historical Notes,
Biblical References, &c. Price 3s. 8d.

KYOGA PAUL, TRENCZ, TAUNER & Co., Ltd., London; BERNAR
QUARTER, London; ASHER & Co. London; and OFFICE of the EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND, 37, Great Russell Street, W.C. (opposite the British Museum).

Fifth Edition, Revised and Illustrated, price 4s.

THE FROG: an Introduction to Anatomy,
Histology and Embryology. By A. MINES MARSHALL, M.D.,
D.Sc., F.R.S., late Professor of Zoology in the Owens College Victoria University.

Manchester: J. E. Coanish, 16, St. Ann's Square.
London: SMITH, ELDER & Co., 15, Waterloo Place.

Just published by W. SPemann, Berlin.

"UEBER eine weibliche GEWAND-STATUE aus der WERKSTATT der PARTHENON-GIEBELFIGUREN."

By REINHARD KEKULE.

With Four Plates and Six Illustrations in Text.

Folio, bound, price 16 Marks.

To be obtained from the principal Booksellers.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address
Mr. G. B. Brocke, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., are prepared to undertake the Printing and Publishing of first-class Newspapers, Magazines, Books, Catalogues, Pamphlets, Prospectuses,
Articles of Association, Minutes of Evidence, &c., in the best style.
Their offices are fitted with the latest improvements in Rotary and other Machinery, the most modern English and Foreign Type, and they employ none but first-class workmen. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 2739. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

EPPS'S COCOAINE. COCOA-NIB EXTRACT.

(TEA-LIKE.)

A thin beverage of full flavour, now with many beneficially taking the place of tea. Its active principle being a gentle nerve stimulant, supplies the needed energy without unduly exciting the system.—Sold in Packets and Tins, by Grocers, labelled "JAMES EPPS & Co., Ltd., Homoeopathic Chemists, London."

Gallons of Lather

ARE PRODUCED BY A STICK OF

VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP.

VINOLIA SHAVING STICKS, 6d., 1/-, 1/6, 2/-, and 2/6.

VINOLIA SHAVING CAKES, 1/-, 2/-, and 3/-.

OLD SHIRTS

RE-FITTED, Fine Irish Linen, 2s.;

free, ready to wear, 2s. 6d. Sample Shirt, for Dress and ordinary wear, any size, post free, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Twilled Night Shirts, 2s. 11d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., or 5s. 9d. LINEN COLLARS and CUFFS, Best 4-fold Collars, 4s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. doz.; made exact to pattern, 2s. 9d. half-doz., post free. Napkins, 2s. 6d. per doz.; Dinner
Napkins, 4s. 6d. per dozen; Table

Cloths, 2 yards square, 2s. 9d. each,
2½ yards by 3 yards, 5s. 6d.; Kitchen Table Cloths, 10½d. each; real Irish Linen Sheetting, fully bleached, 2 yards wide, 1s. 11d. per yard; and Linen Diaper, 8½d. per yard; Nursery Diaper, 4½d. per yard;
Surplice Linen, 7½d. per yard; Glass Cloths, 3s. 6d. dozen. LINEN HUCKABACK TOWELS, 3s. 6d. per dozen; Damask Towels, 6s. 6d.
per dozen; Turkish Bath Towels, 1s. each; Twilled Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 1d. each. IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS.—
Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 3s. 6d. Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 4s. 11d. per dozen. Better qualities equally cheap. Price Lists and Patterns of all kinds of Linen Goods and Hosiery sent to any part of the world, post free. Monograms, Crests, Coats of Arms, Initials, &c., woven and embroidered. Samples and Illustrated Price Lists post free to any part of the world.

IRISH LINEN

B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST

ELKIN MATHEWS & JOHN LANE'S

NEW BOOKS IN BELLES-LETTRES.

HERO and LEANDER. By Christopher Marlowe and George CHAPMAN. With Borders, Initials, and 7 Illustrations Designed and Engraved on the Wood by C. S. Ricketts and C. H. Shannon. Bound in English vellum and gold. 200 copies only. 35s. net. Only 40 copies remain unsold. [Now ready.]

THE DANCING FAUN: a Novel. By Florence Farr. With Title-page and Cover Design by Aubrey Beardsley. Crown 8vo, uniform with "Keynotes," 3s. 6d. net. [Now ready.]

A LITTLE CHILD'S WREATH: a Sonnet Sequence. By ELIZABETH RACHEL CHAPMAN. With Title page and Cover Design by Selwyn Image. 350 copies, square 16mo, pale green buckram, 3s. 6d. net. [Now ready.]

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of a BOY. Passages selected by his Friend G. S. STREET. With Title-page Designed by C. W. Furze. 450 copies. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. [Ready this day.]

A LONDON ROSE and other RHYMES. By Ernest Rhys. With Title-page Designed by Selwyn Image. 350 copies. Crown 8vo, 5s. net. [Ready this day.]

THE SPHINX: a Poem. By Oscar Wilde. Decorated throughout in line and colour, and bound in vellum and gold from a Design by Charles Ricketts. 250 copies £2 2s. net; 25 copies Large Paper, £5 5s. net. [Ready this day.]

Illustrated Prospectus on application.

PROSE FANCIES. By Richard Le Gallienne. With a Portrait of the Author by Wilson Steer. Crown 8vo, purple cloth, uniform with "The Religion of a Literary Man." 5s. net. [Ready June 15.]

Also a limited Large-Paper Edition (nearly all subscribed), 12s. 6d. net.

BOOKS and PLAYS by ALLAN MONKHOUSE: Essays on George Meredith's Novels and Poems, George Borrow's Writings, Ibsen's Plays, Stevenson and Henley's Plays, Turgeneff, &c. 400 copies. Crown 8vo, 5s. net. [Ready June 15.]

THE SECOND BOOK of the RHYMERS' CLUB. 500 copies (of which 400 are for sale). Square 16mo, 5s. net. [Ready June 15.]

Also 50 copies Large Paper, 10s. 6d. net.

THE BODLEY HEAD, VIGO STREET, LONDON, W.

NOTICE.—The late Sir Gerald Portal's Work,
"THE BRITISH MISSION TO UGANDA IN 1893,"
will be ready on Thursday next, at all Libraries and Booksellers, price One Guinea.

LONDON: EDWARD ARNOLD, 37, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, W.C.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.
 For Mutual Life Assurance. ESTABLISHED 1835.

Invested Funds	...	...	...	...	£4,700,000
Paid in Claims	...	...	...	...	£9,000,000

PROFITS.—The whole are divided amongst the Assured. Already divided, £4,600,000. At the division in 1892 there were nearly eight hundred Policies in respect of which not only were the Premiums entirely extinguished, but also Annuities were granted or Cash Bonuses paid, whilst in the case of many Policies the original sums assured are now more than doubled by the Bonus Additions.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

ARTHUR SMITHER, Actuary and Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK,
 Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
 TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
 TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
 STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.
SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
 For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
 HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
 FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY
 HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
 FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
 FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.
BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
 and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
 PIEES. Also.
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.
 SOLE ADDRESS—
 11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
 MAYFAIR, W.

MESSRS. LUZAC & CO.'S

NEW BOOKS.

ASSYRIAN AND BABYLONIAN LETTERS
 BELONGING TO THE
K. COLLECTION OF THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

By ROBERT FRANCIS HARPER,
 Of the University of Chicago.

PART II.
 Post 8vo, cloth, pp. xvi, and 112 Plates of Texts, 25s. net.

JUDSON'S
BURMESE-ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

Revised and Enlarged by ROBERT C. STEVENSON,
 Burma Commission.

Royal 8vo, pp. xiv.-1188, 6, paper covers, 25s. net;
 half bound, 30s. net.

A KANNADA-ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

By Rev. F. KITTEL, B.G.E.M.
 Royal 8vo, half-bound, pp. L-1752, 32s. net.

STUDIES IN ENGLISH.
 WRITTEN AND SPOKEN.

By C. STOFFEL.

FIRST SERIES.

Royal 8vo, cloth, pp. xii. 332, 7s. 6d.

LUZAC & CO.,
 46, GREAT RUSSELL STREET, LONDON, W.C.
Publishers to the India Office.

MUDIE'S
SELECT
LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
 ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
 SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
 LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
 N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand, at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY
 10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
 Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
 30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
 241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

TO AUTHORS AND EDITORS.

NORTHERN
NEWSPAPER

KENDAL. SYNDICATE,

Supplies high-class short and serial fiction;
 bright sketches;
 articles on general sub-

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1154.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JUNE 16, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

By the Author of

"AN ENGLISHMAN IN PARIS."

MY PARIS NOTE-BOOK.

In 1 vol., demy 8vo, price 14s.

Daily Telegraph.—"My Paris Note-Book" is one of those exceptionally delightful books the manifold fascinations of which it is difficult to exemplify by quotation. There is a rich fond of amusement and instruction in this brilliantly-written work."

Daily News.—"An Englishman in Paris" is once more in the field with a volume of anecdotes and incidents of French life and society. The reader of these chapters will not lack entertainment."

Morning Post.—"This is a book that will find many readers, whatever may be its value as an authority for student's of history."

The Observer.—"Suffice it to say that the book is good reading from beginning to end."

Public Opinion.—"It is with feelings of pleasure and regret that we reach the end of this entertaining volume: pleasure upon reflection, but regret that its conclusion comes all too soon."

Galignani's Messenger.—"...Want of space forbids us to make further quotations from the good things in which the book abounds. The 'Englishman' has many curious and diverting bits of gossip to tell us."

A NEW LIBRARY NOVEL.

THE POTTER'S THUMB.

By FLORA ANNIE STEEL,

Author of "From the Five Rivers," &c.

In 3 vols.

Fall Mall Budget.—"For this week the only novel worth mentioning is Mrs. Steel's 'The Potter's Thumb.' Her admirable 'From the Five Rivers,' since it dealt with native Indian life, was naturally compared with Mr. Kipling's stories. In 'The Potter's Thumb' the charm which came from the freshness of them still remains. Almost every character is convincing, and some of them excellent to a degree."

THE NOVELS OF IVAN TURGENEV.—Vol. I.

RUDIN. Translated from the Russian by Constance Garnett.

With a Portrait of the Author. 12mo, cloth, 3s. net.

A NEW VOLUME OF HEINEMANN'S INTERNATIONAL LIBRARY.

Edited by EDMUND GOSSE.

THE GRANDEE. By Don Armando Palacio Valdes. Translated from the Spanish by RACHEL CHALICE. With an Introduction by the Editor. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; paper cover, 2s. 6d.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR, uniform with the above.

FROTH.

LONDON: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON, AND FERRIER'S LIST.

A Love Story of Press Life.

THIS DAY. Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d., cloth extra.

WILLIAM BLACKLOCK, Journalist.

A LOVE STORY OF PRESS LIFE.

By T. BANKS MACLACHLAN.

Uniform with above, price 3s. 6d., cloth extra.

JAMES INWICK, Ploughman and Elder. By P. HAY HUNTER, Author of "The Silver Bullet," "Sons of the Croft," &c.; Joint Author of "My Ducats and My Daughter."

"Undoubtedly one of the ablest, brightest, and most humorous books of the kind ever published."—Weekly Scotsman.

MY DUCATS AND MY DAUGHTER. By P. HAY HUNTER and

WALTER WHYTE. New and Cheaper Edition, price 1s. 6d., paper cover.

"The nearest approach to an ideal Scottish novel."—Scottish Review.

"One of the cleverest stories published for many years."—British Weekly.

THE DAUGHTER OF LEONTIUS; or, Phases of Byzantine Life,

Social and Religious, in the Fifth Century after Christ. By J. D. CRAIG HUSTON, B.D. Antiqua paper, cloth extra, gilt top, 6s.

Mr. Gladstone, writing to the Author, says:—"Pray accept my thanks, dear sir, for the work you have kindly sent me. I am perusing it as well as the condition of my eyes will permit, and not without great interest and pleasure."

RECOLLECTIONS OF DR. JOHN BROWN, Author of "Rab and His Friends," &c., with a Selection from his Correspondence. By ALEXANDER PEDDIE, M.D., F.R.C.P., F.R.S.E.

Second Thousand, with Portraits and Illustrations. Price 3s. 6d., net.

MRS. SAXBY'S NEW STORY—This Day, price 1s., cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

A CAMSTERIE NACKET. The Story of a Contrary Laddie, Ill to Guide.

By JESSIE M. E. SAXBY, Author of "Preston Tower," "Kate and Jean," "Lucky Lines," &c., &c.

Oliphant's Pocket Novels.

Oliphant's Popular Novels.

THE SILVER BULLET. By P. HAY HUNTER, Joint Author of "My Ducats and My Daughter." Price 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

THE CURSE THAT CAME HOME. By J. K. LAWSON, Author of "A Vain Sacrifice." Cloth extra, 1s. 6d.; paper covers, 1s.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON, AND FERRIER, 24, Old Bailey, E.C., and Edinburgh.

ANY BOOK

Reviewed or Advertised in THE ACADEMY can be obtained post free of J. F. SPRIGGS, Publishing and Advertising Agency, 23, Old Bailey, London, E.C., by remitting the published price.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON'S LIST.

The Times says: "A valuable and important contribution to the history of the Napoleonic period. This extremely interesting work."

MEMOIRS

TO SERVE FOR

THE HISTORY OF NAPOLEON I.

From 1802 to 1815.

By his Private Secretary,

Baron CLAUDE FRANCOIS DE MENEVAL.

The work completed by the addition of hitherto Unpublished Documents.

Translated by ROBERT H. SHERARD.

In 3 vols., demy 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top (about 1,400 pages), with Autograph Letters and Photogravure Portraits, 18s. per volume.

The English Edition has been fully Annotated by Mr. SHERARD.

Vols. I. and II. now ready. Vol. III. next we k.

SECOND EDITION.

THE GREEN BAY TREE.

A Tale of To-Day. In 3 vols. By W. H. WILKINS and HERBERT VIVIAN.

The Athenaeum says: "An unusually successful piece of collaboration. It is a brilliant and most amusing book, and may be enjoyed unreservedly. The style is bright and crisp."

B. L. FARJEON'S NEW NOVEL.

AARON the JEW. In 3 vols. [This day.]

HENRY CRESSWELL'S NEW NOVEL.

A PRECIOUS SCAMP.

In 3 vols.

Globe.—"Undoubtedly clever and readable. Goes near to providing one with a new sensation."
Glasgow Herald.—"A capital novel, full of life. Quite a novel to read."

J. FOGERTY'S NEW NOVEL.

A HUNTED LIFE. In 3 vols.

The World says: "There is real human nature in this Irish story, close and candid study of character, sustained interest, and admirable local colour."

TWENTY-SECOND THOUSAND.

A YELLOW ASTER. By

"IOTA." Thirteenth and Cheap Edition. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

This novel has attracted unusual attention. More than fifty columns have been devoted by the press to reviews of the work.

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

The TEMPLE of DEATH:

a Story of Indian Adventure. By EDMUND MITCHELL. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, with Frontispiece by G. H. Edwards, 6s.

St. James's Gazette.—"The unfolding of the plot never flags, and the action is continually intensified until the final climax is reached. The incidents are thrilling, and the local colouring admirably interwoven with the narrative. Few people who are well launched into the book will want to leave it unfinished."

HUTCHINSON & CO., PATERNOSTER ROW.

TABLE OF CONTENTS	PAGE
SPENCER BAYNES'S SHAKESPEARE STUDIES, by T. HUTCHINSON	489
MRS. GREEN'S TOWN LIFE IN THE FIFTEENTH CENTURY, by the Rev. C. J. ROBINSON	490
MRS. CUNNINGHAM GRAHAM'S SANTA TERESA, by the Rev. WESTWORTH WEBSTER	491
BRITAIN'S MEMOIRS OF BOOKS AND AUTHORS, by J. A. NOBLE	492
NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM SHARP	493
COMEDY AND DRAMA, by NORMAN GALE	494
NOTES AND NEWS	495
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	496
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	496
IN MEMORIAM: CHARLES HENRY PEARSON, by Prof. H. A. STONG	497
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	497
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	497
CORRESPONDENCE—
1. Primitive Disarrangement of Genesis vii. 19, by the Rev. R. H. CHARLES; The Seventy "Year-Weeks" of Daniel, by the Rev. Buchanan Blake; The Etymology of "Yeoman," by the Rev. A. L. MAYHEW; The Bonlogne Prudentius Glosses, by Prof. Logemann; The "Shield-Wall" at Hastings, by J. H. ROUND	497
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	498
SKRIT MANUSCRIPTS IN CHINA, by Prof. KIELHORN	498
OBITUARY: PROF. WHITNEY, by A. H. S.	499
SCIENCE NOTES	500
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	500
THE EUGENE POT TRUST, by A. S. MURRAY	501
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	501
MASSENET'S "WEATHER," &c., by J. S. SHEOLOCK	502
RECENT CONCERTS	502
MUSIC NOTES	502

FOR SALE, a LETTER of THACKERAY.—Address, J. J. ANDERSON, 28, St. Patrick's Road, Drumacoura, Dublin.

POMARE IV.: Queen of Tahiti. An Autograph Letter FOR SALE.—Apply, with offer, to D. Union Club, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

THE HYMN to APOLLO, recently discovered at Delphi, will be SUNG by Mr. W. H. WING, and a short account of GREEK and ROMAN MUSIC given by Mr. ABBY WILLIAMS, at the QUEEN'S HALL (Small Room), on MONDAY, JUNE 25th, at 5 p.m. Tickets, 4s. and 2s., of the usual Agents.

POPULAR WRITERS of FICTION wishing to secure the most extensive COPYRIGHTED PUBLICATION obtainable in United States, Canada, and elsewhere, should communicate with P. F. COLLIER, 521, West Thirtieth Street, New York City.

CATALOGUES FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS. New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES. WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Importers of Foreign Books, 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, AND 20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH. CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN, FOREIGN BOOKSELLER, 45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET (Opposite the British Museum). Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices. Catalogues on application.

TYPE-WRITING. AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS 115, FLEET STREET, E.C. Lowest Charges. Highest Speed. Every kind of Typewriting Work Done. Price List:—115, Fleet Street, London.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—ASSYRIAN SLIDERS.—Statuettes of Sennacherib, Assurbanipal, and his Queen. Also reduced Facsimiles of the unique and beautiful "Garden scene," Winged Human-headed Lion and Bull, &c. Modelled from the famous Nimrud sculptures, and made in Porcelain (parian). "Interesting and faithful reproductions."—Athenaeum, Oct. 7, 1893. Descriptive Prospectus on application to ALFRED JARVIS (Sole Publisher), 45, Willes Road, London, N.W.

THE UNIVERSITY of ADELAIDE. HUGHES PROFESSORSHIP OF ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE AND MENTAL AND MORAL PHILOSOPHY. Applications for the above PROFESSORSHIP (vacant in consequence of the transfer of Professor Boulenger to the Chair of Classics) will be received at the office of the Agent-General for South Australia, 15, Victoria Street, Westminster, not later than the 1st of July next. Salary, £200 a year. Duties commence on the 1st of March, 1895. Particulars of tenure and duties may be obtained at the Agent-General's Office.

SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & CO.

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF JAMES MACPHERSON.

By BAILEY SAUNDERS.

Large 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"The Ossianic question is one of the most interesting themes in the literary history of the eighteenth century. We do not say that Mr. Bailey Saunders has exhausted it. But he has accounted for it in a general way, and in a judicial spirit which manifests itself in every page of his book, and which his readers will appreciate."—Daily News.

PRIMITIVE CIVILIZATIONS:

A HISTORY OF OWNERSHIP IN ARCHAIC COMMUNITIES.

By E. J. SIMCOX, Author of "Natural Law," &c.

2 vols., large 8vo, 32s.

"To examine so comprehensive a work in any detail is quite impossible in the space at our disposal; but we may say that it is a contribution to economical and social history of exceptional value and importance, which displays much patient and laborious research, keen insight, and rare powers of interpretation and generalisation."—Times.

THE GREAT ALTERNATIVE: a Plea for a National Policy.

By SPENSER WILKINSON, Author of "The Brain of an Army," &c. 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"Mr. Spenser Wilkinson has written an extremely interesting book, and one that is valuable in so far as it will induce many people to think upon questions which are of all the most important to the Empire, and upon which there is at present too little independent thought."—Athenaeum.

"The lucidity with which the present European situation is reviewed in these pages, and the power and acumen with which all its issues are examined, deserve unqualified praise."—Saturday Review.

THE ENGLISH DEMOCRACY: its Promises and Perils.

By ARNOLD WHITE, Author of "Problems of a Great City." Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

Among the subjects dealt with are: The Leaders of Demos, the Crown, the Lords and the Commons, the Parochialisation of India, Jewish Influence on Democracy, the Outlook for Women, and the Religion of the Irreligious.

ENGLAND and the CONTINENTAL POWERS.

By JOHN KEIGHLEY LUND. Crown 8vo, cloth limp, 2s. 6d.

The Electorate and Foreign Affairs—The Relations of the Great Powers—The Eastern Question—Russia and India—England, Germany, and Italy—England, Spain, and France—The Question of Disarmament.

SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & CO., LONDON.

UNIVERSITY of EDINBURGH.

The University Court of the University of Edinburgh will, on Monday, 18th July next, or some subsequent day, proceed to the APPOINTMENT of an ADDITIONAL EXAMINER in CLASSICS in the University, for a period of four years from 1st October next. The office can be held only by a member of the General Council of one of the Scottish Universities.

The additional Examiner must examine (1) for the Preliminary Examinations, (2) for Graduation in Arts, and may be required to represent the University for the next two years on the Joint Board of Examiners of the Scottish Universities.

Each applicant should lodge with the undersigned, not later than Monday, 9th July next, sixteen copies of his application (one of which should be signed), and sixteen copies of any testimonials he may desire to present.

Applicants who send in Testimonials must not send more than four. Particulars of remuneration on application.

University of Edinburgh, M. C. TAYLOR, Sec. Univ. Court. 8th June, 1894.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President—The Right Hon. Sir M. E. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.

THURSDAY, 21st JUNE, at 8.30 p.m.

The following Paper will be read:—

"THE CAUSES of the NAPOLEONIC WAR in 1803," from the Correspondence in the English and Continental Archives, by WILHELM EKEDEHL, B.A. 20, Hanover Square, W.

LOWE'S £5 PACKAGES

Of Assorted Books for Asylums, Hospitals, Village Libraries, Working Men's Institutes, Public Libraries, and for Private Families have given great satisfaction wherever sent. These Packages consist of from 150 to 200 volumes, and are books well selected, and most useful for the purposes named.

These books are all very carefully selected, and are works of a deeply interesting and instructive character and are mostly in their original binding, in nice clean condition (cost nearly £20). No duplicates supplied. Books not approved of will at once be taken back and exchanged for others.

To ladies and gentlemen desirous of making presents of books, these lots are specially adapted, as they are nice clean copies, and well selected from many thousands.

PARCELS MAY BE HAD FROM £1 IS. UPWARDS.

LOWE'S BOOK BARGAINS.

Kindly see CHARLES LOWE'S CATALOGUE of recent purchases for Bargains in Books, from 6d. to £100 per volume. Among special items on sale are the following:—Collection of 40 large Mezzotint Portraits (mostly Ladies) after Sir Joshua Reynolds, many proofs all genuine first impressions, £200.—Large Oil Painting, by George Morland, £48.—"Punch," 1841-80, new, half-morocco, £17.—"Encyclopaedia Britannica," last edition, new, half-russia, with Index vol., £28; previous edition, very elegant, full calf, £8, cost £60.—Book plates, 100 various, some duplicates, 25s.—"Art Journal," 4s. per year.—Alphac, very fine, Douglas Jerrold's Works, 6 vols., cloth, 10s. Libraries purchased for cash—Distance immaterial.

CHARLES LOWE, New Street Birmingham.

Established over 40 years.

LAW LECTURES.

THE LIVERPOOL BOARD OF LEGAL

STUDIES are prepared to receive APPLICATIONS by Gentlemen willing to deliver, in Liverpool, a COURSE of TEN LECTURES (with Classes) on

(a) EQUITY.

(b) COMMON LAW.

The Courses will be consecutive, extending from January to June. Fee, Fifty Guineas a Course, with an allowance for travelling expenses. Applications to be sent in on or before the 3rd July.

Address the HON. SECRETARY, Liverpool Board of Legal Studies, Law Library, Liverpool.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL (VICTORIA UNIVERSITY).

ROSCOE CHAIR OF ART.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for a PROFESSORSHIP of ARCHITECTURE. Fixed Endowment £275 per annum, with share of fees from students, and other emoluments. The Professor will conduct Architecture Classes at the College, and will likewise act as Director upon the representative MANAGING BOARD appointed to conduct the newly constituted SCHOOL of ARCHITECTURE and APPLIED ARTS for the City of Liverpool, supported from funds set apart for Technical and Commercial Instruction. The appointment will be for five years, and the Professor will be re-eligible. Applications, with testimonials, must be lodged with the Registrar by or before July 25.—For further details apply to the Registrar, University College, Liverpool.

TO SCULPTORS.—Designs may be submitted for a STATUE in BRONZE to EDWARD COLSTON, the Bristol Philanthropist. Cost not to exceed £1,000. (The Committee will be influenced in their selection of design by the cost of Statue.) Questions will be answered and particulars given on application to the Hon. Secs. Models to be delivered by not later than September 25th, under a Motto, to be accompanied by an envelope bearing name motto and commercial name of Designer. The Designer whose model is selected will be entrusted with the work, but no extra prizes will be given.—Address Hon. Secs., COLSTON STATUE COMMITTEE, 11, Quay Street, Bristol.

TRIENNIAL HANDEL FESTIVAL,

1894.—CHOIR and ORCHESTRA, FOUR THOUSAND PERFORMERS. Organist, Mr. WALTRAUD H. HANDEL. Conductor, Mr. AUGUST MANNS.—THE OFFICES at CRYSTAL PALACE for the SALE of TICKETS; and also NEWELL, EWER & CO.'S, 1, Berner Street, and 20 and 21, Queen Street, Chesham, NOW OPEN DAILY from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Plans and prices of seats, and full programmes for each day (including the Grand General Rehearsal on Friday, June 22), will be sent post free on application to the Manager, Crystal Palace, S.E.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

NORFOLK.—Hethersett, near Norwich.—The entire valuable Collection of Works of Art, Furniture, and other Property of the late J. H. Browne, Esq. (formerly of Holland Park).

MESSRS. SPELMAN have received instructions from the Executors to prepare for SALE by AUCTION, on TUESDAY, JUNE 26, and Three Following Days, the entire valuable PROPERTY, in and about Hill House, Hethersett, near Norwich, comprising—Early English, Oriental, Sèvres, Dresden, and other porcelain; about 1,000 ozs. of exceedingly fine gilt and silver plate, plated ware, enamels, Venetian glass, chime and bracket clocks, gilt and ormolu candelabra, and other ornaments, miniatures, trinkets, caskets and cabinets of agates and rare marbles, ivories, bronzes, statuary, Aubusson tapestry, library of illustrated works, and books of prints, rare engravings, pictures, English, Italian, and other marqueterie furniture, handsome Venetian and other pier glasses, secretaires, cabinets, the contents of nine bedrooms of a superior character, old engraved glass, table services, cutlery, linen, &c.; also the brougham, wagonette, and other carriages, harness, garden effects; also about 89 doz. of exceedingly choice old sherries and port. In all 1,729 Lots.

May be viewed only by catalogue on Saturday and Monday, June 23 and 25; catalogues (6d. each) may be had of Messrs. SPELMAN, Norwich.

MONDAY, JULY 2.

Valuable Collection of Pictures, Old Books, China, Curiosities, &c.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will SELL by AUCTION, at his GREAT ROOMS, 38, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, on MONDAY, JULY 2nd, at half-past 12 precisely, the Valuable Collection of PICTURES, ETCHINGS, OLD BOOKS, CHINA, CURIOSITIES, &c., formed by the Rev. KEVIN WILLIAMS; also a Collection of Water Colours and Oil Paintings, principally by well-known Artists.

On view the Saturday prior, 12 till 4, and morning of sale, and Catalogues had.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEEVER, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, London.—FOUNDATION SCHOLARSHIPS. An EXAMINATION for filling up about 20 VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 4th SEPTEMBER NEXT.—For information, apply to the Bursar, St. Paul's School, West Kensington, W.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon-street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholastic Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers, may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, at private or public establishments, terms gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. BROCKEN, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SEEL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., are prepared to undertake the Printing and Publishing of first-class Newspapers, Magazines, Books, Catalogues, Pamphlets, Prospectuses, Articles of Association, Minutes of Evidence, &c., in the best style. Their offices are fitted with the latest improvements in Rotary and other Machinery, the most modern English and Foreign Type, and they employ none but first-class workmen. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 2739. Telegraph, "AFRICANIAN, London."

J. W. ARROWSMITH'S LIST.

ARROWSMITH'S 3s. 6d. SERIES. Crown 8vo. Vol. XVIII. Third Edition. Seventh Thousand.

THE PRISONER OF ZENDA. By ANTHONY HOPE.

"No tale of adventure in far-off, mysterious countries surpasses in strange excitement this story."—The Times. "A book that will bring joy to all true lovers of Dumas."—Adelphi. "Nothing short of a noble book."—Black and White. "The dash and galloping excitement of this rattling story."—Punch.

ARROWSMITH'S BRISTOL LIBRARY. Vol. LIX.

Fcap. 8vo, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

AT THE SIGN OF THE WICKET: Essays on the Glorious Game. By E. B. V. CHRISTIAN.

"Any cricketer may study this volume with delight."—Saturday Review.

Demy 8vo, 503 pp., 6s., 45 Illustrations.

CRICKET. By Dr. W. G. GRACE.

"A most attractive and readable book."—Daily Telegraph.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

KINGS OF CRICKET. By RICHARD DAFT. With an Introduction by ANDREW LANG. 80 Illustrations.

"There is not a living cricketer, young or old, who will not heartily enjoy the reading of 'Kings of Cricket.'"—Western Daily Mercury.

BATTING, BOWLING, FIELDING. By Dr. W. G. GRACE. Demy 16mo, 1s.

HINTS ON CRICKET. By RICHARD DAFT. Illustrated. 6d.

SET FREE. By AGLAIA. Fcap. 8vo, 1s.

"A short and brightly written love story."—Scotsman.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co., Ltd. And Railway Bookstalls.

"The most charming volume of its kind."—Scotsman.

REMINISCENCES OF YARROW. By the late JAMES RUSSELL, D.D., Minister of Yarrow, with Preface by Professor CAMPBELL BELL, Esq., Editor, ready in July, with Twenty New Illustrations by Tom Scott, A.R.S.A.

Crown 8vo, 5s. net. Edition de Luxe, crown 4to, limited to 425 copies, numbered, 12s. 6d. net. Subscribers' names received before publication will be printed in the work.—George Lewis & Son, Publishers, Selkirk.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

NEW EDITION OF QUAIN'S "DICTIONARY OF MEDICINE," REVISED THROUGHOUT AND ENLARGED.

2 vols. medium 8vo cloth, red edges, price 40s. net.

[On Monday next.

A DICTIONARY OF MEDICINE.

Including General Pathology, General Therapeutics, Hygiene, and the Diseases of Women and Children.

BY VARIOUS WRITERS.

Edited by RICHARD QUAIN, Bart., M.D. Lond., LL.D. Edin. (Hon.), F.R.S.,

Physician Extraordinary to Her Majesty the Queen,

Assisted by FREDERICK THOMAS ROBERTS, M.D. Lond., B.Sc., and J. MITCHELL BRUCE, M.A., Abdn., M.D. Lond.

Crown 8vo, 6s. 6d. net.

[On Monday next.

COCK LANE AND COMMON SENSE.

A Series of Papers by ANDREW LANG.

"CONTENTS:—Introduction—Savage Spiritualism—Ancient Spiritualism—Comparative Psychical Research—Haunted Houses—Cock Lane and Common Sense—Apparitions, Ghosts, and Hallucinations—Screaming or Crystal-gazing—The Second Sight—Ghosts before the Law—A Modern Trial for Witchcraft—Presbyterian Ghost-hunters—The Logic of Table-turning—The Ghost Theory of the Origin of Religion."

THREE LECTURES on the VEDĀNTA PHILOSOPHY, delivered

at the Royal Institution in March, 1894. By F. MAX MÜLLER, K.M., Member of the French Institute. 8vo, 5s.

"Professor Max Müller gives a singularly lucid and attractive account of 'the profoundest thoughts of Indian thinker' about the soul"—that is, of the Vedānta philosophy as set forth in the Upanishads.... His three lectures contain not merely a learned account of the origin of the Vedānta philosophy, but a clear and succinct exposition of its ethical and spiritual content, and an instructive comparison of its teaching with that of European systems."—Times.

ON the WALLABY; or, Through the East and Across Australia. By

OUY BOOTHBY. With 8 Plates and 85 Illustrations in the Text by Ben Boothby. 8vo, 18s.

"Enough of incident and of idea is supplied at first hand in this story of strange wanderings to satisfy all reasonable demands..... A tale worth the telling is written with vigour and rattling good humour, and illustrated in a like spirit."—Scotsman.

THE CAMEL: its Uses and Management. By Major ARTHUR GLYN

LEONARD, 1st 2nd East Lancashire Regiment. Royal 8vo, 21s. net.

"A thoroughly practical work on the soldier's camel. The author has been for sixteen years a transport officer. He has been engaged in this service in Afghanistan, South Africa, India, and the Sudan. That is in itself a credential for his book; for no one not possessed of an equable and reflective temper could have gone through his experiences and yet be enthusiastic over his branch of the profession..... Yet Major Leonard's practical experience leads him to the conclusion that, of all transport animals, the camel is best for military use in the East."—Spectator.

ENGINEERING CONSTRUCTION in IRON, STEEL and TIMBER.

By WILLIAM HENRY WARREN, Whitworth Scholar; Member of the Institution of Civil Engineers, London; Challis Professor of Civil and Mechanical Engineering, University of Sydney. Royal 8vo, 16s. net.

PAPERS and ADDRESSES. By Lord BRASSEY, K.C.B., D.C.L.

NAVAL and MARITIME, 1871 to 1893. Arranged and Edited by Captain S. EARDLEY-WILMOT, R.N. 2 vols. crown 8vo, 10s.

ON the DEVELOPMENT and TRANSMISSION of POWER from

CENTRAL STATIONS: being the Howard Lectures delivered at the Society of Arts in 1893. By WILLIAM CAWTHORNE UNWIN, F.R.S., B.Sc.; M. Inst. Civil Engineers. 8vo, 10s. net.

LONDON and the KINGDOM: a History derived mainly from the Archives at Guildhall in the custody of the Corporation of the City of London. By REGINALD R. SHARPE, D.C.L., Records Clerk in the Office of the Town Clerk of the City of London. (3 vols.) 8vo. Vol. I. 10s. 6d.

THE THING THAT HATH BEEN; or, a Young Man's Mistakes.

A Story. By A. H. GILKES, M.A., Head Master of Dulwich College, Author of "Boys and Masters." Crown 8vo, 6s.

MAJOR JOSHUA: a Novel. By FRANCIS FORSTER. 1 vol., crown

8vo, 6s.

"A capital story..... Mr. Forster's pictures of the girls Fenwick, of Valentine, and of Captain Beresford are almost as good as that of the Major; and this is saying a great deal. The book is eminently readable."—Scotsman.

A TRUE RELATION of the TRAVELS and PERILOUS ADVENTURES

of MATHEW DUDGEON, GENTLEMAN: wherein is truly set down the Manner of his Taking, the Long Time of his Slavery in Algiers, and Means of his Delivery. Written by Himself, and now for the first time printed. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"We confess to a good deal of curiosity about the original MS. of this work. If it be a really old document, it was written by someone who was much under the influence of Daniel Defoe. If it be a modern imitation, it is very cleverly done."—Daily Chronicle.

WORKS BY H. RIDER HAGGARD.

NEW EDITIONS. Fully Illustrated. 3s. 6d. each.

ALLAN'S WIFE.

[Ready.

MR. MEESON'S WILL.

[In July.

THE WITCH'S HEAD.

[In a few days.

DAWN.

[In August.

The above works by Mr. Haggard will in future be published by Messrs. Longmans & Co., who will issue New and Uniform Editions in their SILVER LIBRARY in due course as above.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

NEW YORK: 15, East 16th Street.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE.—THE THIRD EDITION of VISCOUNT WOLSELEY'S "LIFE of the DUKE of MARLBOROUGH" is NOW READY at all Booksellers and Libraries, in 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits and Plans, 32s.

NEW NOVELS.

NOW READY.
BY THE AUTHOR OF "LISBETH," &c.
A TROUBLESOME PAIR. By LESLIE KEITE, Author of "The Children," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

A NEW NOVEL, NOW READY.
VICTIMS of FASHION.
By A. M. GRANGE. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

A NEW NOVEL AT ALL LIBRARIES.
IF MEN WERE WISE.
By E. L. SHAW. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.
The POWER of the PAST
By ESME STUART, Author of "Joan Velliscott," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOTICE.—THE THIRD EDITION of MISS BROUGHTON'S NEW NOVEL, "A BEGINNER," may NOW be OBTAINED at all Booksellers and Libraries, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"Mrs. Wood has certainly an art of novel-writing which no rival possesses in the same degree or kind. It is not, we fancy, a common experience for any one to leave one of these novels unfinished."—Spectator.

BETWEEN ONE AND TWO MILLION COPIES OF MRS. HENRY WOOD'S NOVELS have been sold since publication.

Each Novel of this favourite Author can be had separately, well printed on good paper, and neatly bound, price 3s. 6d.

EAST LYNNE. (275th Thousand.)	ANNE HEREFORD.
THE CHANNINGS.	DENE HOLLOW.
MRS. HALLIBURTON'S TROUBLES.	EDINA.
THE SHADOW of ASHLIDYAT.	A LIFE'S SECRET.
LORD OAKBURN'S DAUGHTERS.	COURT NETHER-LEIGH.
VERNER'S PRIDE.	LADY GRACE.
ROLAND YORKE.	BESSY RANE.
JOHNNY LUDLOW (first series).	PARKWATER.
MILDRED ARKELL.	THE UNHOLY WISH.
ST. MARTIN'S EVE.	the FOGGY NIGHT at OFFORD, &c.
TREVLIN HOLD.	JOHNNY LUDLOW (third series).
THE RED COURT FARM.	THE MASTER of GREYLANDS.
GEORGE CANTERBURY'S WILL.	ORVILLE COLLEGE.
WITHIN the MAZE.	POMEROY ABBEY.
ELSTER'S FOLLY.	JOHNNY LUDLOW (fourth series).
LADY ADELAIDE.	ADAM GRAINGER.
OSWALD CRAY.	JOHNNY LUDLOW (fifth series).
JOHNNY LUDLOW (second series).

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

HURST & BLACKETT'S PUBLICATIONS.

A SECOND EDITION (third thousand) now ready at all Book-sellers and Libraries.

FIFTY YEARS of MY LIFE
in the WORLD of SPORT at HOME and ABROAD.
By Sir JOHN DUGDALE ASTLEY, Bart. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits, 30s.

"It is not too much to say that in writing these two volumes, which he has, by permission, dedicated to the Prince of Wales, Sir John Astley has not only produced a book which will amuse and in some measure instruct the thousands who will be anxious to read it, but has at once taken his place amongst the best chroniclers of his time."
The Times, May 18.

"In conclusion, we never read a book into the treasures and attractions of which it is more impossible to give an insight by a few quotations. It is the work of a thoroughly genial and good fellow, who has seen nearly every vicissitude of life that the open air can afford, and has touched nothing without adorning it."—Daily Telegraph.

NEW NOVELS.

THE LIGHT of OTHER DAYS. By Mrs. FORRESTER, Author of "Viva," "My Lord and My Lady," &c. 2 vols.

SHALLOWS. By Myra Swan. 2 vols.

SECOND EDITION of MARY FENWICK'S DAUGHTER. By BEATRICE WHITBY, Author of "The Awakening of Mary Fenwick," "One Reason Why," &c. 3 vols.

"Miss Whitby may be said to have justified her courage in reviving the Fenwick family. Mary's daughter 'Bab' is once more a strong and striking character study.... She exists by thousands, but has seldom been more skillfully manipulated than by Miss Whitby."
Athenaeum.

THE FOOL of DESTINY. By Colin MIDDLETON, Author of "Innes of Blairadam." 3 vols.

THE HUSBAND of ONE WIFE By Mrs. VENN, Author of "Some Married Fellows," &c. 3 vols.

"The theme is a good one, but one requiring delicate handling. Mrs. Venn has treated it excellently, so much so that the interest increases instead of diminishes as she proceeds and the third volume, in our opinion, is much the best of the set. 'The Husband of One Wife' is good work, and its perusal may safely be recommended."
Glasgow Herald.

"'The Husband of One Wife' is an excellent book, in which all healthy-minded novel-readers will find something to interest them."
Dundee Advertiser.

ORCHARD DAMEREL. By Alan ST. AUBYN, Author of "A Fellow of Trinity," &c. 3 vols.

"Taken altogether, the work is the strongest that has come from the author's pen, and does not gain its strength by any abandonment of the peculiar refinement which characterises this writer's books. It is a thoroughly enjoyable story."—Scotsman.

Uniform, each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOVELS BY EDNA LYALL.

DONGVAN: a Modern Englishman.

TO RIGHT the WRONG.

WE TWO.

IN the GOLDEN DAYS.

KNIGHT ERRANT.

WON BY WAITING.

A HARDY NORSEMAN.

A SELECTION FROM

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY.

EACH IN A SINGLE VOLUME, PRICE 5s.

BY THE AUTHOR of "JOHN HALIFAX."

JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN.

A WOMAN'S THOUGHTS ABOUT WOMEN.

A LIFE for a LIFE.

NOTHING NEW.

MISTRESS and MAID.

THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM.

CHRISTIAN'S MISTAKE.

A NOBLE LIFE.

HANNAH.

THE UNKIND WORD.

A BRAVE LADY.

STUDIES from LIFE.

YOUNG MRS. JARDINE.

BY THE AUTHOR of "SAM SLICK."

NATURE and HUMAN NATURE.

WISE SAWS and MODERN INSTANCES.

THE OLD JUDGE; or, Life in a Colony.

TRAITS of AMERICAN HUMOUR.

The AMERICANS at HOME.

BY DR. GEORGE MAC DONALD.

DAVID ELGINBROD.

ROBERT FALCONER.

ALICE FORBES.

SIR GIBBIE.

BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

ADAM GRAEME.

LAIRD of NORLAW.

AGNES.

LIFE of IRVING.

A ROSE in JUNE.

PHEBE, JUNIOR.

IT WAS A LOVER AND HIS LASS.

LONDON: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES.

SARAH: a Survival. By Sydney CHRISTIAN, Author of "Lydia." 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.

"A whole volume as well as a graceful book, full of charming and whimsical touches; and written with a decided distinction of style."—Athenaeum.

"It is a surprise and a refreshment in these days of morbid and melancholy heroines to meet with one so well content with life, of so cheerful a countenance, as is the young lady who gives her name to Sydney Christian's novel, 'Sarah.' The author has the gift of presentation, his characters stand out clearly, his descriptive passages have brilliant limpidity of effect; the talk throughout is spontaneous.... The charm of freshness is on the book."—Daily News.

"At last we have a story of a woman and of womanhood which may be read with satisfaction and pleasure. 'Sarah: a Survival,' by Sydney Christian, is a remarkable work in every genre. It is rarely original and not eccentric, it is thoughtful and not pretentious, it is interesting as a narrative and extremely clever as a study of character, it is written in admirable English, and abounds in humour of a quiet, delectable kind. 'Sarah' is a gem; so is her old uncle Dan, who rebukes his prim and proper sister Rachel by observing that he is 'thankful to say it never enters Sarah's head to be grateful.'"—World.

A BAIREUTH PILGRIMAGE. By EDITH E. COTTELL. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.

"A story that will unquestionably interest a large circle of readers."—Scotsman.

"The author gives a very pleasant and fanciful turn to the refined and touching love story, of which she makes an encircling garland of roses and laurels for the figure of Wagner."—World.

FIRE ISLAND. By George Manville FENN, Author of "The Black Bar," &c. Numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The book is always lively and amusing."—Scotsman.

THE EMIGRANT SHIP. By W. Clark RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," &c. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The story is capably told, and full of fresh interest."—Athenaeum.

AMONG THE MOORS:

Sketches of Oriental Life.

By G. MONTSARD, Author of "In Egypt," &c.

Superbly Illustrated. Royal 8vo, cloth, 16s.

LARGE-PAPER EDITION. strictly limited to 100 copies, each numbered and signed by the Author, printed on Japanese vellum, THREE GUINEAS each, net.

"A series of infinitely more vivid and brilliant pictures of Morocco than are to be found in sober and solid works on that dilapidated and crumbling bulwark of Islam."—Scotsman.

TRAVELS AMONGST AMERICAN

INDIANS: their Ancient Earthworks and Temples. By Vice-Admiral LINDESAY BRINE (Member of Council of the Royal Geographical and Hakluyt Societies), Author of "The Taiping Rebellion in China: a Narrative of its Rise and Progress." With 2 Maps, 8 Plans, 25 Full-page and 12 Text Cuts. 1 vol., demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"A series of infinitely more vivid and brilliant pictures of Morocco than are to be found in sober and solid works on that dilapidated and crumbling bulwark of Islam."—Scotsman.

REMINISCENCES of an INDIAN

POLICE OFFICIAL. By T. C. ARTHUR. Fully Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

"We have to thank Mr. Arthur for a very interesting and informing book, the illustrations to which are instinct with life and reality."—Daily Chronicle.

"Many interesting stories illustrative of crime and its punishment in India are recorded in Mr. Arthur's book.... He concludes his narrative chapters with an urgent plea for police reform in India, based upon the warnings given by recent occurrences of a very disquieting character."—Times.

OUR ENGLISH COUSINS.

By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

FEDERAL BRITAIN; or, Unity and

Federation of the Empire. By F. P. DE LABILLIERE, Fellow of the Royal Colonial Institute, and Author of "The Early History of the Colony of Victoria." With Chapter on "Imperial Defence," by Sir GEO. S. CLARKE, B.E., K.C.M.G. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Mr. Labilliere's book is an extremely useful and interesting contribution to a great subject that appeals powerfully to the imagination and the patriotic sentiment of us all, whether in the 'old country' or scattered over the world."—Daily News.
"There can be no doubt as to the weight and value of Mr. Labilliere's work, which should be studied attentively by any inquirer desirous of forming an opinion upon the great subjects of the feasibility and prospects of a federation of the British Empire."—Mr. H. RIDA HAGOAG in African Review.

DANTE G. ROSSETTI and the PRE-RAPHAELITE MOVEMENT. By ESTHER WOOD. With 8 Photogravure Reproductions of Rossetti's Paintings. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

"Regarded as an appreciation of the wider significance of the pre-Raphaelite movement, and a critical account of Rossetti's art and poetry, her book is a fresh and luminous contribution to the literature of the subject. The photogravures of Rossetti's pictures in themselves make the book one to be coveted by all who are interested in art."—Times.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, JUNE 16, 1894.

No. 1154, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Shakspeare Studies and Other Essays. By the late Thomas Spencer Baynes. With a Biographical Preface by Prof. Lewis Campbell. (Longmans.)

THIS must, we fear, be pronounced to be, in more ways than one, a disappointing book. Disappointment, indeed, may be said to lurk within the very title itself, which is so worded as to convey quite a false impression as to the contents. On turning over the pages, we find that, over and above the four Shakspeare studies collected and reprinted by the editor, the volume contains but one other essay—viz., a critical review of Wedgwood's Dictionary of English Etymology and of Latham's Edition of Johnson's Dictionary, reprinted from the Edinburgh Review of July, 1868. Why, then, miscall it "Shakspeare Studies and Other Essays"? It is so named and described, not only in Messrs. Longmans' announcement-lists, but also on its own half title-page, and even in the legend imprinted upon the back of the cover—the place of all others, presumably, where one may fairly look to find the accurate designation and proper title of a book, if it is to be found anywhere. This absurd incongruity of name to contents is nowhere noticed or explained; but on the title-page itself the actual extent and true character of the contents are at length correctly defined, the title running: "Shakspeare Studies and Essay on English Dictionaries." The anomaly of a twofold title is doubtless due to the vacillation of the editor, who, when dealing with his material, probably aimed at making such a selection as would serve at once as a memorial of the late Prof. Spencer Baynes, and as an attractive volume of "Studies" for the delectation of the crowd; and thus became distracted between the necessity of meeting the demands of a certain limited class—the professor's friends and late pupils—and the desire of producing a book which should prove acceptable to the ordinary reader.

For the purposes of a memorial, the book before us answers well enough. The selection of essays is judicious and appropriate. The two themes of which they treat—namely, (1) Shakspeare, and (2) the Vocabulary and Etymology of the English Language, are well known to have occupied a foremost place among the many subjects in which Prof. Baynes specially interested himself, and on which he must have frequently lectured and conversed both at St. Andrews and elsewhere. There can be no doubt, therefore, that, as the editor puts it, the Professor's old pupils will recognise in many parts of this volume "the sound of a voice that is still." If, however, we view the book in the light of a candidate for admission to our permanent library, and, taking it on its own merits, judge it simply and solely according to its intrinsic worth as literature, then serious exception must, we fear, be taken to more than one item of the contents. The "Essay on English Dictionaries," for instance, is really a piece of quite venerable antiquity, taking us back, over more than a quarter of a century, to the dim twilight of etymology, when as yet Skeat's Dictionary had not arisen to dispel the darkness, and men still stumbled about in pursuit of the lights (too often delusive) displayed by that unintending will-o'-the-wisp, Hensleigh Wedgwood. Everything of the slightest value in this essay has, it is needless to say, been silently incorporated in the various Dictionaries that have been produced in the long interval since its first appearance in the Edinburgh Review of July, 1868; nor can it be pretended that the late Professor's style, either here or elsewhere, is of so distinguished an excellence as, independently of its subject-matter, to impart the character of permanence to his literary work. Again, for reasons which will presently appear, the article on "Shakspeare's Glossaries" ought to have been either wholly suppressed, or else at least most carefully revised. And, lastly, one cannot but deplore the prodigal consumption of space—amounting to more than one-third of the entire volume—involved in reprinting the "Shakspeare" article from the Encyclopædia Britannica, a work to be found in every public and in many a private library, and thus practically within the reach of every student of Shakspeare. Had this enormously long and somewhat ponderous essay been suppressed, and its place filled up with the studies on "Chaucer" and "Shelley" contributed by Prof. Baynes to the Edinburgh Review of 1870-71, or with one or two of his philosophical writings (e.g., his review of Darwin's Expression of the Emotions, or his article on Fraser's Berkeley), the attractiveness of the volume before us would, we venture to assert, have been enhanced a hundredfold.

The contents, however, being what they are, let us, instead of fault-finding, endeavour to profit by such elements of value as they possess. Prof. Baynes's most important contributions to Shaksperian scholarship will unquestionably be found neither in the Encyclopædia Essay nor in the rambling and discursive papers reprinted from Fraser under the title "What Shakspeare Learned at School"; but in two articles written by him for the Edinburgh Review—viz., one on "Shaksperian Glossaries," published in July, 1869, and a second on "New Shaksperian Interpretations," published in October, 1872—both here reprinted at length. They contain much that is both novel and valuable; but it must be admitted that certain of the interpretations put forward in them (notably that offered of Ophelia's words: "You must wear your rue with a difference") are strained and far fetched to an absurd degree, while at least one (viz., that proposed for the troublesome passage in Macbeth, Act III., Scene 6., line 8: "Who cannot want the thought how monstrous It was for Malcolm," &c. See pp. 274-276) implies an inability to seize the precise point, to penetrate to and grasp the very gist and essence of the difficulty under discussion, which can only be characterised as sheer obtuseness. The weight of the earlier article, moreover, is seriously impaired by the petulant and absolutely unsupported attack, conceived in the true Jeffrey vein, which Prof. Baynes was ill-advised enough to make upon the then recently published Cambridge text. The reproduction of this sample of critical irresponsibility seems to us, we confess, nothing short of a grave disservice—a serious, though of course unintended, wrong—to the dead man's memory.

But to proceed. Prof. Baynes, perceiving that the works of Shakspeare abound in allusions to various field sports, conceived the happy plan of systematically studying the chief of these—hunting and hawking—in the popular manuals of the day, with the view of obtaining a clue to the meaning of certain passages hitherto obscure or wholly unintelligible. This vein he worked with excellent results, though, as was not unnatural, his zeal ran away with him at times, leading him to see references to sport where to the eye of the sober critic none such exist (see especially his remarks on Coriolanus, IV. v. 238, pp. 307-312). One of the happiest instances of his skill as an emender of the text is that exhibited in dealing with a much-disputed passage in Measure for Measure, III. i. 89, where Isabella, addressing Claudio, says of Angelo:

"This outward-sainted deputy,
Whose settled visage and deliberate word
Nips youth i' the head, and follies doth emmew
As falcon doth the fowl, is yet a devil!"—

Here there can be no doubt that "emmew" is not the word that Shakspeare wrote. To "emmew" is to shut up, to keep close, to keep mewed up: this meaning does not suit the context; nor do falcons emmew fowls. The sense here required is "sternly check," "drive back," "rigorously repress"; and as it is obvious that follies must first manifest themselves before they can be thus tightly curbed, repressed and put down with a high hand, the word "emmew," which means "shut up" or "keep close," is, as we have already said, plainly inappropriate. The requisite sense is satisfactorily furnished by the word "enew," which Prof. Baynes* proposes to read here instead of "emmew," and of which he has taken the pains to elucidate both the origin and the technical signification. The verb "to anew" (or, as it was sometimes written, enneue, or ineaw) comes from the Norman-French eneuer, which was employed as a technical term in connexion with two widely different arts: namely, the * Keightley also (Shakspeare Expositor) proposed enew, on the strength of a single passage from Nash's Quaternio. But as he makes no attempt to explain the meaning of the word (of which, indeed, he appears to have been ignorant), the credit of discovering and establishing the new reading must be given to Prof. Baynes, who had hit upon it long before he knew of Keightley's suggestion.

art of cloth-weaving, and the art of aquatic falconry. Its etymology is clear from the form in which it appears in Cotgrave—eneauer (i.e., en-eau-er, "to place or set in water," or "to drive into the water"). As employed by the cloth-weavers, it seems to have meant "to place, or steep [cloth] in water," presumably for the purpose of thoroughly shrinking the fabric. Godefroy, whose Dictionnaire de L'ancienne Langue Française du IX<sup>e</sup> au XVI<sup>e</sup> siècle was not accessible for reference when Prof. Baynes' articles were written, gives an instance of the use of eneuer in this sense from the Statuts de Richard III., an. I.:—"Que nul tondeur n'autre persone quele quo soit tondo ne cancellé ascuns draps sinon le drap soit avant pleynement eneué sur peine de forfait XI. s." From the same source Godefroy quotes the corresponding substantive, eneu-ancee, which Prof. Baynes also quotes from Kelham's Norman Dictionary. The use of the word eneuer, however, in this sense seems to have been comparatively rare. On the other hand, the English derivative is frequently used in connexion with the sport of falconry, when it serves to denote the action of the hawk in driving the waterfowl back into the water, after it has been previously "landed," i.e., forced to rise from its floating bed by means of dogs and beaters, and driven in the direction of the land. The wild fowl, when she perceives the hawk about to stoop, instinctively makes for the water again, where she will be safe at least from her winged enemy. If she succeeds in reaching the water before the hawk can stoop and seize her, she is said to be enewed: the hawk has enewed the fowl, i.e., forced it back to the water, from which it will have to be "landed" over again before the hawk can stoop and seize it. "The fowl," writes Prof. Baynes, "was often enewed once or twice before it was landed effectively enough for the final swoop." Drayton (Polyolbion, Song 20) gives a glowing description of this sport (technically known as "the flight at the brook") from which we cannot refrain from quoting the following lines:

"Then making to the flood, to force the fowls to rise,
The fierce and angry hawks, down thrilling from the skies,
Make sundry cancellers [i.e., zig-zags] ere they the fowl can reach,
Which then to save their lives their wings do lively stretch.
But when the whizzing bells the silent air do cleave,
And that their greatest speed them vainly do deceive,
And the sharp, cruel hawks they at their backs do view,
Themselves for very fear they instantly ineaw.*
The hawks get up again into their former place,
And ranging here and there, in that their airy race;
Still as the fearful fowls attempt to 'scape away,
With many a stooping brave, them in again they lay.
But when the falconers take their hawking-poles in hand,
And, crossing of the brook, do put it [the fowl] over land—
The hawk gives it a souse, that makes it to rebound,
Well near the height of man, sometimes above the ground."

* I.e., "lay themselves again in the water."

Both the origin and the technical meaning of the verb to enew, therefore, are perfectly clear. With reference to its meaning in the speech of Isabella quoted above, Prof. Baynes observes:

"From its primary sense it seems to have acquired the secondary signification of "to check," "to drive back," and "relentlessly pursue." It would thus be naturally applied to a policy (such as Angelo's) of extreme and vindictive severity. The imagery is that of . . . despotic power in the person of the "outward-sainted deputy" pursuing its victims with reiterated strokes, and allowing them little chance of ultimate escape."

There are many other obscure and disputed passages (as for instance, "We coted them on the way," "Thy banks with pioned and twilled brims," and "Balk logic with acquaintance that you have") on which Prof. Baynes has succeeded in throwing light. On the other hand, his suggested interpretations must sometimes be received with caution. Thus, he is certainly wrong when he attempts to assign to the word enseamed (Hamlet, III., iv., 92) a more recondite meaning than that usually given to it ("greasy"); nor will he, we suspect, find many to follow him in detecting a reference to hawking either in the line—

"And on thy blade and dudgeon gouts of blood"— from Macbeth, or in the line—

"I'll canvass thee in thy broad cardinal's hat"—from Henry VI., Part I. (I., iii, 36). The fact is, Prof. Baynes kept a hobby, and we all know that a hobby is apt at times to get the bit between his teeth and carry his rider beyond all reasonable bounds. Nevertheless, after deducting the hobbyhorical element in this volume, there remains quite enough of sterling value to entitle its author to an honourable place among those who have laboured to elucidate the text of the myriad-minded dramatist—a fairer guerdon, surely, than that bestowed by fate upon the Dorotheus he tells us of, whose fame rests upon the fact that he spent the whole of his life in the endeavour to ascertain the meaning of a single word in Homer!

T. HUTCHINSON.

Town Life in the Fifteenth Century. By Mrs. J. R. Green. In 2 vols. (Macmillans.)

THE story of the English boroughs has yet to be written, but in these interesting volumes Mrs. Green has made a very substantial contribution to it. Urged to undertake it by one who must have known better than any one else her qualifications for the task, she seems to us to have fully justified her husband's high opinion. Every page gives proof of careful research, skilful arrangement of facts, and felicitous treatment. She knows the difficulties of her subject—and they can scarcely be overestimated—but she possesses sufficient enthusiasm to carry both herself and her readers through them. Perhaps her conclusions are sometimes too large and her statements too sweeping. For instance, she tells us that "a journey through any part of the country to-day is enough to show us how ruthlessly the men of the fifteenth century swept away the parish churches which their fathers had built in the fourteenth century, to replace them with the big, bare fabrics where size and ostentation too often did service for beauty, and in the building of which prosperous burghers gave more conspicuous proof of wealth and lavish generosity than of taste and feeling."

Without being indiscriminate admirers of Perpendicular work, we can yet see some beauty in the style; and it is unfair to suggest that the "restorers" in the fifteenth century were more "ruthless" than those of any other age—including our own. As a matter of fact, many of the most conspicuous buildings to which the above remarks might apply—e.g., St. Michael's, Coventry—belong to the fourteenth century; while "a journey through any part of" Somersetshire is enough to show us how "excellently" the architects of the fifteenth century could deal at least with church towers.

These, however, are details. Mrs. Green's book, as a whole, fulfils its purpose. It gives us clear and comprehensive views of what English town life was in the fifteenth century, and how the boroughs acquired, after many a struggle, their freedom, power, and privileges. It draws largely from the mine of wealth which the Historical MSS. Commission has opened up, and from local records, of which the true value is only now beginning to be appreciated. It will stimulate research, and will be read with interest not only by students of the past, but by all to whom the industrial problems of the present day are a matter of concern.

Mrs. Green has chosen the fifteenth century for her inquiry into English town life, because that period saw the transformation of England from "a purely agricultural country, with its scattered villages of dependent tillers of the soil. . . into a land of industrial town communities, where agricultural interests are almost forgotten in the summing up of the national wealth." Of course, many of our boroughs are of much earlier date, and can claim to have enjoyed an independent municipal system from the time of Henry I.; but it was not until the middle of the fourteenth century that wealth began to flow into them, through the development of commercial activity, the increase of population, and the acquisition of privileges. Then, towns were rebuilt, churches and other public buildings were erected;

"Corporations, instinct with municipal pride, built Common Halls, set up stately crosses in the market-place such as we still see at Winchester or Marlborough, paved the streets or provided new water-supply for the growing population."

And this spirit of enterprise was not confined to corporations. Individual citizens employed their wealth upon public objects—to repair the walls, to bridge the river, to drain the town, to found the grammar school, to buy a charter of larger rights and privileges. Hand in hand with commercial activity went municipal self-government. The townspeople did not look to the state for aid, nor would they brook interference from without. They took their part in the duties and responsibilities of town life, and were by no means indisposed to join in its gaieties also. Boroughs had their minstrels and players, and in some cases it would seem their particular play, which was acted in the town hall or churchyard on stated occasions. The Passion Play at Ammergau (which, of course, is a survival of the mediæval dramas) yields in point of length to a certain play, entitled "From the Beginning of the World," which was acted in 1411 at the Skinners' Hall in London, and lasted seven days continuously. The festivals, indeed, became after awhile too burdensome for some of the towns; and the craftsmen belonging to the poorer guilds endeavoured to be released from the obligation to maintain a pageantry unsuited to the times:

"Long before the Reformation, and even when as yet no Puritan principles had been imported into the matter, the gaiety of the towns was already sobered by the pressure of business and the increase of the class of depressed workers. It was not before the fanaticism of religion, but before the coming in of new forms of poverty and of bondage, that the old games and pageants lost their lustre and faded out of existence, save where a mockery of life was preserved to them by compulsion of the town authorities."

But for a considerable period town life, with its comforts and pleasures, its opportunities for gaining wealth and social distinction, satisfied all classes of the community. Its inherent defect was not obvious at first—that defect being the strictly local, limited, and narrow temper which it fostered. The larger patriotism, which looks at the welfare of the nation rather than of the individual community, had no place there. Instead of confederation with other towns, there was isolation and jealousy; and thus, when the Tudor kings asserted their absolute supremacy, and demanded that their personal will should at whatever cost be carried out, the boroughs found themselves powerless to resist. Municipal independence was paralysed, privileges and liberties curtailed, corporate wealth reduced, and the individual life of the borough lost most of its significance and importance. Looking forward as well as backward, Mrs. Green concludes her task with the remark:

"The history of the borough as schools in which the new middle-class received its training for service in the field of national politics, and as the laboratories in which they made their most fruitful experiments in administration, ends before the close of the fifteenth century. It may be that, as the working class in its turn rises to take its place alongside of its predecessors on the stage of public affairs, the towns will again become centres of interest in the national story, as the workshops of an enlarged political science."

Our notice of these volumes would be very inadequate if it merely pointed out their general scope. We must, in bare justice to the authoress, call attention to the infinite variety of information, culled from many obscure sources, with which the text and copious footnotes are filled. No two towns, as Mrs. Green is well aware, exhibited the same social, municipal, and industrial features. She has, therefore, chosen (though her choice has been limited by the materials at command) certain typical boroughs, of which the most conspicuous are Bristol, Coventry, Exeter, Lynn, Norwich, Nottingham, Southampton, and the Cinque Ports. In each instance the development of trade, with its separate guilds, the growth of municipal institutions, and the defence of privileges against the encroachments of the church or the neighbouring lords, afford her abundant opportunity for employing the stores of special knowledge she has accumulated. A bright and lively style, a sense of humour and a genuine love of research, are obvious merits in an authoress. Mrs. Green has these, and, in addition, an unusual measure of literary self-control. She is never tempted away from her subject. Thus, Agincourt, Towton, and Bosworth are left unnoticed, while the dispute between the Town Clerk and the Bishop of Exeter is chronicled at length. She finds more to say of Henry VII.—"the first sovereign of the modern pattern who ruled over Englishmen"—than of all the monarchs of the rival Houses of York and Lancaster, with the conventional glory that attaches to them. Having begun her work so well, we sincerely hope that she may complete it with equal success.

CHARLES J. ROBINSON.

Santa Teresa; being some Account of her Life and Times, together with some Pages from the History of the Last Great Reform in the Religious Orders. By Gabriella Cunningham Graham. In 2 vols. (A. & C. Black.)

THIS biography of Santa Teresa, by Mrs. Cunningham Graham, like Mr. Cotter Morison's Life of St. Bernard, is written by one who has a merely intellectual sympathy with her subject. In such works we may find very much to admire, we may learn from them, we may acknowledge to the full the literary skill and the historical insight of the author, we may be able to praise without reserve their industry, their enthusiasm, their patient research, their knowledge of the topography, their perfect acquaintance with all the environment of the personage depicted. All this we find in the Life of Santa Teresa by Mrs. Cunningham Graham. And yet, for want of full sympathy with those qualities which distinguish Santa Teresa from other women, which mark her off as something distinct from others—the want of full sympathy in this respect makes us rise from the perusal of this biography, excellent as it is as a work of literature, with feelings of dissatisfaction, and with a doubt whether, after all Mrs. Graham's skill and care, we have here presented unto us the true Santa Teresa at all.

We have no wish to depreciate the excellence of Mrs. Graham's work from her own stand-point. She has evidently a good knowledge of Spanish; she has studied carefully Teresa's life in her autobiography, her letters, and other writings; she has read the best biographies in Spanish, both those by contemporaries and by later writers; she skilfully disentangles the additions to the earlier narratives, and judiciously weighs their value. She knows too, in detail, which is far more rare, the country in which Santa Teresa lived, the towns, the houses in which she dwelt; she has followed her on her journeys, visited the sites of the convents which she founded, nay, even the abodes of her relatives. Her local colouring is exact: she gives us exquisite verbal photographs of that table land of Castille, with its burning summer heat, and its sharp winter cold, and snow, and rain; all the discomforts of travel there in the sixteenth century are vividly brought before us. The characters of the contemporaries of Santa Teresa, of the men and women whom she had to deal with, her helpers or opponents, are admirably sketched in. Praise is especially due for the way in which, amid so much that repels her, Mrs. Graham yet sees the conscientious piety, amid all their intolerance and merciless severity, of such men as Philip II. and Fernando of Toledo, Duke of Alba. We grant all this and more, unreservedly; and yet there still remains the note throughout which prevents us from giving full and unqualified acceptance to these volumes as a true and complete account of Santa Teresa.

What is lacking? Mrs. Graham insists that the pre-eminent excellence of her portraiture is that she has drawn Teresa the woman not Teresa the mystic and the saint. She has depicted the clever, witty, merry, business-like Spanish woman, able to hold her own, by insight into character, by power of using others and moulding them to her will, with the greatest of her time: equal to them in business capacity, superior in persevering energy, in valiance of heart and true courage. She treats her mysticism, and what she calls her sanctity, as if, instead of being the chief source of these qualities, it were that which alloyed and almost spoiled them all. The one literary defect in these volumes is the way in which Mrs. Graham, by her perpetual asides to the reader, continually thrusts herself between him and Santa Teresa: and this with a teasing repetition, not only of the sense, but of the very word and phrase. The frame of the picture is admirably moulded, the canvas is well prepared, the accessories are all correct; but, when we look at the portrait, instead of Santa Teresa, we get only a composite photograph of Santa Teresa and of Mrs. Cunningham Graham.

Am I too severe in writing thus? What is Santa Teresa's chief characteristic, her real title to fame? Is it not her mysticism, the intensity of her religious feeling, the struggle after holiness, her devotion to what she believed concerned the honour of her Lord. You cannot sever this from her life: it is the basis of her character, the beating of its pulse and heart. No enthusiasm for her in other respects, no philanthropic talk about the benefit of monasteries to the poor, can make up for want of perception in this respect. One who writes of Teresa's "thirsting for Divine Love" as "a false and fallacious dream—a dream as unreal as Christianity itself"; who "casts down the gauntlet, not for dogma, but fearlessly in the face of it, for abstract Right and abstract Reason, as being the highest ends Humanity can aim at"; who speaks of, and evidently feels, that "an abyss rolls between our thoughts" and hers; to whom the things that were of supremest interest to Santa Teresa "are but the fading symbols of faith, and leave us supremely indifferent"; who deems that "humanity and sanctity are sworn foes"; who boasts, "I have left it to others to paint a false picture [why false?] of the enraptured mystic"; who exclaims, "There will be no more saints"—is not such an one self-condemned in attempting to write the life of a mystic and a saint?

Let us ask: What is mysticism? Who is a mystic? Mysticism does not belong to any one religion: it exists in all, or almost all, religions, or even with no religion at all; it flourishes as much in Buddhism and in Mahommedanism as in Christianity; it has no inseparable connexion with morality; mystics are not thereby better moral characters than other men; and some of the mystic sects have been distinguished by their aberrations from morality. Mysticism does not hinder worldly wisdom, nor practical shrewdness in business; nay, the most mystic among the Protestant sects, the Friends, are known in both hemispheres for their aptitude in this respect. The very aloofness, the detachment from the world that mysticism gives, is often a vantage ground in dealing with the world. It was not in spite of, but because of, her mysticism, that Teresa was so good a woman of business: that she kept her head so cool, and had so clear an insight into the character of those with whom she had to deal. Lookers-on see more than players. What Shelley's religion was I do not know, his morality was certainly not better than that of other men; yet his lines:

"The One remains, the many change and pass;
Heaven's light for ever shines; Earth's shadows fly;
Life, like a dome of many-coloured glass,
Stains the white radiance of Eternity,
Until Death tramples it to fragments:"

which may seem a mere poetical conceit to many, thrill the heart of the mystic, as the sounds of lovely music thrill the ear that can respond to it, as the form and colouring of Raphael or of Titian, of Claude or of Turner, enrapture one who has an eye for form or colour, and dwell with him as a possession for ever. No assertion however strong, by those who have no ear for music nor eye for colour, no shouts of the musically deaf or of the colour-blind, will ever convince one who has the ear to hear and the eye to see that his delight in these things is only fancied and unreal. So it is with mysticism: they who know it not may iterate with multitudinous and strident cry, that the things which are seen are the only things real, the unseen is but a dream; that the transient is the true, the lasting is the false; the perishable, the mortal are all that we can trust, the imperishable, the immortal, the eternal are but a deceit; that all knowledge comes through the senses to the intellect, there is no other avenue; by weight, and measure, and experiment alone can we know, all else is unknowable; the spiritual, the evidences of the spirit and of faith, are but vague and empty conceits, that all experience of it is but delusion; that to devote oneself in loyalty to, to set one's supreme affections on, a thing or Being of a world unseen is inexpressible folly, the vainest of all vanities. The mystic hears all this, and sadly smiles, and lives his inner life apart.

To come nearer earth—is it true that "there will be no more saints," i.e. after Santa Teresa's time: that such a life as hers can never be lived again? Granted, for a moment, that the current of the age is as Mrs. Graham asserts it to be; yet, is there not a very powerful eddy counter to this current? And is it not almost as unscientific and unphilosophical to ignore the existence of this eddy, as to deny the force of the main stream? There have been as many beatifications and canonisations in this latter part of the nineteenth century as in any previous age; there are more preparing still. Fresh religious orders have been founded in this century, and they have spread far more quickly and more widely than Teresa's reform did in her lifetime. There are far more living her life now than there were in the sixteenth century; there are those who emulate her still, and who need but a little time to be entitled saints. La Salette and Lourdes, and the pilgrimages to Rome, are as much facts of the nineteenth century as Positivism and the worship of humanity. The proportion of those who devote themselves to a (technically) religious life is greater now, in France at least, than it was before the Revolution—"of 10,000 women in 1789, 28, 'we are told,' were nuns; in 1866, 45; in 1787, 67"—and still more so in England. The Song of Songs, with its mystic meanings, inspires the verse of Señor Balart now, as it did the verse of Santa Teresa and of St. Juan de la Cruz, and with almost equal tenderness and grace.

I had marked many passages in these volumes for comment, far more frequently for approving comment, a few only for slips in style or verbal errors; but I have dwelt too long on general considerations, and must close. The very elliptical style of Santa Teresa is not easy to translate; but Mrs. Graham's versions are admirable. For the general historian, for reproduction of the environment, for enthusiastic appreciation of one side of Santa Teresa's character, as a vivid personal narrative, these volumes will have a lasting value. They are highly creditable to the literary skill of the writer; they can never be overlooked among her biographies. Only they will not satisfy those to whom, with all her faults, and, above all else, Santa Teresa is the mystic and the saint: the true lover, the ardent, if mistaken, follower of Him whom she even dared to call her Spouse.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

Some Memories of Books, Authors, and Events.
By James Bertram. (Constable.)

MR. BERTRAM'S posthumous volume of reminiscences is light and entertaining, and it has a pleasant literary flavour; but the sketch of the writer's life given in the introductory pages lead us to expect something a little more substantial than what we actually get.

James Glass Bertram was born in 1824, at the little border village of Tillmouth, and at the age of thirteen was apprenticed to Mr. Tait, the proprietor of the once famous Tait's Edinburgh Magazine. Here he rose to the position of managing clerk and cashier; but it is clear that he had strong Bohemian instincts, for he abandoned this position of commonplace respectability and comfort to go upon the stage. Three years' experience of the boards—the harvest of which he gathered in a book entitled Glimpses of Real Life—convinced him that histrionics could not be relied upon to provide bread and cheese. He then went into business as bookseller and newsagent, but here again he was unsuccessful; and so, like many others, he drifted through the strait of miscellaneous failure into the choppy sea of literature and journalism. He contributed to Chambers's Journal and Hogg's Instructor; and in 1855 became editor, and afterwards proprietor, of the North Briton, an enterprising journal which was, we read, "the first newspaper to introduce the serial story as a regular part of its contents, and the first to publish 'interviews.'" Brief connexions, editorial and financial, with other journals were not specially successful. But in 1865 he became widely known by his admirable book, The Harvest of the Sea, in which he embodied the wide information acquired by visits to all the principal centres of the fishing industry both in Great Britain and on the continent. None of his subsequent works were published under his own name. As the "Rev. W. M. Cooper, B.A.," he compiled for Camden Hotten that well-known book, A History of the Rod; as "Ellangowan" he produced The Out-door Sports of Scotland and a volume of Sporting Anecdotes; and "Louis Henry Curzon" was the pseudonym on the title pages of The Blue Ribbon of the Turf and A Mirror of the Turf, this last book appearing shortly after the death of the author, which took place in March, 1892.

So varied a life ought to have provided material for a record with some solidity of interest, a book of the "cut and come again" order; but, as I have already said, the present volume is decidedly wanting in substance. Looking over the menu, we encounter such appetising items as these: "Mr. Tait and his Literary and Political Friends," "Trade Reminiscences and Sir Walter Scott," "The Edinburgh Review," "William and Robert Chambers," "The Trade" in Edinburgh, and "Celebrities and Characters." We sit down eager at so apparently well-spread a table; but, when we rise, we feel that the repast, though undoubtedly palatable, has been on the whole somewhat unsatisfying. Such names as those of Brougham, Jeffrey, Lockhart, Aytoun, and Hogg, appear and re-appear in Mr. Bertram's pages; but we learn little about any of these distinguished persons that we are interested in learning, or that we did not know before. Of course in the case of some men—Sir Walter Scott for example—Mr. Bertram inevitably wrote from hearsay knowledge; but even when writing of such men as William and Robert Chambers, with whom he must have been on terms of some intimacy, he has astonishingly little to tell that has not been told either by the Chamberses themselves or by Mr. Alexander Ireland in his account of that once famous book, Vestiges of the Natural History of Creation.

The most interesting chapters in the volume are those in which Mr. Bertram is most frankly autobiographical, in which he confines himself to his own personal experience, and refrains from that expatiatory gossip at large, indulgence in which was evidently a sore temptation to him. The opening chapter "Prentice Days" gives us a delightful glimpse of some of the conditions of life in the "grey metropolis of the north" rather more than half a century ago; and it serves moreover as a natural and pleasant introduction to the author's reminiscences of the one distinguished man of whom he has some really tangible recollections. Tait's Magazine was a capital periodical in its day—its old volumes are full of good reading—but its great "hit" was made by the publication of the "Sketches of Life and Manners from the Autobiography of an English Opium Eater." The boy apprentice Bertram was often sent with proofs, cheques, or messages to the celebrated contributor, and none of the published recollections of De Quincey are more characteristic than his. Several of them relate to the extraordinary manner in which the author's "copy" used to reach the hands of his publisher.

"Sometimes a young woman would enter the shop in the morning, whilst I was busy sweeping or dusting, and throwing down a roll of paper with an exclamation of 'There!' would rush off as abruptly as she had entered. On examining the roll I would find it addressed in the neatest of handwriting to 'William Tait, Esquire.' On more than one occasion a night policeman arrived early in the afternoon with a similar packet, for which he demanded and received a shilling; a coin destined to be divided into three parts, the packet having passed through as many pairs of hands. 'Who gave you this?' I once heard Mr. Tait ask. 'It was my neighbour, sir, at the North Bridge.' 'And who gave it to him?' 'It was his neighbour, sir.' 'And where did he get it?' 'Oh, he got it from the little man, sir, that makes the fine speeches and lives down yonder, sir,' was the reply."

Some of the fine speeches are given; and it is abundantly clear that they had behind them not merely quaint dignity and surface courtesy, but that genuine kindness which is the politeness of the heart.

"When I had made a few visits to him," writes Mr. Bertram, "Mr. De Quincey was so kind as to take some particular notice of me; and afterwards, when he wrote his Grasmere article about George and Sarah Green (1839), he spoke to me of the subject, and read me a passage from the proof before it appeared in Tait."

It is not every great man who would thus simply put himself on the level of an errand-boy of fifteen. One of the best of the fine speeches was made to a fellow apprentice of Mr. Bertram's. This youth, coming one morning to take down the shutters and open the shop, found himself addressed by the occupant of a hackney-carriage which was standing at the door.

"I am Mr. De Quincey, and I presume that you are one of the young gentlemen who assist

Mr. Tait in conducting his business. I am at the moment much embarrassed for want of a sum of money; the difficulty will not, however, I assure you, be permanent, but it is in the meantime most urgent, and I fancied that even at this early hour I should be able to obtain the required amount by coming here.' George thought he might be wanting a five-pound note at least, so he said to him anxiously, 'How much do you require, Mr. De Quincey?' 'You see, young sir, in arriving at my journey's end I shall require to pay the coachman his fare, including a small gratuity to himself, not less than three shillings in all, and having but half-a-crown in my pocket, I am anxious to be accommodated with the loan of sixpence.' Not less astonished than relieved, George handed the coin to him at once, and after thanking his benefactor profusely for his great politeness, Mr. De Quincey drove off."

Of the non-literary chapters of Mr. Bertram's book, the best is that devoted to the Edinburgh hospitalities of sixty years ago. It was a time when diners-out were many, when dinner-givers were not few, and when some at any rate of the materials for their common delectation were sold at prices which must rouse the envy of the Edinburgh hosts of to-day. A hare cost less than eighteenpence, the price of poultry was in proportion, a turbot of no mean size was to be got for a shilling, a "puir saxpence" would provide a good big lobster for the sauce, and oysters at sevenpence for a "fish-wife's hunder" (120) were to be had from a barrow in every Edinburgh street. If, however, there was plenty, there was also a certain lack of variety. When Muirhead, the game-dealer, first offered snipe for sale in Edinburgh, Mr. Bertram tells us that no one dared to buy, but crowds gazed at the "lang-nebbit" novelties; and a lady who had received a brace of pheasants from England sent them to be stuffed, as her cook assured her that "such bonnie birds couldna' be for eating." Things being so, hosts who wish to be eminent were wont to make a speciality of some cunning "side dish," which gave to their dinners a note of distinction. Mr. Bertram tells how one legal luminary thus made his fame—and kept it.

"In those days it was not illegal to bring away the 'squabs' [young Solon geese] from their nests of the Bass Rock, and one hospitable judge used to treat his guests to these infantine sea fowl, cooked in a manner that rendered them delightful; but the culinary process was never revealed which made the chickens—ordinarily commonplace enough—so succulent and palatable. A brother of the bench, anxious to penetrate the mystery, interviewed the cook, and, slipping a golden coin into her palm, said, 'Tell me, my good woman, how you make that delicious squab curry.' 'Eh, sir,' was the reply, as her fingers closed on the largess, 'I'm no able to tell you that, for his Lordship aye makes it his ainself.'"

This concluding chapter is richer in matter than is both informing and entertaining than any of its predecessors; but anyone who has acquired the fine art of judicious skipping will find the whole book very readable.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

NEW NOVELS.

Henry Standon. By D'Arcy Drew. In 3 vols. (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

The Power of the Past. In 3 vols. By Esme Stuart. (Bentley.)

The Story of a Modern Woman. By Ella Hepworth Dixon. (Heinemann.)

The Rich Miss Riddell. By Dorothea Gerard. (Blackwoods.)

Mr. Sadler's Daughters. By Hugh C. Davidson. (Chatto & Windus.)

James Inwick: Ploughman and Elder. By P. Hay Hunter. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

Tales of the Supernatural. By James Platt, Junr. (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

Cœur-de-Roi. By Charles Foley. (Paris: Perrin.)

MR. D'ARCY DREW'S novel has for a second title, "Love's Debt to Duty." There is not much about this long outstanding debt; nor, for that matter, much about Mr. Henry Standon. He comes and goes, and speaks often, in season and out of season; but he is only one of a crowd of men and women, and his talk is neither more entertaining nor less wearisome than that of the persons in whose company we find him. Henry Standon suggests that the author has made a sudden dash into the writing of fiction, and has thrown into the space of three volumes the accumulated material which might serve as the basis for many books. The novel is crude in more respects than in style. It is badly constructed, it suffers from indiscriminate padding, its personages are often the merest puppets, and there are faults in management—to adopt a stage term—which prove that Mr. (or Miss) D'Arcy Drew has had very little experience. An eminent novelist was once asked by a youngster in the craft: "What must I do to be saved?" He admonished his querist to keep a steady eye upon his hero, upon his heroine, and upon his villain. "Is that all?" inquired the disappointed young man. "Well," went on the great man, "as a matter of fact you needn't bother much about the hero. But keep your eye steadily on the heroine and on the villain." "But," exclaimed the bewildered tyro—when he was interrupted by his companion, who added, with an air of a diplomatist waiving a hotly contested point: "I'll give you a straight tip: you need only keep your eye always on one person—your villain. Never let him out of your sight. He is the surest net by which the reader will be snared. You may play pranks with your heroine: you may give yourself away over and over again with your hero: but if the reader sees you are acting squarely with him in the matter of the villain you will be all right!" Mr. D'Arcy Drew has not mastered this advice, if he has ever heard of it. He introduces us to a promising Mentone villain, and then kills him off as prematurely as if he were loved by the gods. The result is fatal. The reader is loyal to his villain: remove the latter a volume too soon, and no substitute can adequately take his place, not even though he be a baronet without an income but with an awful reputation. Henry Standon is not strengthened by the moral and philosophical reflections so plentifully dispersed through its pages: though there are few so banal as that put into the mouth of Lord Selby—"I would have women remain as they have been, both externally and internally." I have noticed the book at this length, however, as with all its faults and shortcomings it is interesting, and has promise of a kind.

There is something very depressing about Esmé Stuart's new book. The tragedy in which it culminates is so wholly unnecessary, that few readers will fail to see that it is in no way an ordered development, but a purely arbitrary imposition from without. Most of us justify Carlyle's dictum; but, after all, the fools of actual life are blundering rather than blind, are stupid or short-sighted rather than idiotic. If men and women who cared for each other were wont to behave in the senseless fashion of Inez and her husband Basil, life would become intolerable. It ought to be a cardinal rule with novelists, never to introduce an episode based on a misapprehension that in actual life would be practically certain of more or less prompt elucidation. Lovers and sweet-hearts, husbands and wives, parents and children, are too often, in novels, made to act in a way that, in real life, would alienate the sympathies of every sane person. I confess that I for one, though appreciative of the good qualities which characterise The Power of the Past, am quite unmoved by the fate of Neve Quinlan, or even of the lovely but weak-minded Inez, or of her suffering but far from mentally robust husband. But there are those who delight in these stories based upon explicable misunderstandings, and who experience a sad joy in the absence of cakes and ale at the finish. To them I recommend The Power of the Past; the more readily as it is written well and attractively.

No one who reads the Story of a Modern Woman will be likely to gainsay the excellence of its writing and the genuine talent shown by Miss Ella Hepworth Dixon. If, as we have reason to believe, it is a first book, it shows altogether exceptional promise. The story itself is in no way remarkable, and its commonplaceness (which is that of life as most of us know it) and sobriety of atmosphere may repel many of those readers who go to novels for a stimulus analogous to that of the confirmed dram-drinker. It is told with reserve, dignity, grace, and occasionally with power. The two closing chapters have that largeness, whether we say "of touch," "of atmosphere," which we find in the masters only. Miss Ella Hepworth Dixon has learned at a wise school. She knows when to be reticent: when to trust to broad effects. There are few writers who seem to be convinced that evocation is as distinct from description as a photographed landscape from, say, a pastoral by Corot or Rousseau. The author of A Story of a Modern Woman has, by instinct or observation, ascertained this secret, one of the fundamental secrets of art; and she has been able to carry theory into practice. As to "the views without which no novel now seems complete," there are not too many in Miss Hepworth Dixon's story. She takes the sane and reasonable attitude that the relationship of the sexes must be bettered, but that it is no more "a universal cancer" than it is a flawless ordinance. Some readers will wonder if Mary Erle did, after all, choose wisely in her staunch allegiance to what she held to be the right: but most will agree that, even from the standpoint of the mental health to be won from life, she did what was best. She is the one memorable personage in the book. Vincent Hemming is not wholly convincing; and the other characters are vivid rather than vital, though in Mary's brother Jimmie and in the young painter Perry Jackson we are presented with skilfully depicted types. Altogether, A Story of a Modern Woman seems to me one of the best written books which have appeared of late, whether by writers of "the larger latitude" or otherwise.

The author of Reata and joint author of The Waters of Hercules has so accustomed us to stories of Austrian life that one is almost tempted to complain when, as in The Rich Miss Riddell, she breaks new ground. This, of course, is unreasonable; and doubly so in the instance of Miss Dorothea Gerard, who tells even the slightest story with grace and verve, and never fails to introduce us to at least one winsome new acquaintance. The present writer cannot say that he has derived the same amount of pleasure from her latest story as from Reata, a picturesque and vigorous tale which he reviewed in the ACADEMY a year or two ago. But the book cannot fail to win many readers; and it is more than likely that "the rich Miss Riddell," and the happy close of her somewhat commonplace career as a not specially attractive spinster, will be understood and approved by hundreds who would feel slight interest in an Austro-Jewish village girl or a Hungarian squire's daughter.

A suggestion of the footlights is conveyed by Mr. Sadler's Daughters. Mr. Hugh Davidson perhaps meant to write a farcical comedy, and at the last moment changed his mind and turned his material into a story. It is entertaining, of its kind. Mr. Sadler, Poppie, and Vi are people we might meet any day. One reader, however, has no wish to meet them. The "new humour" is apt to be dull when it aims at wit, and depressing when it would be funny; and though Mr. Davidson is not irredeemably a new humorist, he proves again and again that he is not unworthy of that distinction.

Mr. Hay Hunter has done able work in other directions than that to which he has restricted himself in James Inwick. No one uses "the Lallan tongue" with the classic infallibility and aptness of Mr. Robert Louis Stevenson; but though Mr. Barrie and Mr. Crockett indulge in a Doric that is rarely immaculate, their "Scots" is, on the whole, better than that of Mr. Hay Hunter, racy, idiomatic, and often delightfully reminiscent of the Lothians as that is. However, it is the story, and not the quality of the vernacular, that, presumably, is of most moment to the general reader. But of plot, episode, thrilling incident, there is none. Let no one adventure upon this cleverly sketched series of studies from East Lothian village-life unless he be a Scot, familiar with the talk o' Haddinton-awa', and interested profoundly in the question of Disestablishment and in the rights and wrongs of the Established and the Free Kirk.

The six romantic stories, as Mr. Platt, Junr., calls his Tales of the Supernatural, might pass as parodies of the ultra-romantic style, were they not too outrageous even as parodies. The author is wildly, grotesquely funny. "Antlers of Belial, what I feel for his style is unscabbarded naked hate," tempered with hearty laughter at the appalling gibberish here put forward, apparently in all seriousness.

M. Charles Foley is known in France as the writer of four or five fairly successful plays, and as the author of Guerre de Femmes, Bisque-Tout, and two other excellent novels. In Cœur-de-Roi he has written his best book as yet. It unquestionably suggests Les Chénues, of Balzac, but it is none the less an original and charming story. The plot is interesting, the style alert, and the characters life-like and worth knowing. "Cœur-de-Roi" is the sobriquet of the Marquis de Valois, one of the heroic noblemen who withstood the Republicans in the peasant war of La Vendée; but the interest of most readers will centre in the brave and resourceful Florise, a true heroine, and in pretty Yvette. Since Balzac there has been no more vivid and interesting story of the savage internecine warfare waged between the triumphant Republicans and the remnant of militant "aristocrats" who had survived the Revolution. Cœur-de-Roi is a book to be recommended to all who care for what is at once vigorous and thoroughly healthy in contemporary French fiction.

WILLIAM SHARP.

COMEDY AND DRAMA.

The Humours of the Court. By Robert Bridges. (Bell.) We gather from a note at the end of The Humours of the Court that Mr. Robert Bridges has founded his work upon two Spanish comedies, Calderon's "El secreto á voces" and Lope's "El perro del Hortelano," the latter of which Molière also discovered to be useful. Mr. Bridges believes these two comedies to be variations of the same story. The play under notice owes its plot to Calderon, while Lope is drawn upon for the first scene of the third act. At a vital part of his play, Lope became merely farcical; but Mr. Bridges, borrowing incident without translating any of the text, so arranges the final scene that what is probable occurs, not what is preposterous.

The Humours of the Court—we wish the publishers and author had chosen to present it in a handier and more lasting form—is a comedy in three acts, each of which occupies a day. The scene is laid at Belflor, in Italy. Diana, Countess of Belflor, is a whimsical lady who requires those about her to live by the code of fanciful notions she has drawn up. To be preserved from the vapours she needs change; and her secretary, Frederick, is kept busy providing music and other foods for the fickle appetite of his mistress. Richard, Duke of Milan, worships Diana, and, being rebuffed by letters, grows a beard for the purpose of penetrating into Diana's court as a stranger. There he finds his old friend Frederick who loves Laura, the adopted sister of the countess, Laura being already promised to an addle-pated courtier, one St. Nicholas, a noodle and a minor poet. Obviously there is merriment to be obtained from an initial muddle of this kind; and it must be allowed that Mr. Bridges has, on the whole, not been false to his opportunity, though the contrast in merit between the first fifteen pages and the remainder of The Humours of the Court, to our poor thinking, is most striking. We always settle down to Mr. Bridges' work with a delightful anticipation: we are sure of finding beauties, and these we mark with the lead-pencil of approbation. On looking over our reviewed copy we note that underlined passages abound in the first ten pages; between pages 10 and 16 the scorings are fewer; from this point onwards they are scanty indeed. A second perusal of the latter part of the comedy leaves us convinced that Mr. Bridges has not written equally well in his three acts. A servant to Frederick, by name Tristram, is the fool of the piece. He often amuses, but he is not wholly successful; and we are inclined to fancy that there is not quite enough of the bumpkin in him. Hugely perturbed by the freaks of the court he gives vent to some excellent sayings, so much so that we think that Mr. Bridges might have, with advantage, bestowed still more pains on a character that has evidently cost him some labour. It is, perhaps, an oversight that no time is given. We can only guess the period in which the action is supposed to take place by chance indications in the text, such as coaches and lutes. Several times we were struck by the modern sound of the conversation. To come upon "It's all up" was something of a shock. Perhaps Mr. Bridges may have chapter and verse ready for the confounding of the critic who dares to suggest that such a phrase is an anachronism. In a play by Dekker there stands, "It is too-too," yet for long this was supposed to be a saying quite modern. Evidently, then, it is dangerous to dogmatise. This much may be spoken in safety: whether the phrase "It's all up" may be used with any ancient warrant, it were better left out of The Humours of the Court.

All those wise enough to read this comedy will be amused and charmed by the skilful management of the series of accidents which befel the loves of the duke and the secretary. Needless to add that the proper maids were kissed by the proper men. It remains to show some of the lovely work done by Mr. Bridges. When the duke comes to court he says:

"I think I sail

Into the windless haven of my life
To-day with happy omens: as the stir
And sleep-forbidding rattle of the journey
Was like my life till now. Here all is peace:
The still fresh air of this October morning,
With its resigning odours; the rich hues
Wherein the gay leaves revel to their fall;
The deep blue sky; the misty distances,
And splashing fountains. And I thought I heard
A magic service of meandering music
Threading the glades and stealing on the lawns."

The fall of that wonderful epithet "resigning" is strangely beautiful. The whole passage in which the countess and the chief personages of her court discuss why love is called bitter-sweet is profoundly moving, and must be read in its entirety by all those who desire the best in poetry. We will not wrong it by partial quotation, but give in conclusion Richard's song:

"My eyes for beauty pine,
My soul for Godd's grace:
No other hope nor care is mine;
To heaven I turn my face.

"One splendour thence is shed
From all the stars above:
'Tis nam'd when God's name is said,
'Tis love, 'tis heavenly love.

"And every gentle heart,
That burns with true desire,
Is lit from eyes that mirror part
Of that celestial fire."

So much for The Humours of the Court. If the flavour of the literature in it is not novel, the fibre is of that quality which deserves to endure.

Madonna Pia and other Dramas. By Sir Theodore Martin. (Blackwoods.) Only two of the four dramas here collected between covers have been published previously. The tragedy, "Madonna Pia," is very nearly an original work; "King René's Daughter," which has been included in this volume for the excellent reason that a third edition is called for, is from the Danish of Henrik Hertz; and, as might be expected in these triumphant days for foreign goods, the two remaining dramas were made in Germany. "The Camp of Wallenstein" is translated from Schiller; "The Gladiator of Ravenna" is rendered from the original of Friedrich Halm (Baron Von Münch Bellinghausen). We have called "Madonna Pia" a very nearly novel work. Sir Theodore Martin grants that it was suggested by "Malaria," a powerful dramatic sketch which appeared in Paris many years ago. Two acts were prefixed, and to these, with some convenient alteration, the aforesaid sketch was added. We hear this old tale of borrowing from the continent with painful frequency; and we do not, in this instance, bear it any the better than is usual, for by the vigour of the first two acts Sir Theodore Martin proves his capacity to the full. Moving words he has, but not moving invention. However, it is not very logical to grumble. We must express a mitigated thankfulness to "Malaria" for being the parent of two-thirds of "Madonna Pia." The workmanship of this play is forcible and, in parts, brilliant. It does not pause; it is not padded; it is alive from beginning to end. The appeal to the reader, be it stated, is not through a remarkable plot. We have love, jealousy, and poisoned flowers, very old acquaintances by whom we cannot be dissuaded from critically observing in what raiment they are presented to us by the author. The literature captures, not the theme. There is the right atmosphere in the passage following, in which Jacomo and Bertoldo sniff the battle afar off:—

Jac. They were sent out for news, and not to fight.

Why must they meddle? Brawling make-baits! Zounds,
As if there won't be broken heads enough,
But they must hunt for bloody cockscombs too!

Bert. Nay, you're too hard upon the lads. Why, you

Had done the same yourself, had you been there.

Who was it, eh?—was ever first to join,
And last to leave a fray in days of yore?
Whose blade was out, and flashing in the sun,
Ere other men were dreaming of a brawl?
Not Jacomo's, eh, the fiery Jacomo's?
Ha, do you take me, gossip?

Jac. Well, go to!

In sooth I was a mad hot-headed knave
As ever fingered steel. Ah, many's the time
My blessed Marjory, heaven rest her soul!
Has begged and prayed me on her knees to sheathe

My whinger close, and hold my way in peace,
Let rail who might, or take the wall of me,
And I have vowed to be a very lamb—
And meant to keep my word; but what of that?

Next hour, belike, some passing knave would flout

My lord, or me, his man; and presto, hey!
My promises forgot, out flew my sword,
And rang rêveillé round the rascal's ears.

Bert. Rare sport it was to see you! That back stroke

Of yours was never matched before or since.
How the Pietri used to scud before it!

Jac. Like skipjacks as they were!

Bert. Ha! These were times.

My old heart leaps at the remembrance still.
The saints forgive me! but I'd like a bout
With the Pietri yet before I die.

Sir Theodore Martin regrets, as must do all other lovers of literature, that Coleridge should only have translated the second and third parts of Schiller's Trilogy, and left the first part untouched. The excuses made by Coleridge are too well known to need repetition here. Certain it is that, from a financial point of view, what translation of Schiller by Coleridge did appear was a momentous failure. Sir Theodore has now given the world in a permanent form "The Camp of Wallenstein," that most vivid picture of the rough life of soldiers. As a preliminary to "The Piccolomini" and "The Death of Wallenstein," this first part now under notice is surely of extreme importance. Of "The Gladiator of Ravenna" it is enough to say that it is a masterpiece translated by a master. Those who want more than this will not obtain it by purchasing Sir Theodore Martin's latest book.

NORMAN GALE.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & Co., publishers to the India Office, will issue next week a new work by Sir William Hunter, in four volumes, entitled Bengal MS. Records, 1780-1805. This work has been compiled after the fashion of the Calendars of State Papers, published by the officials of the Record Office. It consists of abstracts of more than 14,000 letters, written to the Board of Revenue at Calcutta about a century ago, under the governor-generalships of Warren Hastings, Cornwallis, and Wellesley. It thus throws the light of contemporary evidence not only upon the origin of the Permanent Settlement and the actual status of the Zamindars, but also upon the general condition of the country, at the time when British administration was beginning to take shape. Sir W. Hunter has prefixed a dissertation on the tenure of land in Bengal, as disclosed by the official documents; and also added an analytical index, which summarises all the material bearing upon each particular subject. In some respects, this book recalls that by which the author first became known, The Annals of Rural Bengal.

THE volume on Archery in the "Badminton Library" will be published in the course of September. It is written by Mr. C. J. Longman and Colonel H. Walrend, with contributions from Miss Legh, Viscount Dillon, Major C. Hawkins Fisher, the Rev. Eyre W. Hussey, the Rev. W. K. R. Bedford, Mr. J. Balfour Paul, and Mr. L. W. Maxson. The next volume, which is also in preparation, will be on Dancing, by Mrs. Lilly Grove and others.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER, of Edinburgh and London, announce for early publication, under the auspices of the Royal National Lifeboat Institution, The Book of the Lifeboat, consisting of authentic narratives of shipwreck and rescue, contributed by actual performers in the scenes described or by eye-witnesses. The whole has been arranged and edited by Mr. J. C. Dibdin and Mr. John Ayling, and is illustrated from numerous original drawings.

THE second issue of Messrs. Williams & Norgate's Theological Translation Series will be vol. i. of Prof. Harnack's large work on the history of Dogma, translated under the supervision of Prof. A. B. Bruce, of Glasgow. The translator has had the benefit of the advance sheets of the third German edition, thus enabling him to embody Prof. Harnack's latest conclusions, which differ in a marked degree from those expressed in former editions. Prof. Harnack has written a new preface specially for this edition.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co. announce, as in the press, Documents Illustrating English Economical History, by Mr. W. J. Ashley, some time fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford, and now professor of political economy at Harvard University.

MESSRS. HURST & BLACKETT have in the press a new novel by Mrs. Herbert Martin, entitled Suit and Service.

A STORY of press life, entitled William Blacklock, Journalist, by Mr. T. Banks MacLachlan, will be published by Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier this week.

A NEW story by Mr. F. Bayford Harrison, entitled The Little Bag of Gold, will be published shortly by the Sunday School Union.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces for immediate publication The Practical Value of Religious Belief, by Mr. Henry Smith, author of "Art and Genius."

WE hear that a Swedish translation of Mr. Joseph Hattou's novel, By Order of the Czar, which was recently published at Stockholm, has been prohibited by the Russian authorities from being introduced into Finland.

THE demand for Capt. Robert Woolward's reminiscences, Nigh on Sixty Years at Sea, published by Messrs. Digby, Long & Co., has been such that the first edition was exhausted within two months of publication. A second edition is now in the press, and will be ready immediately.

A BIOGRAPHY of the late Sir Andrew Clark is in course of preparation, to which an introduction is promised by Mr. Gladstone. Those who may possess letters or other communications from the late physician would confer a great favour if they would lend the same with a view to publication. Documents should be sent to Lady Clark, Camfield, Essendon, Herts, who will immediately copy and return them.

A BIOGRAPHY of the late Dr. John Rae, F.R.S., the Arctic traveller, being in course of preparation, Mrs. Rae will be obliged by the loan of any correspondence or other documents likely to help her. Her address is 10, Royal-terrace, Warrior-square, St. Leonard's-on-Sea.

LORD TENNYSON has applied to the Bishop of Winchester for a faculty to erect a tablet to his father in Freshwater Church, for which he has written the following epitaph:

"In loving memory
"of

"ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON,

"Whose happiest days were passed at Farringford,
"in this parish.

"Born Aug. 6th, 1809.

"Died Oct. 6th, 1892.

"Buried in Westminster Abbey, Oct. 12th, 1892.
"Speak, living Voice! With thee death is not "death;

"Thy life outlives the life of dust and breath."

LAMARTINE'S niece and adopted daughter has presented to the Bibliothèque Nationale the autograph MS. of his Girondins and Restoration.

At the annual general meeting of the Navy Records Society, held last Tuesday, it was announced that the total number of members and subscribers is 307. The volumes for 1894 will be—(1) "State Papers relating to the Defeat of the Invincible Armada," edited by Prof. Laughton; and (2) "Letters of the First Lord Hood from the West Indies in 1781-2," edited by Mr. Hannay. For next year the volumes will be—"A Memoir of Captain Stephen Martin," written by his son, Stephen Martin Leake, Garter King-at-Arms, and now edited by Mr. Clements Markham (Martin was the brother-in-law of Sir John Leake, with whom he served through the wars of William III. and Anne); "The Journal of Rear-Admiral Bartholomew James during the Wars of American Independence and the French Revolution," edited by Admiral James's great grandson, Commander J. Y. F. Sullivan. By the liberality of the Hon. T. A. Brassey, the Council hoped to issue a third volume this year. In common with other students of the history of the last great war, Mr. Brassey had felt the inconvenience of having no adequate index to James's Naval History, and had had such an index prepared for his own use. He now put the manuscript at the disposal of the council, at the same time undertaking to defray the cost of printing it. By permission of the master and fellows of Magdalene College, Cambridge, Mr. J. R. Tanner will edit for the society Mr. Holland's "Two Discourses on the Navy," written in 1639 and 1660. The council hope that a similar permission will enable them to accept the offer of Prof. Elgar to copy and edit "Anthony Anthony's Declaration of the Navy," a series of beautiful pictures of the ships of the Royal Navy, presented to King Henry VIII. in 1546.

WITH respect to the "Chaucer" poem published last week by Prof. Skeat, the greatest deference is of course due to his opinion; but Mr. Steele, of Bedford, who first drew attention to the MS. in the ACADEMY, copied it out some months ago, with a view to publication as bearing all the characters of a good Lydgate poem. The MS. is too late for the ascription to Chaucer to be of any great importance.

Corrections.—In the new Chaucer Balade in the last number of the ACADEMY, the following corrections should be made:—L. 7, for "while" read "whiles"; l. 20, for "too" read "loo"; l. 24, for "rebutyng" read "rebatyng"; l. 28, for "nature" read "norture."

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE July number of Harper's Magazine will contain the first instalment of a serial story of social life in New York, by Mr. Charles Dudley Warner, entitled "The Golden House," with illustrations by Mr. Smedley.

THE first of Mr. Frederick Dolman's papers on the provincial municipalities, to which Mr. Chamberlain's article in the New Review is an introduction, will appear in the July number, its subject being Birmingham.

THE July number of the Westminster Review (published by Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co.), will contain an article by Mr. T. H. S. Escott, entitled, "Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Chamberlain: a Chapter in Personal Politics," dealing particularly with the formation of the Liberal ministry of 1880.

IN the forthcoming number of The Asiatic Quarterly Review, Prof. de Harlez, of Louvain, will contribute an article on the three ancient Chinese books of divination, the Yi-king, the Lien Shang and the Kuei-tsang; and Mr. Hormuz Rassam will give an account of the early Assyrian and Babylonian discoveries made under his supervision, and under that of his predecessor, Sir H. Layard.

AN article written by Mr. F. Carruthers Gould, illustrating the scenes depicted in the Rev. S. Baring Gould's Mehalah, will appear in the next number of the Essex Review. The illustrations to the article will be from the pencil of F. C. G.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE following is the list of those upon whom the University of Durham proposes to confer honorary degrees on June 26:—D.D., the Rev. D. J. Vaughan; D.C.L., the Rev. J. T. Fowler, Sir F. Leighton, Sir J. E. Millais, Dr. C. H. H. Parry, Prof. C. V. Stanford; M.A. (by diploma), Dr. P. P. Benson; M.A., the Rev. A. J. Harrison, the Rev. J. Mearns.

THE election to the Adams chair of Arabic at Cambridge, vacant by the death of Prof. Robertson Smith, has been further suspended for three months, with a view to the repeal of a provision in the existing statute, which requires that the professor must be at least a M.A. of the University.

TWO endowed chairs have recently been founded at University College, Liverpool: a professorship of Teutonic language and literature, in place of the lectureship now held by Dr. Kuno Meyer; and a professorship of architecture, to be combined with the directorship of the newly constituted school of architecture and applied arts for the city of Liverpool, which is supported by funds appropriated from the public grant for technical instruction.

DON FERNANDO DE ARTEAGA Y PEREIRA has been nominated by the curators of the Taylor Institution to be teacher of Spanish at Oxford, in succession to Mr. H. B. Clarke.

THE Hopkins prize of the Cambridge Philosophical Society for the period 1889-91 has been awarded to Prof. J. J. Thomson, for his researches on electrical oscillations and other important contributions to electrical theory.

A COLLECTION of portraits of Nonconformist divines, mostly of the seventeenth century, has been presented to Mansfield College, Oxford.

IT is noteworthy that, in the current number of the Cambridge University Reporter, certificates are printed that no less than ten persons have "kept the Act" for the degree of M.B., and that four have performed the exercises for the degree of M.D.

SIR PHILIP MAGNUS has been appointed to represent the University of London at the bicentenary celebration of the University of Halle-Wittenberg, to be held in August.

THE chair of Greek at University College, London, will become vacant at the end of the present term.

DR. JOHN FISKE, of Cambridge, U.S.A., has accepted an invitation to deliver a course of three lectures at Oxford, during the summer meeting of extension students, on "The Pilgrim Fathers and the Planting of New England."

THE inaugural lecture recently delivered at Oxford by Prof. Robinson Ellis, on "The Fables of Phaedrus," has been published in pamphlet form (London: Henry Frowde). After a brief account of all that is known about the poet and his work from classical sources, the bulk of the lecture is devoted to an historical description of the MSS. These are five in number, of which two were written as early as the tenth century, though the earliest printed edition is as late as 1596. A third MS., which is only a little later, is fragmentary and of minor importance. But the other two are of special interest as having been copied about the fifteenth century from an independent MS., now lost, which also contained thirty-one additional fables. Concerning the genuineness of these additional fables, Prof. Ellis differs from the majority of critics. While admitting their antiquity, he would assign them to some rival of Phaedrus, greatly inferior in genius and purity of diction. In an appendix, Prof. Ellis examines Lessing's charge against Phaedrus of disregarding the facts of nature; quotes some emendations of Phaedrus due to a forgotten editor, Christopher Wase (1668), sometime head master of Tonbridge School, and afterwards Architypographer to the University of Oxford; makes a number of critical comments of his own; and enquires about the present home of a MS. of Phaedrus which is said to have once belonged to Thomas Rawlinson.

IN MEMORIAM.

CHARLES HENRY PEARSON, LL.D.

University College, Liverpool.

It seems hardly right to let the grave close over the remains of Charles Henry Pearson, without a brief mention of the powerful influence which his high character and profound erudition exercised on all who came in contact with him.

A memoir of his life from some competent hand would be deeply interesting, tracing his career from the common room of Oriol College, and describing his work at King's College, at Trinity College, Cambridge, in the bush in South Australia, at the University of Melbourne, at the Ladies' Presbyterian College in the same colony, as a statesman, and as secretary to the Agent-General of Victoria. He was a most indefatigable worker his whole life long. He had a most marvellous memory, and a most rapid power of generalisation from the long array of facts and precedents which marshalled themselves spontaneously before his mind when called upon to pronounce judgment. He was a profound classical scholar, but his knowledge of modern literature, English as well as Continental, was equally remarkable. He was acquainted with most of the modern European languages, and enjoyed Ibsen and Gogol in the original no less than Victor Hugo and Goethe. As a newspaper writer he distinguished himself by the possession of a most earnest and trenchant style, which he was able at will to vary with the most racy banter. His conversation was always striking and fascinating. His manner seemed at first sight somewhat cold, but his unruffled exterior concealed the warmest and truest of hearts. He especially delighted in the society of the young, and he would spare no pains to put an earnest student on the right track. As a politician, he was feared by his political opponents on account of his knowledge and intellectual power; he inspired absolute trust and confidence in his own party. He was regarded by both sides as absolutely incorruptible.

It is not my purpose to review his work here; but I could not help feeling a certain pride in my old friend on reading the warm tribute paid to his learning by Dr. Furnivall in his reprint of some of the Old English Texts. I cannot help thinking that his latter days were rendered somewhat sad by a conviction, which never vented itself in words, that democracy, as he had seen it, was more or less of a failure. I do not like to dwell upon this point, as I have myself never been able to form any high estimate of the happiness or morality produced by universal suffrage. But if his ides were to some extent coloured by pessimism, this was never allowed in any way to dull his eagerness for doing good to the utmost of his ability. He had an unbounded love for the genial and affectionate character of the Australians, and an unbounded belief in the future of the British race. He always maintained that the fortunes of the old country were bound up with the colonies, and that the loss would be irreparable to both colonies and mother country should they be separated. He was also anxious that England should effect a rapprochement with France and with Russia: with the former power, because he maintained that we had more lessons to learn from her than from Germany; with the latter, because he believed that she was the coming power, and that England, more than any other nation, might be capable of influencing the civilisation of Russia.

I think, however, that the main characteristic by which Prof. Pearson will be remembered was his sincere attachment to all those who were privileged to call themselves his friends. He never forgot a kindness, nor did he ever make a personal enemy.

H. A. STRONG.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

By far the most generally interesting paper in the June Antiquary is the one by Mr. Roach Le Schonix on the results of the Silchester excavations in 1893. Fragmentary notices appear from time to time in the newspapers; but here we have, for the first time, a trustworthy and somewhat full account of what has been discovered. The older school of antiquaries, when they made excavations, did so mainly for the sake of finding relics—things to put in cabinets or museums. Such objects should, of course, on no account be neglected; but it should ever be remembered, whether a Roman forum or a ruined abbey be the site of the diggings, that the first object should be to illustrate the place's history and the lives of those who dwelt there. Mr. Le Schonix appreciates this, and his paper is valuable on that account. He gives an engraving of a fragment of tile, on which some boy has scratched what he regarded as the portrait of an ox. We are told it represents bos longifrons. The character of the scribble is not sufficiently distinct for us to accept or reject this statement. The Rev. W. Hudson contributes the concluding portion of his essay on the relations between the Abbot of Saint Benet and his tenants after the Peasant Revolt of 1381. It gives an interesting picture of a state of society very different from that which our older historians have pictured. The paper entitled "The Antiquary among the Pictures" is unsigned. It contains some pungent criticism, with nearly every word of which we are in agreement.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BACKHAUS, W. E. Das Wesen des Humors. Leipzig: Friedrich. 4 M.
 BONAFOUS, R. Henri's Klatsch: sa Vie et ses Envies. Paris: Hachette. 7 fr. 50 c.
 BREFF, Jean de la. Badinage: roman. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
 FRANÇOIS, Gustave. La Vie Nationale: le Commerce. Paris: Chailley. 4 fr.
 MARCHETTI, H. Die Erdumseglung S. M. Schiffes "Saïda" in den J. 1890–1892. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 10 M.
 TKALAC, E. L. V. Jugenderinnerungen aus Kroatien. Leipzig: Wiegand. 4 M. 50 Pf.
 TUMA, A. Serbien. Hannover: Helwig. 8 M.
 WOLFF, M. V. Leben u. Werke des Antonio Beccadelli genannt Panormita. Leipzig: Seemann. 2 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- LOSSEN, M. Die Lehre vom Tyrannenmord in der christlichen Zeit. München: Franz. 1 M. 70 Pf.
 NOWACK, W. Lehrbuch der hebräischen Archäologie. Freiburg-B. 18 M.
 STRINNYER, F. L. Studien über den Brief des Paulus an die Römer. I. Berlin: Wiegand. 1 M. 80 Pf.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- BACHMANN, A. Deutsche Reichsgeschichte im Zeitalter Friedrich III. u. Max I. 2. Bd. Leipzig: Veit. 18 M.
 BURK, M. V. Beiträge zur Theorie d. Strafrechts u. zum Strafrechtbuche. Leipzig: Veit. 11 M.
 DROBSE, J. G. Kleine Schriften zur alten Geschichte. 2. Bd. Leipzig: Veit. 10 M.

- GENNICH, P. Die Staats- u. Kirchenlehre Johanns v. Salisbury. Gotha: Perthes. 4 M.
 GESCHICHTSQUELLEN, hantsche. Hrg. vom Verein f. hants. Geschichte. VII. Halle: Waisenhause. 5 M. 60 Pf.
 MONOD, Gabriel. Les Maitres de l'histoire: Renan, Taine, Michelet. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
 RIEZLER, S. Zur Würdigung Herzog Albrechts V. v. Bayern u. seiner inneren Regierung. München: Franz. 2 M.
 SALOMON, F. Geschichte d. letzten Ministeriums Königin Annas v. England (1710–1714) u. der englischen Thronfolgefrage. Gotha: Perthes. 5 M.
 WOLFF, J. A. Geschichte der Stadt Calcar. Frankfurt-a.-M.: Foeser. 4 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BACHMANN, P. Zahlentheorie. 2. Thl. Die analyt. Zahlen-theorie. Leipzig: Teubner. 12 M.
 CARULLI, Th. epitome florae Europae terrarumque affinium. Fasc. II. Dicotyledones. Berlin: Friedländer. 5 M. 50 Pf.
 DE-TONI, J. B. Sylloge algarum. Vol. II. Bacillariae. Sect. III. Cryptorhaphidae. Berlin: Friedländer. 48 M.
 EHLESS, E. Zoologische Miscellen. I. Göttingen: Dieterich. 7 M.
 FÖPPL, A. Einführung in die Maxwell'sche Theorie der Elektrizität. Leipzig: Teubner. 10 M.
 HERCK, C. R. Der Weisstannenkrebs. Berlin: Springer. 10 M.
 HERZ, N. Geschichte der Bahnbestimmung v. Planeten u. Kometen. 2. Thl. Leipzig: Teubner. 10 M.
 HESSE, R. Die Hypogaen Deutschlands. 2. Bd. Die Tuberae u. Elaphomyeten. Halle: Hofstetter. 28 M. 80 Pf.
 HIRSCH, W. Genie u. Entartung. Berlin: Coblentz. 6 M.
 KATÖ, H. Der Kampf ums Recht des Stärkeren u. seine Entwicklung. Berlin: Friedländer. 8 M.
 POCKELS, F. Ueb. den Einfluss d. elektrostat. Feldes auf das optische Verhalten piezoelektrischer Krystalle. Göttingen: Dieterich. 22 M.
 RANFF, H. Palaeospongiologie. 1. Thl. u. 2. Thl. 1. Hälfte. Stuttgart: Schweizerbart. 80 M.
 SCHROEDER, Ch. Entwicklg. der Raupenzeichnung u. Abhängigkeit der letzteren v. der Farbe der Umgebung. Berlin: Friedländer. 8 M.
 VERÖFFENTLICHUNGEN d. k. preussischen meteorologischen Instituts. Hrg. v. W. v. Bezold. Berlin: Aaher. 10 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- HILARIO, I. Die Gesetze der Wortstellung im Pentameter des Ovid. Leipzig: Teubner. 25 M.
 MARRAS, P. Arte de la lengua Moxa. Leipzig: Teubner. 30 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A PRIMITIVE DISARRANGEMENT OF GENESIS VIII. 19 (MASSORETIC TEXT).

Oxford: June 8, 1894.

While studying the Book of Jubilees, which is really a Haggadic commentary on Genesis, written originally in Hebrew in Palestine before the Christian era, I have remarked that the Massoretic text differs frequently from the Hebrew text used by the author of the Book of Jubilees, and that in many cases the Massoretic is undoubtedly the later and less authentic form of text.

In Genesis viii. 19 (Massoretic text) "Every beast, every creeping thing, and every fowl, and whatsoever creepeth," we have an instructive instance of this nature. These words appear in Jubilees, v. 32 as, "Every beast and every fowl and everything that creepeth." This clear and logical division of lower animate life over against the meaningless and tautological division in the Massoretic text suggests the possibility of a disarrangement in the latter, and makes us suspect that "every creeping thing" is wrongly separated from "whatsoever creepeth." And when we turn to the Samaritan text and the Versions, we find our suspicions confirmed, and the corruption of the Massoretic text made a matter of demonstration; for the Samaritan—"every beast and every fowl and every creeping thing that creepeth." The LXX. πάντα τὰ θηρία καὶ πάντα τὰ κτήνη καὶ πᾶν περὶερὸν καὶ πᾶν ἰππεύον κινώμενον the Syriac (Pesh. ed. by Lee)—"every beast and all cattle, and every fowl, (and) whatsoever creepeth": the Vulgate omnia animalia, jumenta et reptilia quae repant: the Arabic = "every beast and fowl and every creeping thing that creeps." The Targum of Onkelos alone supports the Massoretic. Thus, it is obvious that the Massoretic text, which did not assume its present form till the seventh century of our era, must be corrected in conformity with the above more ancient authorities, and for פִּלְהֶהָרָבָּשׁ פִּלְהֶהָרָבָּשׁ וְכָל־הַעוֹף כָּל־רֹבֶשׁ we must read פִּלְהֶהָרָבָּשׁ וְכָל־הַעוֹף וְכָל־הַרֹבֶשׁ, and instead of our present English version we should read "every beast and every fowl and every creeping thing that creepeth." This very combination, הָרֹבֶשׁ הָרָבָּשׁ, is actually found in Genesis i. 26.

We can thus dispense with the forced interpretation to which modern exegetes have resorted, in assigning to רֹבֶשׁ, the participle, quite a different meaning from רֹבֶשׁ, the noun. We ought possibly, with the LXX Syriac and one MS. of Jubilees, to add "and all cattle" after "every beast."

R. H. CHARLES.

THE SEVENTY "YEAR-WEEKS" OF DANIEL.

Clydebank, near Glasgow : May 22, 1894.

My attention has been arrested by a distinct usage as to the term "weeks" in Daniel, on which I base a calculation of the seventy weeks. In chapter x. 2, 3, "full weeks," "whole weeks" (A.V.) translate the Hebrew שבועים lit. weeks (as to) days, not weeks of days (Constr.). Whereas in chapter ix. 24 (et in aliis) weeks only are spoken of. My suggestion, then, is that in the latter place a working week of six days is referred to, "six days shalt thou labour and do all thy work." For the domination of the world-powers such a secular year-week is an appropriate period, and might have been so regarded by a pious Jew. This scant usage may seem a slender foundation for a theory, but it calls for note; and if it furnishes light where Canon Driver is obliged to say, "Of Daniel ix. 24-27 no entirely satisfactory interpretation appears yet to have been found," attention may well be called to it.

Seventy such year-weeks would be 420 years. Reckoning from 588 B.C., when Jeremiah definitely prophesied restoration (see Jeremiah xxx. 3, and my Part iii. of How to Read the Prophets, p. 127) this number of years brings us down to 168 B.C., exactly the year when the desolation and the transgression reached their end and height. Seven weeks or forty-two years from 588 B.C. bring us to 546 B.C., when we have a suitable, nay, an exact date for the recognition of Cyrus, as the anointed rod of vengeance against Babylon. In Ezekiel iv. 5, 6 (op. cit., Part iv. p. 152) Israel's 190 years of captivity would run from 736 B.C. to 546 B.C., while Judah's extend from 586 B.C. to the same year. A threefold induction thus points to 546 B.C. as an important date. From 546 B.C. to 174 B.C. we have sixty-two such year-weeks, or 372 years, during which the restored people were rebuilding Temple and City, often in troublous times. Then a crisis came in their fortunes. Antiochus Epiphanes was now reigning; and Jason intrigued against Onias, forming a Hellenising party in Jerusalem, who entered into a "covenant" and forsook the law of their fathers (1 Macc. i. 11). Immediately Onias, an anointed one, was cut off without a successor. For a week, i.e., six years or 2300 days (ch. viii. 14), this covenant prevailed, for most of which time the Temple worship was interfered with (174-168 B.C.) With this latter date a turn in the tide begins. The Maccabees raise the national standard, and in 3½ years or 1335 days the Temple was purified again (165 B.C.). This was the end for which the faithful waited.

BUCHANAN BLAKE.

THE ETYMOLOGY OF "YEOMAN."

Oxford: June 1, 1894.

It has often been suggested that the word "yeoman" is related in some way to Old Frisian gā "a district"; but I do not think that any successful attempt has been ever made to give a satisfactory explanation of the relation between the two words.

The word occurs in two main forms in Middle English—namely, ȝēman and ȝōman. These forms point back to an Old English **geoman*, of which the long diphthong after the palatal was pronounced eo (whence ȝēman) or eo (whence ȝōman, yeoman). Compare O.E. ēode and M.E. ȝēde, ȝōde; O.E. sēo and M.E. schē, schō; O.E. hēo (she) and M.E. 3hē, 3hō; and (according to the New English Dictionary) O.E. cēocan and M.E. chēken, Mod. E. choke.

Old English gēo (geō) may, I think, together with Old Frisian gā, be referred back to a Germanic base gawja-, which is also the base of Gothic gawi, Old High German gewi, and Modern German gau.

Prof. van Helten, in his Old Frisian Grammar (§ 23), shows that in Old Frisian not only Germanic au but auj- is represented by ā, and that Old Frisian gā is derived from a type gawjom.

In Old High German gewi the ew is due to i-umlaut, and this older ew (eu) will explain the vocalisation of Old English gēo(w). Compare O.E. mēowle = mewilō = Gothic mawilō (maid), and O.E. ȝeo from base ȝewa-.

A. L. MAYHEW.

THE BOULOGNE PRUDENTIUS GLOSSES.

University of Ghent, Belgium : June 6, 1894.

In the ACADEMY of June 2, Prof. Napier recalls Kluge's suggestion, that Holder may have misread wucan for pucan in the Prudentius MS. at Boulogne. Not very long ago I collated the MS. in question, and I think it worth while to record that my note on this passage reads "pucan, not wucan."

I hope to take an early opportunity of publishing my collation; there are some mistakes in Holder's work which seem to make this desirable. To one point I wish to draw attention now. All students of the gloss-literature will no doubt have been puzzled, as I was, by the strokes—horizontal, vertical, and slanting—with which Holder's transcript abounds. They are not found in the MS. It is true that the MS. presents an erasure in almost every case where Holder prints some of these strokes; but as many erasures are not thus denoted, the system, if system there be, is misleading. I publish this note so as to put a stop to all speculations on this subject, in which others (like myself) may have indulged. We need not take the strokes into account at all.

H. LOGEMAN.

THE "SHIELD-WALL" AT HASTINGS.

London : June 5, 1894.

Kindly allow me to explain that I did not claim to have converted Mr. Oman, as he alleges, on account of his "silence" with reference to "palisades" in his contribution to Social England, but, as I was careful to explain in the letter to which he refers (May 19), from his significant substitution of "shield-wall" for "palisades" in the sentence he has reproduced from his Art of War.

J. H. ROUND.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- SUNDAY, June 17, 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Freewill and Responsibility," by Mr. D. G. Ritchie.
 MONDAY, June 18, 5 p.m. Hellenic: Annual Meeting.
 8.3 p.m. Geographical: "A Survey of the English Lakes," by Dr. H. R. Mill.
 TUESDAY, June 19, 7.45 p.m. Statistical: "A Comparison of the Realised Wealth and the Economical Position of France and England, especially as regards their Agricultural Production and their Security in case of War," by Mr. W. J. Harris.
 8 p.m. Colonial Institute: "The Islands of the Western Pacific," by Bishop Selwyn.
 8.30 p.m. Zoological: "Lepidosiren and Proctopterus," by Prof. Ray Lankester; "Some Specimens of Antlers of the Fallow Deer, showing Continuous Variation and the effect of Total or Partial Castration," by Dr. G. Herbert Fowler; "The Perforated Flexor Muscles in some Birds," by Mr. P. Chalmers Mitchell.
 WEDNESDAY, June 20, 8 p.m. Geological: "Deep Borings at Cufford and Winkfield, with Notes on those at Ware and Chessington," by Mr. W. Whitaker and Mr. A. J. Jukes-Browne; "The Barge Stone and the Pebble-beds of Surrey, with Special Reference to their Microscopic Contents," by Mr. Frederick Chapman; "Deposits from Soudwint, with Special Reference to the Origin of the Loess and the Preservation of Mammoth-Remains," by Mr. Charles Davison; "Additions to the Fauna of the Clenellus Zone of the North-West Highlands," by Mr. B. N. Peach; "Questions relating to the Formation of Coal-Semir, including a New Theory of them, suggested by Field and Other Observations made during the Past Decade on Both Sides of the Atlantic," and "Observations regarding the Occurrence of Anthracite Generally, with a New Theory of its Origin," by Mr. W. S. Greasley; "The Igneous Rocks of the Neighbourhood of Balh, by Mr. Henry Woods; "The Relations of some of the Older Fragmental Rocks in North-West Caernarvonshire," by Prof. T. G. Bonney and Miss Catherine Raisin.
 8 p.m. Microscopical: "The Unreality of Certain Characters generally accepted for Specific Diagnosis in the Diatomaceae," by Mr. T. Comber; "Foraminifera of the Gault of Folkestone," VI., by Mr. F. Chapman.
 8 p.m. Meteorological: "Fogs reported with Strong Winds during the fifteen Years 1876-90 in the British Isles," by Mr. Robert H. Scott; "Some Characteristic Features of Galees and Strong Winds," by Mr. Richard H. Curtis.
 8 p.m. Folk-Lore: "The Old Norwegian Speculum Regale," by Prof. Kuno Meyer; "Armenian Folk-Lore," by Prof. M. Tcheraz.
 THURSDAY, June 21, 8 p.m. Lionean: "Tabulation Areas," by Mr. C. B. Clarke.
 8 p.m. Chemical: "The Specific Character of the Fermentation Functions of Yeast Cells," by Mr. Adrian J. Brown; "The Interaction of Lead Sulphide with Lead Sulphate and Oxide," by Mr. J. B. Hannay; "The Oxidation of Tartaric Acid in the Presence of Iron," by Mr. H. J. H. Fenton; "The Relation between the Solubility of a Gas and the Viscosity of its Solvent," by Prof. Thorpe and Mr. J. W. Rodger.
 8.30 p.m. Historical: "The Causes of the Napoleonic War in 1803," by Mr. Waldemar Ekedahl.
 8.30 p.m. Antiquaries.
 FRIDAY, June 22, 5 p.m. Physical: "Photographs of Flames," by Capt. Absey; "An Elementary Theory of Planimeters," by Prof. Henriot; "The Hatchet Planimeter," by Mr. F. W. Hill; "A New Integrating Apparatus," by Mr. A. Sharp.
 SATURDAY, June 23, 8.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

SANSKRIT MANUSCRIPTS IN CHINA.

Göttingen.

IN a paper on "Sanskrit Texts discovered in Japan," published in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society (N.S., Vol. XII., pp. 153 ff.), Prof. Max Müller has told us that during the Middle Ages innumerable MSS. were taken from India to China, but that every effort to discover any of these MSS. in the temples or monasteries of China, up to 1880, had proved futile. "Being myself convinced," he writes, "of the existence of old Indian MSS. in China, I lost no opportunity, during the last five and twenty years, of asking any friends of mine who went to China to look out for these treasures, but—with no result!"

By a piece of good fortune, I now have before me photographs and tracings of a few leaves of two or three Sanskrit MSS. or portions of MSS. which are preserved in one of the Chinese monasteries. In themselves these fragments may be considered to be of slight value; but they prove that Indian MSS. do exist in China, and encourage us to hope that more may in time be forthcoming.

What I possess at present, I owe to the exertions of my friend and former pupil Dr. A. O. Franke, of Shanghai, to whom the thanks of Sanskrit scholars are due for the trouble which he has taken in this matter. When Dr. Franke, six years ago, went to China, I also urged him to look out for Indian MSS.; and I now have had the pleasure of receiving from him, on April 30, a letter in which he writes as follows:—

"When, some years ago, I said good-bye to you at Göttingen, I promised to write about any Sanskrit MSS. which I might come across in China. I am rather late in fulfilling my promise, and even now can do so to a very modest extent only. But it is not my fault that such should be the case, for Sanskrit MSS. are indeed a rare article here. . . . The only old MS. which has yet been found is in a small dilapidated Buddhist monastery in the mountainous wilds of the T'ien t'ai shan in the province of Chekiang, about 125 English miles southwest of the port of Ningpo, where it was seen by Dr. Edkins about thirty years ago. Last autumn I set out to have a look at the MS. myself, and I am sending you now a few results of my expedition. I have photographed a portion of the MS., which consists of twenty palm-leaves, and is evidently incomplete, and have copied other parts; and what I am sending are photographs of both sides of the first and second leaves, and tracings of the concluding lines on page 24, as well as of the writing on a leaf which is not numbered."

Dr. Franke adds that by the people on the spot the MS. is believed to be 1300 or 1400 years old.

In what follows I shall call the two palm-leaves, of which Dr. Franke has sent photographs, A and B, and shall denote the concluding lines of page 24, spoken of by him, by the letter C, and the unnumbered leaf by the letter D.

Of the two palm leaves which have been photographed, B is in a perfect state of preservation. In the middle it has the usual hole for the string by which the leaves were held together; and it is marked on the proper right of the back with the figure 2, and on the left with the letter-numeral dvi. On either side of the leaf there are five lines of writing, each of which contains from fifty-five to sixty aksharas. The leaf A is similar to B, but on the proper right a portion of it is broken away, so that at the commencement of each line from five to six aksharas are missing. This leaf also is marked, on the proper right margin of the back, with the figure 2, showing at once that A and B belong to two different MSS.; and it contains six lines of writing on the first side and five on the second, also with from fifty-five to sixty aksharas in each line. C presents two lines of well-preserved writing; and D contains six lines, which cover a space of about eleven and three-quarter inches broad, by two and three-quarter inches high, and of which the beginning of the first line and the end of the last line are broken away, while the rest is well preserved.

The writing on these fragments proves that the MSS. to which they belong, so far from being 1300 or 1400 years old, were not written before the twelfth century A.D., and may possibly belong to the thirteenth or fourteenth century. For A, B, and C exhibit the distinctly Nepalese characters, characterised by the addition of a curve or hook to the top of each letter, of which we find the earliest specimens in the Nepalese MSS. of the second half of the twelfth century; and the writing of D differs little from the ordinary Nāgari, and may be described as that particular variety of the Nāgari alphabet which was current in parts of Bengal about the thirteenth century A.D. On these points there can be no doubt whatever, and it is therefore quite certain that the MSS., or fragments of MSS., which are now preserved in the T'ien t'ai shan monastery, were brought to China from Northern India or Nepal not earlier than 1200 A.D.

I give below an exact transcript of the texts of the four fragments. Although the writing of A and B is very neat and distinct, it is quite possible that, owing to the small size of the photographs, I may have misread one or two letters; and the texts contain a number of clerical blunders, which it would hardly be worth while attempting to correct here. Even with these faults, what I give will probably enable others to tell us to what works these fragments belong. The text of A is throughout in the Upajāti metre, and is in praise of Buddha, the true teacher, who is contrasted with false teachers. B apparently is a commentary on a work composed in Anushtubh verses, probably, as my friend Prof. Cowell suggests to me, a Tantric work, connected with the Kālachakra-tantra. And the exact title of this work and the name of its author, or of the author of the commentary, may be given in C (Paramārthasevā or Tattvavālokanasevā, composed by Pundarika or Sripundarika). Of D, I do not know what to make, and will only point out that it gives us the initial verses of Kālidāsa's three Mahākāvya, the Kumārasambhava, Meghadūta, and Raghuvamśa.

TRANSCRIPT OF THE TEXTS.

A.—Leaf 2, a.

- 1 . . . . [dya] || cōkārāhūmkā[ra]mitāshṭamantram-anyaṭ-punāḥ prākṛitām-etaduktām | evan-na jānāti vināshāvuddhir-
yachchavadamātram hi tad-eva mātram || arājahanse sarasī pravishā 2 so-
- 2 — — — [ko] 'vjashandē | prachchanna-mrityuḥ avakule [jha]sānām yathā tathā
dushtaguru[r]-janānām || ākuñchya kan-than nalanidale tu niebauna ekena padena
dhūrttaḥ | bhrāntiṁ-ka-
- 3 — — — [ja]sānām vako yathā dushtagu-
ru[r]-janānām || yathā nato natakabhāva-
heto[ka]roti pātrasya surendrarūpaṁ | tathābhīṣeke jīnamaulivandham kīrotyamārggā-
- 4 — — — [ka]māturo madhyasātpramattaḥ sakrodhachitto vahuvittaluv-dhaḥ | asatyavādī śrutavāñchanārthi da-
dāti dukkham sa guru[r]-nna chittreṁ || samsāradukkhāla-
- 5 — — — [ta?] grīhitas-timire kshanena |
santāpanāsāya mahāpāsthashe[stho?] |
bhrāntiṁ viśasyeva susuptasāyāḥ ||
dharmaṁantarair-mmārkaḥjanair-ane-kair-nirvāṇasaukhyam prati luvdhaḥ-
- 6 — — — [dha]to dushtaguru kimartham-parikshamāno narakādīdātā || saṁ-āra-nirvāṇavinaśtabhā[va]ḥ prajñāvivishṭaḥ
karuṇā[prajñinnāḥ] | nirindriyāḥ śāsvata
ity-atarkko 'na-

Leaf 2, b.

- 1 — — — — — eva śāntaḥ || śrīvajrasatvopi sa
chādivuddhaḥ śrīmāñjughoshaḥ sa cha lokanāthaḥ | śrīvajra a(?) krī(?) sa cha chittavajraḥ sa chāksharo nishkalayoga-gamyāḥ | sache-
- 2 — — — — — tā sahaiva mārānāsāḥ sugato
jinendroḥ | śrīśākyasiṁhaḥ sayasomuniḥ-cha śrīkālaḥakrasya cha sa[r]vavuddhaḥ
|| sa śrīguru[r]-nirmitta eva śāntaḥ-
- 3 — — — — — [su]khado dharanyām | mārāri-cko jagadekavandhu chintāmanāḥ saṁsuta-
— — — kāmāḥ || dhīrjī bhavadhyānavinaś-tasangaḥ kāmī mahākāmavivuddha-
chittāḥ |
- 4 — — — — — [dri]yasaukhyayoge mudrāpra-
saṅge - py - avinashatāgāḥ | chandrārkkamārggām prati nashatayogaḥ prajñānale
yogavālat-pravishṭaḥ | anautasaukhyāmri-tase-
- 5 — — — — — gurur-vvajradhoro 'ghahantā ||
Ayāchakaḥ rateu takānivivarkku(?) tyāgi
na dāna (?) sukhāgataaya | lavdhasya vi-tasya na sañchayārthi lavdhā nimittāny-
uya(?)bhogakartā || aṁ-

B.—Leaf 2, a.

- 1 thayāmi || idānim-uddesādeḥ prabhedā-āha
| uddesāḥ trividhaḥ taitre sarvaśāmin |
tathā nirddesāḥ trividho-bhavat | tad-

- uddesānirddesayoh pratyuddesam-āha | pratyuddeso maho-
- 2 ddesāḥ ity-uddesasya prabhedāḥ | pratinirddesa
ko-para iti mahānirddesa ākhiptaḥ | etau
cha nirddesasya prabhedau | eṣānī vyā-
pāram-āha | uddesa evetyādi | evoddesa-
- 3 ā sa eva nirddesāḥ | sa cha tantragitir-uchyate
| atra hi nirddesāydena vribhātanta-sāgitir-uchyate | vribhātantaṁtarbhū-tas-ch-oddesāḥ sa c hi sāgitikārakāḥ prithak-kriyate-
- 4 | tadā anyatantro bhavati | yathālakṣābhī-dhānāt nigatam-anyatantrābhīdhānam |
ity-uddesāḥ-ch-eti chakārāt pratīśavākahepe pratinirddesauchyate | dvayam-etat yathākra-
- 5 main alpapañjikā | vribhātapañjikā | sū cha
padamātrābhāñjikā | na sarvavāñchābhīkā
| yathā ākā sarvavāñchābhīkā-eti vak-shyate | mahoddesāḥ-ch-eti chakārāt mahaschcharakhepe mahāni-

Leaf 2, b.

- 1 rdd. sū uchyaṭe | dvayam-etat yathāśāñkhyam |
alpāñikā vribhātikā ch-ochyete | evam-ity-uktakramena shaktoḥbhīḥ shāvidhairalpatantravibhātantaṁsāgitikāḥ | sūdhānī parisuddham ādi[vuddha?]
- 2 kālachakrabhīdhānam syād-iti vakshamāmena
samyandhaḥ | evam[pra?]yogaiś-chaturvidhair-iti manitā[me?]sāsthānādva-yalakṣanaiḥ | chatusamvohir-iti ekakṣanābhīsanivodhiḥ pañchākāra-
- 3 viṁśatyā [cha] māyājālābhīsanibodhīlakṣa-
naiḥ | skandhai rūpavedanāsāñjñāsāñ-skāraviṁśālakṣa-vair-dhā[r]mmadhatu-bhīḥ | prithivyaptejovāyavākāśadha[r]mm-
adhātulakṣanaiḥ | āya-
- 4 tanair-vishayavishayibhāvena dvādasābhīḥ |
rūpasāvdagandharasasparśadharmaḥdhā-
tulakṣanaiḥ | ekaḥkulāḥ chakṣusrota-
ghrāñjivākāyamanolakṣanaiḥ | satyā-bhāyām [lau]kika-
- 5 lokottarābhāyām kāyavākchittasāñsuddhyā
abhiśhekadvayam dvayam-iti | udakamu-
kūṭābhāyām kāyasuddhīm | shatvajragha-
rābhāyām vākāśuddhīm | mahāvratānāmā-
bhāyām chittasuddhām | anujñayājñā-

C.—Concluding lines of p. 24.

- 1 || iti Paramārthasevā nāmah shatdarśanācharga-
gochara-Tattvavālokanasevā samāptā || ||
kṛitir-ityam
- 2 śrī-Pu-ḍarikapādānām || likhitam-idam Rāmadattena vai || śubhāḥ ||

D.—An Unnumbered Leaf.

- 1 mūrka rāja śrīŚrībhojadeva-
rābā || mūrka | u sām tha (?) ra || Umayā rahito Rudroḥ Śaṁkara saha Vishnuḥ | tha(?)kāra Śū-
- 2 lapāñś-cha rakṣāntu śvaḥ sarvadā || Ś'aras-
vatī | Kālī de(?)vī(?) | Kāldāsāḥ || Ś'aras-
vatī | asti kashit vāk viśā(?)sha || Kāldāśāsāḥ ||
- 3 Asty-uttarasyām dīśi devatātmā Himālayo
nāma nagādhirājaḥ | pūrvāparau toyanidhī vi—hya sthita prithivyor-iva māna-dandaḥ ||
- 4 Kumāraḥ | Kāśhit kātāvirahagurunāḥ svā-dhikārapramattaḥ sāpenāsāñgāmitamahimā varshabhona (?) bharttuḥ | yakṣaś-chakre Janakatanayā-
- 5 snānapūnyodakeshu snigdhaḥchhāyātarushu
vasatiṁ Rāmagiryaśameshu || Megha-
dūtaḥ || Vāgarthāv-iva sañpriktau
vāgarthapratipattaye | jagataḥ pitaravañ-
- 6 de Pārvvatiparamēśvarau || Raghuḥ || tra(?)ya-
(?)kāvyah || vi, śi, sha traya (?) kāvyam ||
shaḥ(?) vā — —

F. KIELHORN.

OBITUARY.

PROF. WHITNEY.

It is with great regret that we record the death of Prof. William Dwight Whitney at the comparatively early age of sixty-seven. In this country he is known chiefly as a comparative philologist, and a writer upon the problems of linguistic science. But his reputation as a scholar rests rather upon his work in Sanskrit. His grammar of the Vedic dialect is an enduring monument of labour, accuracy, and scholarship.

Born at Northampton in Massachusetts in 1827, he graduated at Williams College in 1845. For three years he served as a clerk in a bank, but in 1849 he quitted this uncongenial sphere of work and entered the University of Yale. After further studies at Berlin and Tübingen, he was appointed professor of Sanskrit at Yale when only twenty-seven years of age, and subsequently took part in the preparation of that magnum opus, Böhtlingk and Roth's Sanskrit Dictionary.

The interest excited by Prof. Max Müller's Lectures on the Science of Language led Prof. Whitney into the same field of research; and in 1867 he published his book on Language and the Study of Language, which was soon afterwards translated into German by Prof. Jolly. This and other publications upon the same subject—partly in periodicals, partly in the form of books like The Life and Growth of Language (1876) and Oriental and Linguistic Studies (1873-5)—brought him into controversy with the leading representative of comparative philology in this country. Prof. Whitney was, in fact, lacking in imagination; but he had a clear and logical mind, and did not shrink from carrying out the premisses he adopted to their logical conclusions. He was the opponent of all theories which made language an organic product: it was to him merely a human "institution."

He was, nevertheless, a painstaking and accurate student of phonetics, and as such an advocate of a reform of English spelling. He worked hard for this object in conjunction with Prof. March, and was the editor-in-chief of the Century Dictionary of the English Language, the first volume of which appeared in 1889. The American Oriental Society, of which he was president, will miss him much. We must not forget to add that he was a corresponding member of the Academies of Berlin, Turin, Rome, and St. Petersburg, as well as of the Institute of France.

A. H. S.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE gold medal of the Linnean Society has this year been awarded to Prof. Haeckel, of Jena, for his contributions to zoological science.

At the recent general meeting of the Zoological Society, it was announced by the council that they had resolved to bestow the silver medal of the society on Mr. Henry Hamilton Johnson, Commissioner and Consul-General for British Central Africa, in acknowledgment of the efforts he had made to increase our knowledge of the zoology of British Central Africa.

At the meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, to be held on Monday next, Dr. H. R. Mill, the librarian of the society, will read a paper upon his recent bathymetrical survey of the English Lakes, with numerous illustrations.

PROF. ROBERTS AUSTEN has been awarded, by the Société d'Encouragement pour l'Industrie Nationale, a prize of 2000 frs. (£80) for his recent researches on alloys, and more particularly for those which relate to the behaviour of metals and alloys at high temperatures and to their mechanical properties as influenced by small quantities of added elements.

At the last meeting of the Zoological Society, Mr. Lindsay Johnson read a communication on the pupils of the Felidae. He stated that, after an examination of the eyes of 180 domestic cats, as well as the eyes of all the Felidae in the Society's gardens, he had come to the conclusion that the natural shape of the pupil in Felis is circular. Although under various degrees of light one might get every shape from the circle through all degrees of oval to a perfectly vertical line, yet instillations of atropine or cocaine solutions caused every pupil to become a true circle. The younger the cat the greater the tendency for the pupil to become pointed oval in ordinary light; and, conversely, the older the cat the more frequently did we find a circular pupil. Brilliant light always caused contraction to oval, and direct sunlight to a thin line in the smaller Felidae; in the larger Felidae Mr. Johnson had frequently found the pupils contract to a small circle. Suddenly alarming a cat had the effect of momentarily dilating the pupil; while in sleep the pupil was always contracted. The communication was illustrated by models and diagrams.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

CAMBRIDGE PHILOLOGICAL.—(Thursday, May 24.)

DR. POSTGATE, president, in the chair.—Prof. Sidgwick read a paper entitled "Conjectures on the Constitutional History of Athens from 594 to 580 B.C. based on 'Αθήν. Πολιτ. ch. 13'" Comparing the phrases οὐ κατέστησαν ἄρχοντα and ἀναρχίαν ἐποίησαν, he argued that ἀναρχία must be understood to mean no more than the non-election of the chief archon: pointing out in support of this view that Damasias in this chapter is said to be αἰσθητός, whereas the archons in ch. 8 were said to be κληρωτοὶ ἐκ προκρίτων—each of the four tribes nominating ten for the sortition. He argued that this limited recurrent ἀναρχία was most probably caused, not by a revolutionary breach of the constitution, but by a temporary failure to fulfil constitutional conditions; and he conjectured that this failure was due to obstinate antagonism between two bodies who had to concur in the appointment of the chief archon. He conjectured that one of these bodies was the Areopagitic Council, which in the pre-Solonian period appointed officials independently. From the compromise adopted in the year of ten archons—which he took to be 481/80—he inferred that the antagonism was due to a prolonged and balanced struggle between Eupatrids and non-Eupatrids for the chief archonship. He conjectured that this antagonism caused a failure to appoint a chief archon, every fourth year for twelve years; but that, while in 590/89 and 586/5 the result was simple non-appointment, in 582/1 the same failure led to the prolongation of the government of the previous chief archon Damasias. He further inferred from the regular distribution of archons among the tribes in the later constitution—9 ἄρχοντες + 1 γραμματεὺς being always appointed one from each tribe (ch. 55)—that, in the Solonian Constitution the eight inferior archons were similarly distributed, two being appointed by lot from the ten nominated by each tribe. He conjectured that, in order to carry out completely the principle of equal allotment of archons among tribes, the chief archon was elected from each tribe in rotation, the tribe having some share in the election; and that, accordingly, the quadrennially recurring failure to appoint a chief archon was due to some peculiar characteristic of one of the four tribes—probably a special predominance of anti-Eupatrid sentiment, causing an obstinate disagreement between this tribe and the Areopagitic Council. He conjectured that when this deadlock occurred for a third time, the Eupatrids determined to meet it in a new way, by the continuance in office of the Eupatrid archon of the preceding year, Damasias; but that Damasias, in endeavouring to prolong his tenure of office for a third year, was acting in his own interest against the wish of Eupatrids generally; and that, accordingly, the majority of the Eupatrids combined with the leaders of the opposing party to get rid of him. To effect this combination they had to increase the number of archons from nine to ten, so that Eupatrids and non-Eupatrids might be equally represented on the board. At this crisis—as he conjectured—the majority of the Eupatrids relaxed their family pride and coalesced with a portion of the wealthy plebeians; and this is why we do not hear after this date of any division between Εὐπατριδαί as such and the other two classes (ἄρχοντες or γεωμεῖροι and δημιουργοί). He conjectured, finally, that—primarily in view of the complicated distribution necessary in the year of ten archons—election was at this time substituted for sortition in the case of the eight inferior archons. He thought it probable that this change was permanent since we learn (ch. 22) that all the ἄρχοντες were αἰσθητοί for twenty-four years after the expulsion of the tyrants; and this renders it probable that the change from lot to choice was not introduced by the tyrants; otherwise, the latter mode of appointment could hardly have lasted through the reforms of Cleisthenes.

ARISTOTELIAN.—(Monday, May 21.)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—Papers were read by Mr. H. W. Carr, Mr. G. D. Hicks, and Prof. Alexander on "The Nature and Range of Evolution."

(Monday, June 4.)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—The report and accounts for the fifteenth session were adopted, and the officers for the ensuing session were elected as follows:—president, Mr. Bernard Bosanquet; vice-presidents, Prof. Alexander, Mr. Boutwood, and Mr. G. F. Stout; editor, Mr. A. F. Shand; hon. secretary, Mr. H. W. Carr. A paper was read by Dr. W. L. Gildea on "The Immateriality of the Rational Soul," which was followed by a discussion.

ANGLO-RUSSIAN LITERARY SOCIETY.—(Imperial Institute, Wednesday June 5.)

E. A. CAZALET, Esq., in the chair.—The president introduced Prof. Mendeléef as the great authority on economical questions in Russia, whose views on protection had of late years shaped the policy of the Government.—Mr. Wesselsky, correspondent of the Novoe Vremya, addressed a speech of welcome to the venerable professor, who, he said, commanded the admiration of all countries for his deep researches and valuable discoveries in chemistry and other branches of science.—Prof. Mendeléef explained that Mr. Vishnegradsky, the late Minister of Finance, and himself had been fellow-students in their youth in technological subjects. The idea that protection would be for the interest of Russia was suggested by the fact that agriculture did not suffice to maintain an increasing and impoverished population, because corn, instead of rising, was constantly falling in price, in consequence of the great production of that staple, not only in Russia, but also in foreign countries, especially in the United States and British dependencies. He referred to the firm footing England was obtaining in Africa, which continent he regarded, on account of its rich soil and beneficent climate, as the future granary of the world. For these reasons it became necessary to devise a new method which might increase the scanty income of the agricultural classes, which formed the great bulk of the Russian people. The professor pointed to the lessons of history, which show how other countries had been enriched. He considered that the laws which gave a monopoly to the English merchant-fleet, and other exclusive measures, had contributed, two and a half centuries ago (when English trade and industry were about as advanced as they are now in Russia), to strengthen the industrial and commercial power of this country. Under these circumstances Russian statesmen came to the conclusion that a protective tariff which might restrain the importation of foreign goods, and a system of bounties to foster the growing energy of home industries, would be the best system to enrich the rural labourer and to give him the means of purchasing bread, which was becoming cheaper all over the world. Prof. Mendeléef dwelt with satisfaction on the immense development of naphtha in the Caucasus, and of raw cotton in Central Asia, which he ascribed to the duties that the Russian Government had placed on American petroleum and cotton, which had formerly been imported free. Petroleum, instead of being imported, was now exported from Russia, while cotton and other produce would in a few years attain the same satisfactory results, enriching thereby the nation and the government, and supplying other countries with useful materials on a large scale. Protection would therefore benefit all,—

Mr. James Wilson said he was a free-trader, and doubted the practical wisdom of protection, which favoured one class of the community at the expense of another, instead of adopting a policy which should be equally just to all, and which would therefore ultimately prove beneficial for the interests of the greatest number. He argued that sound economical policy was to follow nature, and to produce manufactures which were the natural outcome of a country, instead of adopting artificial measures in the shape of protection and monopoly. How far such measures could give good results in Russia time alone would prove.—Mr. E. Delmar Morgan also questioned the advantages of protection, and failed to see that it had done as much for the naphtha industry (which was mainly the result of abundant natural oil-fields) as had been represented.—Mr. W. L. Thornton called himself a fair trader who was interested in manufacturing establishments at St. Petersburg. He considered that a protective policy was necessary for the welfare of a young country like Russia, in order to create and encourage industry which could not have been organised without that assistance. He did not think that the establishment of some of the leading manufactures in consequence of protection was in the long run detrimental to the interests of the Russian people.—Mr. Marval brought forward examples to prove that protection alone was insufficient to bring about the desired results. The development of communications, the education of the people in industrial arts, and many other conditions were necessary for the success of Russian industry. As a proof in point, he showed how the immense forests of Russia, perhaps the most extensive in the world, gave little profit; while other countries, where wood was scarce and expensive, used it for the production of acetate of lime, which they actually imported with advantage into Russia and obtained charcoal at the same time for their home market.—In closing the discussion and thanking Prof. Mendeleef for his instructive address, the president said that the old question whether England had become wealthy in consequence or in spite of protection had never been settled, and that many important factors, such as skilled labour, were at least as necessary as protective tariffs in order to develop profitable industries on a sound basis in a new country. Russian kindness and hospitality were spoken of in high and grateful terms by Mr. Wilson and Mr. Cazalet, who had numerous friends and connexions in Russia. The expressions of good feeling which this society addressed to the professor was intended to be conveyed through him to the whole Russian nation.

FINE ART.

THE EUGÈNE PIOT TRUST.

Monuments et Mémoires. Publiés par l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-lettres (Fondation Eugène Piot) sous la direction de Georges Perrot et Robert de Lasteyrie. Tome premier. (Paris.)

M. Piot was a man who possessed some of the choicest gifts of an amateur—a wide and cultivated taste, a singularly correct judgment in Greek art, and, by all accounts, a no less accurate appreciation of the skill of the Egyptians, Assyrians, and Byzantines, the Middle Ages, and much else. M. Perrot has given a kindly, even an enthusiastic, sketch of him in the introductory pages of this volume, passing lightly and genially over what I would have called his occasionally saturnine manner. If he was a little grasping at a bargain, the reason of that has since been explained by the discovery of his cherished ambition to bequeath as much as possible to the Academy of Inscriptions. And truly the Academy has displayed a beautiful gratitude: first, in the anxious consideration it has bestowed on how best to utilise the fund with a view to the honouring of M. Piot; and secondly, in its endeavours to obtain for the projected publication of a series of Monuments and Mémoires the assistance of two most competent editors and a number of writers known for their services to one or other section of archaeology, some of them indeed widely known. In this first volume M. Maspero represents Egypt and M. Heuzey Assyria. Greece falls to MM. Holleaux, Pottier, Collignon, Héron de Villefosse, and Michon. M. Baholon takes late Roman and Sassanian, M. G. Schlumberger, Byzantine art. The plates have been executed in a manner worthy of the memory of a fastidious amateur. The text is agreeably concise and spirited.

From a Greek point of view, the most important contribution of this volume is the marble head of the Choiseur-Gouffier type lately acquired by the Louvre, on which M. Héron de Villefosse writes with characteristic clearness and sobriety. M. Michon, in his part, is more hesitating. Had he asserted with greater emphasis the divergence from the type of Polycleitos which he notes in the bronze head from Beneventum in the Louvre (Plates 10-11), he would have met with the approval of many. M. Collignon has found a relief from his history of Greek sculpture in turning to his old love for the painted vases. The specimen with which he deals is one which the Louvre may well be proud of possessing. It is one of those large vases which were used at marriage ceremonies, and also to mark the tombs of unmarried persons, in which latter case the subjects painted on the vases were, as here, scenes connected with death. M. Pottier has not chosen a vase of sufficient importance to bring out his pre-eminant qualities as a writer on Greek ceramics. Nor is M. Holleaux seen at his best, though his article, like that of M. Pottier, has a certain amount of interest to the archaeologist.

We have every reason to hope that subsequent volumes in this series will maintain the high standard of this first volume, in which case archaeologists and amateurs alike will be highly satisfied.

A. S. MURRAY.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE following exhibitions will open next week: a collection of paintings of Egypt by Mr. Mortimer Menpes, at the Dowdeswell Galleries; and a collection of pictures by Troyen, at the Goupil Gallery.

AN exhibition of pictures by Cornish painters principally of Newlyn and St. Ives, will be held in the Nottingham Castle Museum during the coming autumn. The director (Mr. G. Harry Wallis) has already been able to obtain the loan of several important works, from private and public collections, by Mr. Stanhope Forbes, Mr. Branby, Mr. Adrian Stokes, Mr. Chevallier Tayler, Mr. T. C. Gotch, Mr. Napier Hemy, &c.

MR. CHARLES J. CLARK, of Lincoln's Inn-fields, the publisher of Wiltshire Notes and Queries, announces for issue by subscription a somewhat elaborate work on Stonehenge and its Earthworks, by Mr. Edgar Barclay. After giving a description of the monument and a summary of the various views that have been held regarding it, the author proceeds to expound a theory of his own, which he brought before the British Archaeological Association last summer. Briefly, this is that Stonehenge is a British temple, raised by the same race which made the barrows in the vicinity, subject to influence from the south, and probably in the time of Agricola. The theory is mainly based upon a new view of the orientation of the stones. The book will be abundantly illustrated with plans, drawings, and diagrams, and also with colotype reproductions of a series of landscape pictures painted by the author himself.

NEXT week Messrs. Sotheby will be selling—on Monday a valuable collection of original drawings by Rowlandson and Cruikshank; and on the following days a long series of proof impressions of prints by Bartolozzi, which have been brought together by an American amateur.

THE annual meeting of the Hellenic Society will take place at 22, Albemarle-street, on Monday next, June 18, at 5 p.m., when Prof. Jebb will preside and deliver an address on "The Progress of Hellenic Studies during the Past Year."

THERE was opened at Manchester, on Thursday of this week, an exhibition of works by deceased water-colour painters, which have been acquired, through purchase or gift, by the Whitworth Institute. The exhibition also includes a series of drawings lent by Sir E. Burne Jones, and other examples of his work.

AMONG articles of more than usual interest which have recently appeared in the pages of the Art Journal may be noted "London by Canaletto" (May), by Mr. R. R. Holmes, the Royal Librarian, with its six facsimiles of original drawings, which form part of the splendid and little-known collection of pictures, &c., by the artist, which once belonged to Joseph Smith, whilome Consul at Venice, and is now at Windsor Castle. "The New Sculpture" is an article (soon, we hope, to be followed by another), by Mr. Edmund Gosse, on a subject with which he always writes with knowledge and taste. The current number (June) opens with a paper by Dr. Richter on Leonardo da Vinci, in which the "Virgin and the Rocks" in the National Gallery is severely criticised, in comparison with the picture in the Louvre, and in the light of a document which has recently come to light (see Archivio Storico Lombardo, anno. xx. iv.) Dr. Richter concludes that the picture in the National Gallery is "a copy with slight variations" prepared by an assistant in the master's atelier. Even if we accept Dr. Richter's reasoning, we think he underrates the value of our picture, which, whatever its defects, is one of the most beautiful things in the world. But we have too little research in our art magazines not to note with much satisfaction the commencement of a series of papers by so learned and careful an art expert as Dr. Richter on the pictures in the National Gallery.

THE last part of the Jahrbuch der Königlich Preussischen Kunstsammlungen would be specially interesting, if only for the facsimile of the newly-discovered portrait of Albert Dürer, by himself (a pen and ink sketch), in the University Library at Erlangen, formerly ascribed to Schongauer. The comparison (afforded by other illustrations in the text) with the known portraits of Dürer is sufficient confirmation of the present ascription, even without the convincing commentary of W. von Seidlitz. The articles of A. G. Meyer on the Colleoni Chapel at Bergamo, and the continuation by R. Forster of his papers on the Calumny of Apelles (the description of which by Lucian stimulated the invention of so many artists of the Renaissance), are among the other valuable contributions to the current number of this excellent organ of artistic research.

MUSIC.

MASSENET'S "WERTHER," ETC.

THIS Lyric Opera, in four acts and five tableaux, with libretto by MM. E. Blau, Paul Milliet and Georges Hartmann, and music by M. J. Massenet, is founded on Goethe's once famous novel. The librettists have provided the composer with a book offering strong situations and effective contrasts; but they could only deal with Werther's passionate love for the simple-minded Charlotte, and with certain accessory events as frame-work to the story, and could not, in an opera-book, follow Goethe, who, with master-hand, has turned a love story of quite ordinary character into a powerful romance. By direct and indirect means the poet made Werther and Lotte living, thinking, feeling beings; on the stage they are little more than puppets; he passionate, she a "bread and butter" doll. In the first act the children singing their Christmas hymn, the children's supper, the old-fashioned villages and the "Klopstock" lovers, also the garden scene at the close, produce a quaint, pleasing effect; and the general homeliness of the book reminds one somewhat of "L'Amico Fritz." The music throughout this act is delightfully appropriate to the various situations; one may, indeed, say the same thing of the whole opera. M. Massenet shows great power of characterisation. To name only one instance, what a striking contrast there is between the music allotted to the pensive Charlotte and to her chirpy sister Sophie! And, again, what self-restraint he always shows! The convivial pair Johann and Schmidt and the "Klopstock" lovers are amusing, because they are never allowed to weary us by their presence. The various episodes of the play, kept within such moderate bounds by both librettists and composers, set off to wonderful advantage the fever-heat passion of the hero, and the melancholy of the maiden. And M. Massenet displays harmonic skill and, especially in orchestral colouring, the hand of a master. The first tableau of the last act has no action, no singing. The houses with lighted windows, and the falling snow, tell of merry Christmastide, but the orchestra pours forth sorrowful, passionate strains; for in one house a youth, weary of life's disappointments, is about to lay violent hands upon himself. There is, it is true, a touch of melodrama here; but for all that, it appeals powerfully to the emotions. The composer, during the course of the work, makes use of representative themes; but, as compared with Wagner, in an extremely mild way. It may be said of every composer of note of the present day that he is influenced by Wagner; some more, some less. The lowest form in which that influence manifests itself is imitation, the highest is assimilation. Massenet lies between the two extremes. The performance of "Werther" was, on the whole, good. Mme. Emma Eames, as the Charlotte, sang well, but was somewhat cold in her acting; she was at her best in the third act. M. Jean de Reszko was in magnificent voice, but as actor he scarcely gave full expression to the sorrows of Werther. Mme. Sigurd Arnoldson was an agreeable, lively Sophie. M. Albers was a good Albert, and M. Castelnary a first-rate Bailli; and both distinguished themselves by the clearness of their enunciation. Signori Corsi and De Vaschetti played the small parts of Schmidt and Johann in a lively, amusing manner. Signor Mancinelli, by his vigilance and energy, contributed much towards the success of the evening.

The performance of "Carmen" on Friday (June 8) deserves a word of mention. Mme. Calvé in the title-rôle is really wonderful. She is all life, all movement. In the first act she seems to be slightly overdoing her part—i.e., acting; after that she is the real Carmen, a woman for whom, in spite of all her fickleness, one feels sympathy. On the following evening (Saturday), Mme. Melba appeared as Gilda in "Rigoletto," one of the three operas which long ago won for Verdi European fame; and her singing was extremely fine. Signor Ancona was good as Rigoletto.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

RECENT CONCERTS.

M. SAINT-SAËNS appeared last Thursday week at St. James's Hall in the triple capacity of composer, conductor, and pianist. In the afternoon, at the Wolff Musical Union, the whole programme was devoted to his music, including the early pianoforte Trio (Op. 18), the pianoforte Quartet (Op. 41), and the Sonata for pianoforte and violin (Op. 75)—three works which justify the high esteem in which M. Saint-Saëns is held as a composer of chamber-music. As a gifted and trained musician, he always presents his thoughts clearly, and develops them skilfully. At moments inspiration may not be very fervid, but the workmanship conceals to a great extent any deficiency in this respect: indeed, in his power of development M. Saint-Saëns reminds one of Raff at his best. In the above-mentioned works the pianist was ably supported by MM. Johannes Wolff and J. Hollmann. M. Oudin sang with great refinement three songs, in the third of which, "Amour Viril," characteristic words are set to music of a similar character. In the evening, at the sixth Philharmonic Concert, M. Saint-Saëns conducted his own Symphony in C minor. The work is scored for a large orchestra, also for organ and pianoforte. He tells us in his analytical notes that "symphonic works should now be allowed to benefit by the progress of modern instrumentation." It was owing to that progress that the harpsichord, the old pianoforte, disappeared from the symphonic orchestra, and the introduction of the pianoforte scarcely seems a step in advance, so far, indeed, as M. Saint-Saëns' work is concerned, the instrument is employed to little or no effect. There is a feeling of effort about the Symphony, so that in spite of some fine passages and clever orchestration, especially in the last movement, it is on the whole very disappointing. M. Saint-Saëns may be "allowed to benefit by the progress of modern orchestration," but over-sounding brass is distressing to sensitive ears. His Concerto in B minor for violin and orchestra, a work of smaller proportions, but extremely refined and pleasing, was well interpreted by Mlle. Frida Scotta.

On Friday afternoon Mr. David Bispham celebrated the eighty-fourth anniversary of Schumann's birth by a "Schumann" recital, in which he was assisted by Mrs. Henschel, Miss Marguerite Hall, Mr. Shakespeare, and Miss Fanny Davies. The programme, including songs (of which Mr. Bispham sang no less than eleven), duets, and pianoforte solos, was one of exceptional attraction; it concluded with the "Spanisches Liederspiel." From an educational point of view, the programme would have been of greater value had it but been arranged in chronological order. All the artists rendered justice to themselves and to the music. Mrs. Berzon accompanied Mr. Bispham in three songs extremely well on the harp. Miss Davies played a clever posthumous "Presto," in G minor, and in selected numbers of the "Davidsbündlertänze" proved herself a true pupil of Madame Schumann. Mr. Henry Bird played with admirable skill and refinement. Song and singer are always thought of, but one is apt to forget how much depends upon the accompanist.

On Monday afternoon Mme. Menter gave a pianoforte recital at St. James's Hall. It is difficult to understand why pianists are so fond of Chopin's B minor Sonata. It has a few fine moments: the Scherzo is characteristic, and the principal theme of the slow movement is lovely; but if the first and last movements were to make unto themselves wings and fly away, the loss to musical art would not be very great. Mme. Menter played various short pieces by Beethoven, Scarlatti, Sapellnikof, Tschai-kowsky, and her master and friend Liszt, displaying her many excellent qualities of touch and technique. But why did she finish with Liszt's transcription of the Overture to "Tannhäuser"? Bülow, than whom no greater admirer of the Hungarian pianist ever lived, is reported to have said to his pupils, "Never play me transcriptions by Liszt, only his original pieces." Sound advice, though perhaps one might admit as exception the fine transcription of Schubert's "Erlkönig." No one doubts Mme. Menter's powers as an executant, and there are many pieces in which she can display them to the greatest advantage. Why, then, should she spoil a great Overture; for rapid scales, astonishing octave passages, and other marvels of execution, only make one long for the orchestral colour of which, with a pianoforte, one perceives nothing.

Master Huberman played Beethoven's violin Concerto at his third concert at the Princes' Hall on Wednesday afternoon. It was an astonishing performance for one so young in years, but those who have charge of him ought to show better judgment in the selection of pieces. Mr. Isidor Cohn's concert on Wednesday evening at St. James's Hall deserves mention, but we cannot this week do justice to the new "Dumky" pianoforte Trio by Dvorák, which was performed by Mr. Cohn in conjunction with Lady Hallé and Mr. Whitehouse. The work is one of great freshness, charm, and individuality; and, if we mistake not, it will often be heard. Miss Lydia Müller sang German Lieder in a most artistic manner. A successful concert was given at the Alhambra Theatre on Wednesday afternoon for the Société nationale des Professeurs de Français in England. Many distinguished artists took part in the long programme; Mme. Jane May, Mme. Thénard and M. Max O'Rell also gave recitations, which were highly appreciated.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE hymn to Apollo, recently discovered at Delphi, together with other remains of ancient Greek music, will be sung by Mr. W. H. Wing at the Queen's Hall on Monday next, at 5 p.m., when Mr. C. F. Abdy Williams will also give a short account of Greek and Roman music.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

"Very frank in tone, and modern in application."

The Bookman.

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Fumival Street, E.C.

ARCHD. CONSTABLE & CO.'S LIST.

Dedicated by special permission to Her Majesty the Queen.

CONSTABLE'S HAND ATLAS OF INDIA.

Prepared by J. G. BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.G.S.
AN ABSTRACT OF THE 1891 CENSUS

AND
An Index of 10,000 Names are Included.
Crown 3vo (7½ in. by 5½ in.), half roan and in full cloth, gilt top, 14s.

A MONOGRAPH

ON THE

COINS OF THE HINDU STATES OF RAJPUTANA.

By Surgeon-Capt. W. W. WEBB.

With 12 Plates and a Map in Colours, showing the Mint Towns in Rajputana.

Royal 8vo, cloth gilt, 16s. net.

THE ORIGINAL INHABITANTS OF INDIA.

By Dr. GUSTAV OPPERT.

Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 20s.

THE MOHAMMADAN DYNASTIES.

By STANLEY LANE-POOLE.

Containing Chronological Tables of all the 118 DYNASTIES OF THE MOHAMMADAN EMPIRE,

From the foundation of the CALIPHATE TO THE PRESENT DAY.

With brief Historical Notices of each, Pedigrees and Tables of their connection, two coloured Synoptic Charts showing their relative positions in History and Geography, and an Index of all the Rulers.

Crown 8vo, pp. xxii. and 352. Price 12s. net.

ARCHD. CONSTABLE & CO.,
14, Parliament Street, S.W.

JUST READY. THE STRAND MAGAZINE

For JUNE.

EDITED BY GEORGE NEWNES,

CONTAINING

AN ILLUSTRATED INTERVIEW WITH SIR FRANCIS and LADY JEUNE. By HARRY HOW.

FORGERS and BEGGING-LETTER WRITERS: being the Fourth Article on Crimes and Criminals.

THE QUEEN'S YACHT. By Mrs. M. GRIFFITH.

MARTIN HEWITT, INVESTIGATOR. IV.—The Case of the Dixon Torpedo. By ARTHUR MORRISON.

COUNT FERDINAND DE LESSEPS. By his God-daughter.

STORIES from the DIARY of a DOCTOR. XII.—The Ponsenby Diamonds. By the Authors of "THE MEDICINE LADY."

THE BEAUTY COLLEGE CO. By J. F. SULLIVAN.

With other Articles and Stories.

116 pages, with 143 Illustrations. Price 6d., post free, 9d.

THE PICTURE MAGAZINE

For JUNE.

CONTAINING

PORTRAITS of 42 FAMOUS CRICKETERS,

6 Reproductions of Mr. H. P. Robinson's famous Photographs.

And about 200 other Illustrations.

Price 6d., post free 8d.

ALSO READY.

Vol. VII. of THE STRAND MAGAZINE,

672 pages, with upwards of 1,000 Illustrations. Cloth gilt, AND

Vol. III. of THE PICTURE MAGAZINE,

380 pages of nothing but Pictures. Cloth gilt.

Price 6s. each. Post free, 6s. 6d. each.

GEORGE NEWNES, LTD., LONDON, W.C.

STANFORD'S TOURIST LIST.

STANFORD'S 2s. SERIES OF TOURIST GUIDES.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, with Maps, &c.

Bedfordshire.
Berkshire.
Cambridgeshire.
Channel Islands.
Cornwall.
Derbyshire.
Devon, North.
Devon, South.
Dorsetshire.
English Lakes.
Gloucestershire.
Hampshire.
Hertfordshire.

Kent.
London (Round).
Norfolk.
Somersetshire.
Suffolk.
Surrey.
Sussex.
Warwickshire.
Wiltshire.
Worcestershire.
Wye (The).
Yorkshire (E. and N).
Yorkshire (West).

JENKINSON'S PRACTICAL GUIDES.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, with Maps, &c.

THE ENGLISH LAKES. Ninth Edition.

With 8 Maps. 6s.

THE ISLE of WIGHT. Fifth Edition.

With 2 Maps. 2s. 6d.

NORTH WALES. Fourth Edition.

With 2 Maps. 6s. 6d.

NORTH WALES. Smaller Guide.

Third Edition. With 3 Maps. 3s. 6d.

THE ISLE of MAN. Third Edition.

With Map. 6s.

CARLISLE GILSLAND, THE ROMAN

WALL, &c. With Map. 5s.

ENGLISH CATHEDRALS. By the Rev.

W. J. LOFTIE, B.A. With 29 Plans. Limp cloth, 5s.

NORWAY. Willson's Handy Guide.

Third Edition, with Corrections for 1894. 7 Maps. Limp cloth, 5s.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD,
26 AND 27, COCKSPUR STREET, CHARING CROSS, S.W.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY

74, New Oxford Street, London,

Is remarkable for its Display of Copies of Celebrated Works of

THE GREAT MASTERS.

Reproductions of the most important Paintings in the following Collections:—

NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON,
BUCKINGHAM PALACE,
WINDSOR CASTLE,
UFFIZI, FLORENCE,
FLORENCE,
ACADEMY OF FINE ARTS,
FLORENCE,
AMSTERDAM,
THE HAQUE,

LOUVRE, PARIS,
LUXEMBOURG, PARIS,
ROYAL GALLERY, DRESDEN,
HERMITAGE, ST. PETERSBURG,
BURG,
PRADO, MADRID,
VATICAN, ROME,
HAARLEM, FRANKFORT,

AND

THE PARIS SALONS.

A LARGE COLLECTION of EXAMPLES of MODERN FRENCH and ENGLISH ART in SELECTED FRAMES suitable for HALL, LIBRARY, DRAWING-ROOM BOUDOIR, &c.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

AUTOTYPE: a DECORATIVE and EDUCATIONAL ART.

NEW PAMPHLET—FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

MEYER HANSTÄNGEL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process for the reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.
Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand, greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 31, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

Gallons of Lather

ARE PRODUCED BY A STICK OF

VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP.

VINOLIA SHAVING STICKS, 6d., 1/-, 1/6, 2/-, and 2/6.

VINOLIA SHAVING CAKES, 1/-, 2/-, and 3/-.

Fifth Edition, Revised and Illustrated, price 4s.

THE FROG: an Introduction to Anatomy, Histology and Embryology. By A. MILNE MARSHALL, M.D., D.Sc., F.R.S., late Professor of Zoology in the Owens College Victoria University.

Manchester: J. E. CONNISH, 16, St. Ann's Square.
London: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 13, Waterloo Place.

THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S GARDENS, Regent's Park, are OPEN DAILY (except Sundays), from 9 a.m. till sunset. Admission, 1s. on Mondays 6d., children always 6d. The Insect House is now open. A Military Band will perform in the Gardens at 4 o'clock, every Saturday till further notice.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free FRANCIS RAYNES-CROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also.

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

MESSRS. MACLEHOSE & SONS, GLASGOW.

THIS DAY, 2 vols., with Map, crown 8vo, 10s. net.

LITERARY ASSOCIATIONS OF THE ENGLISH LAKES.

By Rev. H. D. RAWNSLEY,

Honorary Canon of Carlisle.

VOL. I.—CUMBERLAND, KESWICK, and SOUTHEY'S COUNTRY.

VOL. II.—WESTMORELAND, WINDERMERE, and the HAUNTS of WORDSWORTH.

"Canon Rawnsley's 'Literary Associations of the English Lakes' is second to none of these (Ruskin's 'Stones of Venice,' Hare's volumes on 'Florence and Venice,' Ford's 'Handbook to Spain,' &c.). The season is just coming when thousands of pilgrims will wend their way, some heedlessly, many reverently, to 'Wordsworth-country and Southey-land,' and we can only assure them that Canon Rawnsley's guide-book will add a thousand-fold to the interest of every step they take there, and double the delight of every sight they see." Leader in the Daily Chronicle.

"The summer tourist who may wish to repeople Lake land with its eminent people of the past will find much help in this book with its good map and index. Whosoever he may want he will be pretty sure to find."—Daily News.

"The book is always delightfully written. It has a map and an admirable index of persons and places. It is just such a book as every one who visits the Lake District desires; and will please both those who are able to walk over the classic ground it covers, and the large number whose knowledge of its beauties, natural and acquired, must be derived from books alone." Scotsman.

Crown 8vo, 236 pp., 4s. 6d. net.

PROFESSOR MACCUNN.—ETHICS of CITIZENSHIP. By JOHN MACCUNN, M.A., Professor of Philosophy in University College, Liverpool.

"'Ethics of Citizenship' is a little book which, for general usefulness, far exceeds the massive tomes in which sociological philosophers are accustomed to impound the darkness of their cogitations. The book starts the reader on clear paths to conclusions on which conduct depends, and gives him for guidance no will-o'-the-wisp to dance before him, but a lantern to carry in his hand."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"There are ideas, and the courage of them, in Professor MacCunn's 'Ethics of Citizenship'; indeed, this scholarly little treatise is mixed with brains. The book is written with conscience as well as with brains, and it may be described as a philosophic plea on behalf of a better, because a more spiritual, conception of the sphere of the claims and duties of democracy."—Speaker.

"This is one of the best books of our time. It is not large, but in its way it is great. It is not lengthy, but it is replete; and full of the best things." Leader in Liverpool Daily Post, June 11.

Demy 8vo, 612 pp., 10s. 6d. net.

DR. MACKINTOSH.—THE NATURAL HISTORY of the CHRISTIAN RELIGION. Being a Study of the Doctrine of Jesus as Developed from Judaism and Converted into Dogma. By WILLIAM MACKINTOSH, M.A., D.D.

"No more revolutionary book has ever appeared in Scotland. Dr. Mackintosh's positions are stated with an almost brutal plainness which leaves no room for misunderstanding." Glasgow Herald.

"It will be impossible for his readers to deny the high intellectual quality of this book, and the truly Christian temper in which it is written. It is in this respect an example of how much may be conceded on the dogmatic side of Christianity without losing its real essence." Christian World.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

PROFESSOR MACCALLUM.—TENNYSON'S IOYLLS of the KING and ARTHURIAN STORY from the SIXTEENTH CENTURY. By M. W. MACCALLUM, M.A., Professor of Modern Literature in the University of Sydney.

"In regard to Mr. MacCallum's criticism of the 'Idylls' separately or as a series, it is to pay him a high compliment, but one well merited, to affirm that admirers of the poet will lose both pleasure and profit if they fail to avail themselves of this masterly book."—Speaker.

"The history of a great legend and its literary fruits has seldom been written more conscientiously and learnedly."—Times.

"It has been left to Mr. MacCallum to produce a study of the Arthurian story in special reference to Tennyson's attitude towards it, which is at once the most conscientious and deliberate of any of its kind."—Academy.

Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

MR. BALDWIN BROWN.—STOICS and SAINTS: Lectures on the Later Heathen Moralists and on some Aspects of the Life of the Mediaeval Church. By the late JAMES BALDWIN BROWN, M.A., Minister of Brixton Independent Church.

"We can say advisedly that the absolute value of these lectures is great."—Guardian.

"The ripe scholarship, the keen historical discernment, the width of view, the warmth of generous enthusiasm, the lofty and almost austere conscience, which were characteristic of their author, are all apparent in these noble lectures."—Independent.

FIFTH THOUSAND, crown 8vo, 6s.

PRINCIPAL CAIRD.—AN INTRODUCTION to the PHILOSOPHY of RELIGION. By the Very Rev. JOHN CAIRD, D.D., LL.D., Principal and Vice-Chancellor of the University of Glasgow.

Fcap. 8vo, pp. 288, 5s. net.

MR. JACKS, M.P.—LESSING'S NATHAN the WISE. Translated by WILLIAM JACKS, M.P. With an Introduction by Archdeacon FARRAR, and 8 Etchings by William Strang.

Folio, £2 2s. net.

MR. JAMES PATERSON.—NITHSDALE. A Series of Reproductions in Photogravure from Water-Colour Drawings. By JAMES PATERSON, R.S.W. With Accompanying Letterpress.

Large-Paper Edition, Proofs on French and Japanese, £5 5s. net.
Ordinary Impressions £2 2s. net.

"A thoroughly delightful volume."—Times.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

PROFESSOR JONES.—BROWNING as a PHILOSOPHICAL and RELIGIOUS TEACHER. By HENRY JONES, M.A., Professor of Logic and Metaphysics in the University of St. Andrews.

"Mr. Jones is a diligent and appreciative student of Browning, and he handles philosophical topics suggested by his subject with firm grasp and clear insight."—Times.

"A most absorbing volume. It is fresh, thorough, and judicious without dryness." Christian Leader.

IN THE PRESS.

PROFESSOR JONES.—THE PHILOSOPHY of LOTZE. By HENRY JONES, M.A., Professor of Logic and Metaphysics in the University of St. Andrews.

WORKS BY THE MASTER OF BALLIOL.

THIS DAY, SECOND EDITION, 2 vols., post 8vo, cloth, 14s. net.

THE EVOLUTION of RELIGION.

THE OIFFORD LECTURES DELIVERED BEFORE THE UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREWS FOR 1890-92.

By EDWARD CAIRD, M.A. Oxon., LL.D. D.C.L.,

Master of Balliol College, Oxford, late Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Glasgow.

"We believe it would be difficult to over-estimate the importance of this book. It may serve, as no English book has yet served, to mediate between philosophy and life."—Mind.

"The most valuable contribution made to speculative theology for many years past." Academy.

2 vols., demy 8vo, 32s.

THE CRITICAL PHILOSOPHY of IMMANUEL KANT.

By EDWARD CAIRD.

"At last we have in English a critical exposition of 'The Critical Philosophy of Kant' which, for thoroughness and ability, can hold up its head before any similar attempt in other languages."—Academy.

2 vols., crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

ESSAYS in LITERATURE and PHILOSOPHY.

By EDWARD CAIRD.

Vol. I.—Dante in his Relation to the Theology and Ethics of the Middle Ages—Goethe and Philosophy—Rousseau—Wordsworth—The Problem of Philosophy at the Present Time—The Genius of Carlyle.

Vol. II.—Cartesianism—Metaphysics.

Each Volume as yet had separately, price 5s. net.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, price 5s. net.

THE SOCIAL PHILOSOPHY and RELIGION of COMTE.

By EDWARD CAIRD.

"Serves as an admirable introduction to the Hegelian treatment of history, religion, and the State."—Athenaeum.

Fcap. 4to, 19s. 6d. net, with 5 Etchings by D. Y. Cameron, 4 Portraits and numerous Illustrations.

DR. MATHER.—TWO GREAT SCOTSMEN—THE BROTHERS WILLIAM and JOHN HUNTER. By GEORGE R. MATHER, M.D., F.R.S.G.

"Dr. Mather has been the first to bring together in one volume the events in the lives of the two brothers. His book is a most interesting one."—Academy.

"The book is copiously illustrated and well repays careful perusal."—Lancet.

FOURTH EDITION, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

PROFESSOR JEBB.—HOMER: an Introduction to the Iliad and the Odyssey. For the use of Schools and Colleges. By R. C. JEBB, Litt.D., M.P., Professor of Greek in the University of Cambridge.

GLASGOW: JAMES MACLEHOSE & SONS, Publishers to the University.

LONDON AND NEW YORK: MACMILLAN & CO.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1155.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JUNE 23, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

CLIMBING AND EXPLORATION IN THE KARAKORAM-HIMALAYAS.

By WILLIAM MARTIN CONWAY, M.A., F.S.A., F.R.G.S.

With 300 Illustrations by A. D. McCORMICK, and a Map. In 1 vol., super-royal 8vo, 733 pp., cloth, gilt top, 3ls. 6d. net.

Times.—"A splendid record of a daring and adventurous scientific expedition."

Standard (Leader).—"The lover of art for art's sake will find in the numerous illustrations some of the most beautiful transcripts from nature that have ever adorned a book of travels."

Athenæum.—"In Mr. Conway we have an observer of men—a whole heaven removed from the ordinary globe-trotter."

EDWARD WHYMPE in the Daily Chronicle.—"It will long hold a chief place in the affections of those whose hearts are in the mountains."

W. A. B. COOLIDGE in the Pall Mall Gazette.—"The book is not merely the narrative of the best organised and most successful mountaineering expedition as yet made, it is a most valuable and minute account, based on first-hand evidence, of a most fascinating region of the heaven-soaring Himalayas."

REGINALD HUGHES in the Academy.—"A lucid record of an explorer's experiences, of scientific work achieved, of mountaineering difficulties surmounted, of scenes of beauty enjoyed.....It has a freshness and immediateness of impression, a plainness and buoyancy and atmosphere, usually conspicuous by their absence in works of the kind."

CLINTON DENT in the Westminster Gazette.—"Mr. Conway's book will live, and it deserves to live, for it is a graphic record of good work done; of difficulties overcome by pluck, judgment, and determination; of adventure in an almost new country; of novel mountaineering experiences, all set forth with extreme literary skill."

Daily Telegraph.—"Perhaps no book of recent date gives a simpler, or at the same time more effective, picture of the truly wonderful mountain regions lying beyond the northern boundary of India than Mr. Conway's striking volume.....Unquestionably valuable contributions to our knowledge of the world.....Mr. Conway's narrative deserves the fullest praise as the record of a brilliant and successful journey."

Daily News.—"As a history of daring and endurance, combined with unfailing resourcefulness, alert intelligence, variety of knowledge, and qualification among its members, and artistic taste, it is a production of which Mr. Conway's countrymen may be proud."

PIERS PLOWMAN, 1363—1399: a Contribution to the History of English Mysticism. By J. J.

JUSSERAND, Author of "English Wayfaring Life," &c. Photogravure Frontispiece and 25 other Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 12s.—Also, a FINE EDITION on Japan Paper. Demy 8vo, vellum binding, gilt lettered, 21s. net.

"Mr. Jusserand has once more made English literature his debtor by his admirable monograph on Piers Plowman.....It is a masterly contribution to the history of our literature, inspired by wide study and rare delicacy of critical appreciation."—Times.

"The work is marked by the felicitous insight and vivid suggestiveness that charm us in previous writings of the author.....Extremely interesting illustrations."—Saturday Review.

LIVES OF TWELVE BAD MEN: Original Studies of Eminent Scoundrels. By Various Hands.

Edited by THOMAS SECCOMBE. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

CONTENTS.—JAMES HEPBURN—Sir EDWARD KELLY—MATTHEW HOPKINS—GEORGE JEFFREYS—TITUS OATES—SIMON FRASER—Colonel F. CHARTERIS—JONATHAN WILD—JAMES MACLAINE—GEORGE ROBERT FITZGERALD—THOMAS GRIFFITHS WAINSWRIGHT—EDWARD KELLY—APPENDIX—INDEX.

"Each life has been put into a competent and, if the word can be used without ambiguity, a sympathetic hand.....There has been a good deal of careful research, and the writing is crisp, with original and audacious turns of phrase suitable to the subject."—Scotsman.

AMONG MEN AND HORSES. By Captain Hayes, Author of "The Points of a Horse." With Portraits and numerous other Illustrations. 1 vol., demy 8vo, cloth, price 16s. [Next week.]

THE MERMAID SERIES.—New Volume.

THE COMPLETE PLAYS OF RICHARD STEELE. Edited by G. A. Aitken. Photogravure Portraits.

Post 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.—Also an Edition de Luxe, printed on hand-made paper, bound in buckram, gilt top, price 10s. 6d. net.

"This is a model edition, and a boon to students of the drama. Mr. Aitken has done his work well, with patience and judgment."—Globe.

DRAWING-ROOM DUOLOGUES. Written by Fred. M. Simpson. Illustrated by Maurice Greiffenhagen.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A very acceptable volume. Mr. Simpson writes dialogue in a style that is at once printed and natural, and it cannot be doubted that all—or nearly all—the dramatic pieces contained in the collection would act just as well as they read.....Assuredly this volume is welcome."—Daily Telegraph.

SOUTH AFRICA: the Cape Colony, Natal, Orange Free State, South African Republic, and all other

Territories South of the Zambesi. By GEORGE M. THEAL, of the Cape Colonial Civil Service. (The New Volume of "The Story of the Nations.") Maps and Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"A thoroughly workmanlike and readable volume."—Daily Telegraph.

THE RAIDERS. By S. R. Crockett, Author of "The Stickit Minister." Fourth Edition. Cloth, gilt

top, 6s.

"Of capital merit."—Saturday Review. "A strikingly realistic romance."—Morning Post. "Indubitably a fine work."—St. James's Gazette.

THE STICKIT MINISTER. By S. R. Crockett. Sixth Edition. Cloth extra, 5s.

"Full of strength and charms. Humour and pathos mingle with delightful effect."—Speaker.

CATHARINE FURZE: a Novel. By Mark Rutherford. Third Edition. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.

"Mark Rutherford is a writer of extraordinary force."—Athenæum.

"Both in treatment and in style 'Catharine Furze' recalls Miss Austen's novels.....A close comparison would not result unfavourably to Mark Rutherford."—Times.

BRAND. By Henrik Ibsen. A New Translation by F. E. Garrett. (The New Volume of "The Cameo Series.") Front. Half-bound paper boards, 3s. 6d. net.—Also an Edition printed on hand-made paper, with a Photogravure Frontispiece, limited to 250 copies, each numbered and signed, 15s. 6d. net.

"It renders the original verse in its metres rhymed throughout.....Extremely literal.....It is certainly not lacking in spirit."—Saturday Review.

NATURE'S METHOD in the EVOLUTION of LIFE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE DRAMA of the APOCALYPSE. By En Dansk. Demy 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Treated with great ability and literary attractiveness."—Dundee Advertiser.

NEW "PSEUDONYMS."

YOUNG SAM and SABINA. By Tom Cobbleigh. | THE SILVER CHRIST. By Ouida. [Next week.]

Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s. each.

TWO DELIGHTFUL NOVELS will appear in the SUMMER NUMBERS of THE CENTURY, beginning with the July Part.

"A BACHELOR MAID." By Mrs. Burton | "LOVE in IDLENESS." By Marion Crawford,

HARRISON, Author of "The Anglemans," "Sweet Bells Out of Tune," &c. Author of "Katharine Lauderdale," "Saracine," &c., &c.

Price 1s. 4d. Monthly.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

MÉNÉVAL'S MEMOIRS OF NAPOLEON, by Judge O'CONNOR MORRIS	509
TWO TRANSLATIONS OF "BRAND," by R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON	510
OVERTON'S ENGLISH CHURCH IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY, by W. P. COURTNEY	511
SIR JOHN ASTLEY'S EPOCHING REMINISCENCES, by J. I. MICHIN	512
NEW NOVELS, by W. WALLACE	513
CURRENT THEOLOGY	514
NOTES AND NEWS	515
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	516
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	517
ORIGINAL VERSE: "THE LILY AND THE POET," by C. M. A.	517
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	517
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	517
CORRESPONDENCE
A Bague Grammar in the Library of Shirlburn Castle, Oxfordshire, by the Rev. Llewelyn Thomas; A Radical Brighton Person in 1875, by Dr. F. J. Furovall	517
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	519
ALBERT ASTLEY'S THE GARDEN THAT I LOVE, by F. W. RUDLER	519
CORRESPONDENCE
Traces of a Fresh Source of Tradition regarding the Life of Lucrèce, by John Masson; Herodas, by F. D.	519
SCIENCE NOTES	520
PHILOLOGY NOTES	520
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	520
THE ARCHAEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF INDIA, by J. S. C.	521
EXPLORATION OF HADRIAN'S WALL	522
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	522
"SARAH" AND MR. WILLARD, by F. WIDMORE	522
OPERA AT DRURY LANE, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	523
RECENT CONCERTS	523
MUSIC NOTES	523

WANTED.—NUREMBERG CHRONICLE, folio, £10.18s. offered—Meyer's British Birds, 4 vols., folio, £12 offered—The Iris, a set, £43; good price for portion—Yule Marco Polo, 2 vols., £5 given—Higgin's Apocryphs, 2 vols., £5 offered—Alpine Journal, set, £5 given, or £1 for Vol. III.—Shaw's History of Staffordshire, £15 offered. Cash sums for any of above given by CHARLES LOWE, Book Exporter, NEW STREET, BIRMINGHAM. Parcels or Libraries purchased. Established 40 years.

POPULAR WRITERS OF FICTION wishing to secure the most extensive COPYRIGHTED PUBLICATION obtainable in United States, Canada, and elsewhere, should communicate with P. F. COLLIER, 521, West Thirteenth Street, New York City.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, New York Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS

115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

TYPE-WRITING.—Author's MSS.

Plays, Reviews, and all Manuscripts promptly and accurately typewritten. Terms: 1d. per folio (72 words); or for 5,000 words and over, 8d. per 1,000. Special Terms for Carbon Duplicates.—H. B. FENWICK, 11, Buxton Road, Chingford, Essex.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DELAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S &amp; BADDELEY'S

TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.

New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DELAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS &amp; NORGATE,

Importers of Foreign Books,

11, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,

AND

29, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,

FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,

45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET

(Opposite the British Museum).

Supply all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.

Catalogues on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C. desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

TO AUTHORS AND EDITORS.

NORTHERN NEWSPAPER

Supplies high-class short and serial fiction; bright sketches; articles on general sub-

KENDAL, SYNDICATE,

UNIVERSITY of EDINBURGH.

The University Court of the University of Edinburgh will, on Monday, 18th July next, or some subsequent day, proceed to the APPOINTMENT of an ADDITIONAL EXAMINER in CLASSICS in the University, for a period of four years from 1st October next. The office can be held only by a member of the General Council of one of the Scottish Universities.

The additional Examiner must examine (1) for the Preliminary Examinations, (2) for Graduation in Arts, and may be required to represent the University for the next two years on the Joint Board of Examiners of the Scottish Universities.

Each applicant should lodge with the undersigned, not later than Monday, 24th July next, sixteen copies of his application (one of which should be signed), and sixteen copies of any testimonials he may desire to present.

Applicants who send to Testimonials must not send more than four. Particulars of remuneration on application.

University of Edinburgh, M. C. TAYLOR, Sec. Univ. Court.
8th June, 1894.

LAW LECTURES.

THE LIVERPOOL BOARD OF LEGAL

STUDIES are prepared to receive APPLICATIONS by Gentlemen wishing to deliver, in Liverpool, a COURSE of TEN LECTURES (with Classes) on—

(a) EQUITY.

(b) COMMON LAW.

The Courses will be consecutive, extending from January to June. Fee, Fifty Guineas a Course, with an allowance for travelling expenses. Applications to be sent in on or before the 3rd July. Address the HON. SECRETARY, Liverpool Board of Legal Studies, Law Library, Liverpool.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL

(VICTORIA UNIVERSITY).

ROSCEO CHAIR OF ART.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for a PROFESSORSHIP of ARCHITECTURE. Fixed Endowment £275 per annum, with share of fees from students, and other emoluments. The Professor will conduct Architecture Classes at the College, and will likewise act as Inspector upon the representatives MAXIMA Board appointed to conduct the newly constituted SCHOOL of ARCHITECTURE and APPLIED ARTS for the City of Liverpool, supported from funds set apart for Technical and Commercial Instruction. The appointment will be for five years, and the Professor will be eligible. Applications, with testimonials, must be lodged with the Registrar by or before July 25.—For further details apply to the Registrar, University College, Liverpool.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, DUNDEE.

ST. ANDREW'S UNIVERSITY.

CHAIR OF CHEMISTRY.

The Council of the College will shortly proceed to APPOINT a PROFESSOR to occupy the above Chair, recently rendered vacant. The successful Candidate will be required to enter upon his duties on October 1st.

Applications, accompanied by thirty copies of Testimonials, with references, should be sent to the undersigned, not later than 7th July. For further information apply to R. N. KEAR, Secretary.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best

University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEZVOJA, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL

SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon-street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholastic Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers, may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL

MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOCKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—ASSYRIAN

SCULPTURES.—Statuettes of Sennacherib, Assurbanipal, and his Queen. Also reduced Facsimiles of the unique and beautiful "Garden Scene," Winged Human-headed Lion and Bull, &c. Modelled from the famous Nineveh Sculptures, and made in Porcelain (pat. 7, 1893). Interesting and faithful reproductions.—Athenæum, Oct. 7, 1893. Descriptive Prospectus on application to ALFRED JARVIS (Sole Publisher), 48, Willes Road, London, N.W.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND &amp; CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on hand.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process for the reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost. Specimens and price list on application.

Office 14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.0, SHALL WE FORGIVE HER! Messrs. Fred Terry, Macklin, Chas. Dalton, Julian Cross, H. Flemming, H. Everfield, Herbert Budd; Mesdames H. Leigh, Ada Nelson, M. Hardinge, and Julia Nelson.

AVENUE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.50, ARMS AND THE MAN. Messrs. Yorks Stephens, Bernard Gould, James Welch, A. E. W. Mason, O. Barnett; Mesdames Alma Murray, Chas. Calvert, and Florence Farr. Preceded, at 8.10, by THE MAN IN THE STREET. Messrs. J. Welch, G. R. Foss; Miss W. Fraser.

COMEDY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.0, THE MIDDLEMAN. Mr. E. S. Willard, Messrs. Royce Carleton, W. T. Lovell, Bassett Roe, H. Cane, F. H. Tyler, T. Sidney, Cecil Crofton, C. Moore; Mesdames Cannings, H. Cane, Nannie Craddock, Keith Wakeman, Violet Armbruster, and Agnes Verity.

COURT THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9.0, MARRIAGE. Messrs. Sydney Brongh, H. Hudson, C. F. Little, and Mackintosh; Misses Lena Ashwell, and Gertrude Kingston. At 8.15, THE CAPE MAIL. Messrs. Wilfred Draycott, W. H. Quinton, and Sant Matthews; Misses Vane Featherstone, Lilian Lee, Maude Abbott, and Carlotta Addison.

CRITERION THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE CANDIDATE. Mr. Charles Wyndham, Messrs. Wm. Blakeley, Geo. Giddens, C. W. Somerset, F. Worthing, E. Atherley; Miss F. Coleman, Miss Pattie Browne, Miss Miriam Clements, and Miss Mary Moore. Preceded, at 8.50, by MRS. HILARY REGRETS.

DALY'S THEATRE, LEICESTER SQUARE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, IZEV. Madame Sarah Bernhardt, Misses Marthold, Grandet, Mellet, Scylor, Merle, &c.; Messrs. Guiry, De Max, Deneubourg, Henri Deschamps, Montigny, Angelo, &c.

GARRICK THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, MONEY. Mr. John Hare, Messrs. Forbes Robertson, Arthur Cecil, H. Kemble, C. Brookfield, G. Hare, A. Bouchier, Aynsworth, Rock, Du Maurier, Sims; Miss Kate Rorke, Miss Maude Mallett, and Mrs. Bancroft.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, CHARLEY'S AUNT. Mr. W. S. Penley, Messrs. Walter Everard, Sidney Paxton, H. Farmer, Cecil Thornbury, and H. Reeves Smith; Misses Ada Branson, Emmie Meyrick, Kate Graves. At 8, IN THE EYES OF THE WORLD.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, A BUNCH OF VIOLETS. Mr. Tree; Messrs. Lionel Brongh, Nutcombe Gould, G. W. Anson, Holman Clarke, C. M. Hallard; Miss Lily Hanbury, Miss Audrey Ford, and Mrs. Tree.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8 punctually, FAUST. Mr. Irving, Miss Ellen Terry; Messrs. Wm. Terris, Julius Knight, C. Hague, Hayland, Tyars, Johnson, Harvey, Tabb, Archer, Reynolds, Buckley, Selmore, Espinosa, Seldon, Cushing; Misses Kate Phillips, Lacy, Forster, De Silva, M. A. Victor.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, Christmas Edition of LITTLE CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS. Messrs. E. J. Lonson, John F. Sheridan, F. Cook, G. Tate, W. S. Laidlaw, R. Carse; Mesdames Holland, Moore, Alice Lethbridge, G. Whiteford, E. Greville, Thorne, F. Wilson, M. Marsden, M. Bonheur, and Miss May Yohé. Preceded by, at 7.40, WEATHERWISE.

OPERA COMIQUE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, A SOCIETY BUTTERFLY. Mrs. Langtry, Misses Rose Leclercq, E. Brimley Sheridan, Walsingham, L. Morand, E. Norton, E. Williams, E. Vernon, G. Eviston; Messrs. W. Herbert, A. Beaumont, E. Rose, H. J. Carvill, S. Jerram, H. Templeton, C. R. Stuart, and F. Kerr.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, THE MASQUERADERS. Mr. George Alexander, Messrs. Herbert Waring, Elliot, H. V. Esmond, Ian Robertson, A. Vane-Tempest, Ben Webster, William H. Day, &c.; Miss Granville, Miss Irene Vanbrugh, Miss Beryl Faber, Mrs. Edward Saker, and Mrs. Patrick Campbell.

STRAND THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, THE JERRY BUILDER. Messrs. Willie Edouin, E. Hendrie, C. Paget, D. Gordon, H. Ross, E. M. Sillward, R. Nainby; Misses Helen Conway, Susie Vaughan, May Edouin, Edith Dylton, Emily Downton, Grace Lane, Lucy Wilson, &c. At 8, PARALLEL ATTACKS.

TRAFALGAR THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, GO-BANG. Mesdames Jessie Bond, Agnes Hewitt, Adelaide Astor, Maggie Roberts, Maud Lockett, Lydia Flopp, and Letty Lind; Messrs. H. Gratton, George Grossmith, jun., Arthur Playfair, George Crawford, Edgar Stevens, Fred Storey, and John L. Shine. At 7.40, THE SILVER HONEYMOON.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE NEW BOY. Mr. Weedon Grossmith, Messrs. J. D. Beveridge, J. Beauchamp, S. Warden, K. Douglas, T. Palmer, F. Volpe, J. Hatfield; Mesdames Gladys Homfrey, May Palfrey, Esme Beringer, Helena Dacre. Preceded, at 8.20, by THE GENTLEMAN WHIP.

MR. MEREDITH'S NEW NOVEL.

LORD ORMONT AND HIS AMINTA.

By GEORGE MEREDITH.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

[This day.

CHAPMAN &amp; HALL, LTD., LONDON.

NOW READY, large crown 8vo, nearly 800 pages, cloth, 6s., post free.

HISTORY OF THE FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND.

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

WITH A CONTINUATION TO 1891,

By CHARLES S. MIALI.

THE GUARDIAN.—"It is certainly a convenience to have the history of Dissent in England presented in a connected form, and from a Dissenter's point of view. And for these purposes we can recommend this, which gives the history in a handy and convenient form."

TIMES.—"As a complete exposition of the history of Dissent, from the Nonconformist point of view, it is no doubt certain to retain its reputation."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Readers will find here in a clear and attractive form much information which cannot readily be found anywhere else."

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

"Very frank in tone, and modern in application."—The Bookman.
 "They show the same wonderful fertility of apt and beautiful illustrations, the same exquisite use of language, and the same direct heart-searching power which we are accustomed to find in all Dr. MacLaren's works."

"They are fully up to his old level, and are still unrivalled in their own manner."—British Weekly.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

PAUL'S PRAYERS. And other Sermons.

"As striking and suggestive as any Dr. MacLaren has published. . . . The book is full of helpful thoughts."

Christian World.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD OF THE AMEN. And other Sermons.

"Deplete with a keen spiritual insight, combined with an aptness of illustration and beauty of diction which cannot fail to both impress and charm the reader."—Methodist Times.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE HOLY OF HOLIES. A Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John.

Every sermon glows with unction, and shows intense power."—Methodist Recorder.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST. And other Sermons.

"Few preachers combine so many elements of effective pulpit address."—Independent.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, PUBLISHERS, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.
 AND ALL BOOKSELLERS.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

For Mutual Life Assurance.

PROFITS.—The whole are divided amongst the Assured. Already divided, £4,600,000.
 At the division in 1892 there were nearly eight hundred Policies in respect of which not only were the Premiums entirely extinguished, but also Annuities were granted or Cash Bonuses paid, whilst in the case of many Policies the original sums assured are now more than doubled by the Bonus Additions.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

ARTHUR SMITHER, Actuary and Secretary.

OLD SHIRTS RE-FITTED, Fine Irish Linen, 2s.; or very best Irish Linen, returned free, ready to wear, 2s. 6d. Sample Shirt, for Dress and ordinary wear, any size, post free, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Twilled Night Shirts, 2s. 11d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., or 5s. 9d. LINEN COLLARS and CUFFS. Best 4-fold Collars, 4s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. doz.; made exact to pattern, 2s. 9d. half-doz., post free. Napkins, 2s. 6d. per doz.; Dinner Napkins, 4s. 6d. per dozen; Table Cloths, 2 yards square, 2s. 9d. each, 2½ yards by 3 yards, 5s. 6d.; Kitchen Table Cloths, 10½d. each; real Irish Linen Sheet, fully bleached, 2 yards wide, 1s. 11d. per yard; and Linen Diaper, 8½d. per yard; Nursery Diaper, 4½d. per yard; Surplice Linen, 7d. per yard; Glass Cloths, 3s. 6d. dozen. LINEN HUCKABACK TOWELS, 2s. 6d. per dozen; Damask Towels, 6s. 6d. per dozen; Turkish Bath Towels, 1s. each; Twilled Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 10d. each. IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 3s. 6d. Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 4s. 11d. per dozen. Better qualities equally cheap. Price Lists and Patterns of all kinds of Linen Goods and Hosiery sent to any part of the world, post free. Monograms, Crests, Coats of Arms, Initials, &c., woven and embroidered. Samples and Illustrated Price Lists sent free to any part of the world.

B. &amp; E. M'HUGH &amp; CO., Limited, BELFAST

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

BRAND &amp; CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also, ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
 11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
 MAYFAIR, W.

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand, at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Holl, R.A., Oulless, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SURREY," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY

71, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle. Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided and are easily looked over, and of great interest to Lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing nearly 70 Miniature Photographs of notable autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

New Pamphlet, "Autotype a Decorative and Educational Art," free on application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON

MONDAY, JULY 2.

Valuable Collection of Pictures, Old Books, China, Curiosities, &amp;c.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will SELL by AUCTION, at his GREAT ROOMS, 38, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, on MONDAY, July 2nd, at half-past 12 precisely, the Valuable Collection of PICTURES, ETCHINGS, OLD BOOKS, CHINA, CURIOSITIES, &c., formed by the Rev. DE KNEWELL WILLIAMS; also a Collection of Water-Colours and Oil Paintings, principally by well-known Artists. On view the Saturday prior, 12 till 4, and Morning of Sale, and Catalogues had.

Save £3 a Year

By SHAVING YOURSELF WITH

VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP.

VINOLIA SHAVING STICKS—Premier, 6d. Toilet, 1s., 1s. 6d.

and 2s. 6d. Vestal, 2s.

VINOLIA SHAVING CAKES—Premier, 1s. Toilet, 2s. Vestal, 3s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE.—A New Serial Story by Mrs. ANNIE EDWARDES will be commenced in the JULY Number of "TEMPLE BAR," entitled "THE ADVENTURESS."

A SELECTION FROM Bentley's Favourite Novels.

Each Work can be had separately, uniformly bound, price 6s.

Of all Booksellers in Town or Country.

By RHODA BROUGHTON.

A Beginner.

[Just out.

MRS. BLIGH.
COMETH UP AS A FLOWER.
GOOD-BYE, SWEETHEART.
JOAN.
NANCY.
NOT WISELY, BUT TOO WELL.
RED AS A ROSE IS SHE.
SECOND THOUGHTS.
BELINDA.
ALAS!
"DOCTOR CUPID."

By ROSA N. CAREY.

LOVER or FRIEND?
FOR LILIAS.
NELLIE'S MEMORIES.
BARBARA HEATHCOTE'S TRIAL.
HERIOT'S CHOICE.
NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS.
ONLY THE GOVERNESS.
QUEENIE'S WHIM.
ROBERT ORD'S ATONEMENT.
UNCLE MAX.
WEE WIE.
WOOD AND MARRIED.
MARY ST. JOHN.

By MARIE CORELLI.

THE SOUL OF LILITH.
A ROMANCE OF TWO WORLDS.
VENDETTA.
ARDATH.
THELMA.
WORMWOOD.

By MARY LINSKILL.

BETWEEN THE HEATHER AND THE
NORTHERN SEA.
THE HAVEN UNDER THE HILL.
IN EXCHANGE FOR A SOUL.
CLEVEDEN.
TALES of the NORTH RIDING.

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

FROM MOOR ISLES.
THE "FIRST VIOLIN."
ALDYTH.
BORDERLAND.
KITH AND KIN.
PROBATION.

By FLORENCE MONTGOMERY.

MISUNDERSTOOD.
THROWN TOGETHER.
SEAFORTH.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

Gay & Bird's New Books.

NOTICE.—First Edition Exhausted, Second Edition Now Ready.

Fcap. 8vo, neatly bound in buckram, gilt top, 5s.

THE ART OF TAKING A WIFE.

By PAOLO MANTEGAZZA.

Chapter. CONTENTS.

- PROLOGUE.
- I. MARRIAGE in MODERN SOCIETY.
- II. SEXUAL CHOICE in MARRIAGE: the Art of Choosing Well.
- III. AGE and HEALTH.
- IV. PHYSICAL SYMPATHY: Race and Nationality.
- V. THE HARMONY of FEELINGS.
- VI. HARMONY of THOUGHTS.
- VII. THE FINANCIAL QUESTION in MARRIAGE.
- VIII. THE INCIDENTS and ACCIDENTS of MARRIAGE.
- XI. HELL.
- X. PURGATORY.
- XI. PARADISE.

Yorkshire Post.—"Deals boldly with the dark side of married life.....The volume is very tastefully got up, and deserves to be widely read, but, as we have said, it is not a book for young people."

Glasgow Herald.—"Mantegazza boldly invites us to look at the matrimonial problem from the man's point of view."

Sun.—"The whole work is alive with literary taste, and the English publishers are to be sincerely congratulated and thanked for introducing so healthy an exposition to English readers. It cannot be questioned that the number of these readers will be legion."

JUST PUBLISHED. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 7s. 6d.

THE JEWISH QUESTION

AND

THE MISSION OF THE JEWS.

Jewish Chronicle.—"Written in a fair and sympathetic spirit, and for that reason demands more time and space than can be devoted to it this week."

Financial News.—"Full of interest, well written, and will amply repay perusal, whether the reader be a specialist in the subject or not."

JACK'S PARTNER, and other Stories.

By STEPHEN FISKE. With Introduction by JOSEPH HATTON. Crown 8vo, bevelled cloth, gilt top, 2s. 6d.

Scotsman.—"Admirably told, and will afford an hour or two's pleasant enjoyment."

World.—"Vivid, graphic, and humorous."

THE RULERS of the MEDITER-

RANEAN. By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, Author of "Gallegher," "Van Bibber," &c. Crown 8vo, charmingly illustrated, cloth gilt, 6s.

Globe.—"A book of travel of more than ordinary interest and value.....The woodcuts and other pictures are as neatly arranged as they are numerous and well finished."

A PURITAN PAGAN. By Julien

GORDON. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

Literary World.—"The author may be congratulated on a story so powerful and taking."

Sun.—"A novel that should be a great success."

A GUIDE to PALMISTRY. By Mrs.

ELIZA EASTER-HENDERSON. 24mo, illustrated, white cloth, ornamented with silver, 2s. 6d.

Tablet.—"From the mere reading of this volume you can practice the art upon yourself, your friends, and the world at large. For, mark you, there are some parts of the hand that can be read without one's consent."

ON SUNNY SHORES. By Clinton

SCOLLARD. Crown 8vo, illustrated, cloth gilt, 5s. A charming volume of Travel in Great Britain, Italy, Greece, Syria, &c.

Daily Telegraph.—"It tells pleasantly enough—generally in prose, but occasionally in melodious verse—of a boating excursion up the Wye, of a ramble about Ambleside, and an Isle of Wight pilgrimage."

Scotsman.—"Miss Randolph has illustrated with deftness and taste a charming book of travel."

Morning Post.—"The book suggests a collection of sketches in water colours, being fresh, bright, and artistic."

Sun.—"Very dainty to handle, and exceedingly pleasant to read."

ALDRICH'S POEMS. Demy 8vo,

fine engraved Portrait and Illustrations, cloth extra, 6s. A New and Complete Edition, suitable for the Library.

LONDON:

GAY & BIRD, 5, CHANDOS STREET, STRAND.

Agency for American Books.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

AMONG THE MOORS

Sketches of Oriental Life.

By G. MONTBARD, Author of "In Egypt," &c.

Superbly Illustrated. Royal 8vo, cloth, 16s.

LARGE-PAPER EDITION, strictly limited to 100 copies, each numbered and signed by the Author, printed on Japanese vellum, THREE GUINEAS each, net.

"A series of infinitely more vivid and brilliant pictures of Morocco than are to be found in sober and solid works on that dilapidated and crumbling bulwark of Islam."—Scotsman.

TRAVELS AMONGST AMERICAN

INDIANS: their Ancient Earthworks and Temples. By Vice-Admiral LINDESEY BRINE (Member of Council of the Royal Geographical and Hakluyt Societies), Author of "The Taping Rebellion in China: a Narrative of its Rise and Progress." With 2 Maps, 5 Plans, 28 Full-page and 12 Text Cuts. 1 vol., demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"The most interesting chapters in the book are those which deal with Palenque and Uxmal, the most famous of the ruined cities of Mexico and Yucatan.....his pages contain a pleasantly-written narrative of his visit to these strange places."—Times, June 15, 1894.

REMINISCENCES of an INDIAN

POLICE OFFICIAL. By T. C. ARTHUR. Fully Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

"We have to thank Mr. Arthur for a very interesting and informing book, the illustrations to which are instinct with life and reality."—Daily Chronicle.

"Many interesting stories illustrative of crime and its punishment in India are recorded in Mr. Arthur's book.....He concludes his narrative chapters with an urgent plea for police reform in India, based upon the warnings given by recent occurrences of a very disquieting character."—Times.

FEDERAL BRITAIN; or, Unity and

Federation of the Empire. By F. P. DE LABILLIERE, Fellow of the Royal Colonial Institute, and Author of "The Early History of the Colony of Victoria." With Chapter on "Imperial Defence," by Sir GEO. S. CLARKE, R.E., K.C.M.G. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Mr. Labilliere's book is an extremely useful and interesting contribution to a great subject that appeals powerfully to the imagination and the patriotic sentiment of us all, whether in the 'old country' or scattered over the world."—Daily News.

IN the LAND of the TUI: My Journal

in New Zealand. By Mrs. ROBERT WILSON. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

DANTE G. ROSSETTI and the

PRE-RAPHAELITE MOVEMENT. By ESTHER WOOD. With 8 Photogravure Reproductions of Rossetti's Paintings. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

"Regarded as an appreciation of the wider significance of the pre-Raphaelite movement, and a critical account of Rossetti's art and poetry, her book is a fresh and luminous contribution to the literature of the subject. The photogravures of Rossetti's pictures in themselves make the book one to be coveted by all who are interested in art."—Times.

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES.

SARAH: a Survival. By Sydney

CHRISTIAN, Author of "Lydia." 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.

"A wholesome as well as a graceful book, full of charming and whimsical touches; and written with a decided distinction of style."—Athenaeum.

"It is a surprise and a refreshment in these days of morbid and melancholy heroines to meet with one so well content with life, of so cheerful a countenance, as is the young lady who gives her name to Sydney Christian's novel, 'Sarah.' The author has the gift of presentation, his characters stand out clearly, his descriptive passages have brilliant limpidity of effect; the talk throughout is spontaneous.....The charm of freshness is on the book."—Daily News.

"At last we have a story of a woman and of womanhood which may be read with satisfaction and pleasure 'Sarah: a Survival,' by Sydney Christian, is a remarkable work in every sense. It is rarely original and not eccentric, it is thoughtful and not pretentious, it is interesting as a narrative and extremely clever as a study of character, it is written in admirable English, and abounds in humour of a quiet, delectable kind. 'Sarah' is a gem; it is her old uncle Dan, who rebukes his prim and proper sister Rachel by observing that he is 'thankful to say it never enters Sarah's head to be grateful.'"—World.

A BAIREUTH PILGRIMAGE. By

EDITH E. CUTHELL. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.

"A story that will unquestionably interest a large circle of readers."—Scotsman.

"The author gives a very pleasant and fanciful turn to the refined and touching love story, of which she makes an encircling garland of roses and laurels for the figure of Wagner."—World.

FIRE ISLAND. By George Manville

FENN, Author of "The Black Bar," &c. Numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The book is always lively and amusing."—Scotsman.

THE EMIGRANT SHIP. By W. Clark

RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," &c. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The story is capitally told, and full of fresh interest."—Athenaeum.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, JUNE 23, 1894.

No. 1155, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Ménéval's Memoirs of Napoleon. Translated by Robert H. Sherard. Vol. I. (Hutchinson.)

THE late Baron Ménéval was one of the private secretaries of Napoleon from 1802 to 1814, and was, perhaps, the most confidential of these functionaries. He survived until Louis Napoleon had climbed to power, and some time previously composed these memoirs, which, after more than forty years, have at last been published. They have evidently been fused into the narrative of Thiers, a friend of the author who has praised him highly; and whole chapters merely refer to well-known events of that drama of marvels—the Napoleonic era. The work, nevertheless, is of real value, and we have read the first part with unflagging interest. The historical judgments of Ménéval are, indeed, often unjust: he is singularly unfair in all that he says of England; and he is inspired with intense Bonapartist prejudice. But he has brought the living Napoleon clearly before us in a portrait, flattering, no doubt, but essentially true to nature; and he has shown us what the emperor really was—at the head of his armies, in his council of state, as the ruler of France, as the lord of the continent, above all, in the round of his daily life, and in the circle of family and home. It is right that this grand, yet most attractive, image should be reproduced, and set in its true place, were it only to dissipate the false illusions spread abroad by a herd of ignoble slanderers, and too thoughtlessly caught up in England, and to do justice to one of the greatest leaders of men. It is curious, indeed, that within the last twelve months the reminiscences of two of the chief functionaries of the Empire have been given to the public; and the judgments of Pasquier and of Chaptal, with some distinctions, correspond, in the main, with those of Ménéval. The work, we should add, is well edited by the grandson of the distinguished author, and the translation is fairly done, on the whole.

Ménéval was born in 1778, and witnessed the Revolution in its worst phases. He became acquainted with Louis Bonaparte at the house of Palissot, an old man of letters, who had written satires for the Ancien Régime, and served, for a few months, in the army under the law of the Conscription passed in 1798. He saw Louis throw into the fire a rough draft of the famous essay, on the "means of securing the happiness of man," sent by Napoleon to the literary school of Lyons, and filled, as we know, with the philosophy of Rousseau. One passage only attracted his notice: "It was a kind of presentiment of his future destiny which the great, august, and unhappy man had that day. This is the sentence quoted literally: 'Great men are meteors, destined to burn, to light their age.'"

A copy of this performance is still extant; it will be found in Jung's book on Napoleon's youth. It bears, in our judgment, no mark of genius, and, penetrated as it is with the trashy cant of an "ideology" repugnant to the author's nature, it was probably written against the grain. The following anecdote, touching Jean Jacques and his influence on the movement of 1789-93, shows what the First Consul thought of that dreamer; as an estimate of that great ruler of himself, formed when he had appeared as the saviour of France, corresponds with profound remarks made at St. Helena, after the losses and reverses of years:

"Arriving before the Ile des Peupliers, the First Consul paused before the tomb of Jean Jacques, and said that it would have been better for the repose of France had this man never existed. 'And why, Citizen Consul?' said Girardin. 'It was he who prepared the French Revolution.' 'I should not have thought, Citizen Consul, that you had any reason to complain of the Revolution.' 'Well,' answered he, 'the future will show whether it would not have been better for the peace of the world that neither I, nor Rousseau, had ever lived.' And so saying, he continued his walk with a dreamy air."

From letters published by Ménéval many years ago, and reappearing in this volume, it seems evident that, as Marbot, too, says, the Directory had decided to recall Napoleon from Egypt long before the General set sail from that country. This disposes of the charge made by Lanfrey and others, that the warrior of Italy was a deserting traitor, compared indeed by Jung to Bazaine, in the fool fury of revengeful faction. Ménéval, through his intimacy with Louis, became a secretary of Joseph Bonaparte, and was present at the negotiations of Lunéville and Amiens. His reminiscences of these events contain nothing new, and are only remarkable for the aversion he shows to England—a sentiment pervading the whole volume. At Morfontaine he saw Napoleon for the first time:

"He was very affable to everybody. He neglected his affairs to give himself up to the pleasures of the fête. The library of the château, in which he worked, was almost entirely deserted during these days. He conversed with each on his speciality; he even spoke of music with Garat."

Ménéval dwells on the noble reforms of the Consulate—the Concordat, the restoration of order in France, the establishment of a firm and just government, the Legion of Honour, the Code Civil, national education, and the general amnesty—with an admiration that history has confirmed. This was the splendid prime of Napoleon's reign, passed over by detractors, and but little known to Englishmen. The First Consul towered over all the Frenchmen of the day in his conception of administration, of law, of domestic government, and especially of the needs and the desires of the nation. His sympathy with religion is thus attested, and, we have no doubt, was part of his nature: the child of a godless age, he had yet a real faith in God, like all men of the highest order of mind:—

"Bonaparte was sincerely religious—I may add a true Catholic. His detestation of the free-thinking cynicism which preaches contempt for religion—which was considered, on the contrary, by him as the basis of morality and decency—was as great as his horror for the bigotry which fetters human intelligence. . . . His respect for the doctrines of the Gospel was the outcome of his convictions and early training."

In 1802 Ménéval became a private secretary of Napoleon, in the place of the worthless Bourienne, whose Memoirs, he says, are largely apocryphal. He was in office, we have seen, until 1814, and was an attendant of Marie Louise for some time afterwards; a work he has written on the Empress has been long out of print. This volume only comes down to the Peace of Presburg, the apogee, perhaps, of Napoleon's reign; and we can merely glance at the great events of these years. Ménéval is quite wrong in his conception of Pitt, as an enemy of France ever intent on war; and equally so in his assertion that Pitt retired from office to allow the Peace of Amiens to be made. He throws on England the whole blame for the renewal of the war, forgetting the First Consul's continental policy, and especially Sebastiani's mission to Egypt; and this view is unjust and even absurd, though England was not in all points in the right. It is likely enough, however, that at this crisis Napoleon was not desirous to take up arms; his mistake was that he thought he could bully Lord Hawkesbury, and forgot that he had to reckon with Englishmen. The following shows the author's point of view, and recalls the animus against England he always displays:

"Napoleon was forced to acknowledge that there was neither armistice nor peace to be hoped for from this irreconcilable enemy, and he had nothing further to rely on than the superiority of his power and unusual means, for it was war to the death. It became, from that moment forward, his sole occupation to throw back on England all the harm that she engaged to inflict upon us."

The war, impartial history will record, was an appalling misfortune to the estate of man in all parts of the civilised world. It is vain now to try to apportion the blame; but the great Powers of the West, we devoutly hope, will learn from the past to avoid a strife in the future, which could only be a curse to themselves and to humanity.

Ménéval describes at length the preparations for the descent on England, the marvellous arrangements of the Camp of Boulogne, and the discomfiture of Villeneuve ending at Trafalgar. We shall only remark that the author is convinced that Napoleon meant to invade our shores; and this certainly is the true view, though Admiral Colomb, following Metternich, has expressed doubts.

"It has been said that the plan of an invasion of England was only a feint. The reason alleged is that the imminence of a continental war must have made Napoleon give up all idea of absenting himself from the continent with his best army. As a matter of fact, never was there more earnest or sincere planning."

The author's account of the conspiracy of George, and of the events that followed, is most unfair to England, like the accounts of nearly all French historians. We ought not to have had Cadoudal in our pay; we ought to have looked more sharply after the Comte D'Artois and the murderous plots of wicked émigrés; but that English statesmen lent themselves to deeds of blood is an infamous and ridiculous charge. Nor can it be forgotten that at this very time Napoleon was stirring up rebellion in Ireland—conduct which justified reprisals of the same kind. Ménéval describes the affair of the Duc D'Enghien at length, but adds nothing to what is already known. Unquestionably Talleyrand was morally to blame; unquestionably Napoleon had solid grounds to watch and even to punish the Bourbons. But this does not excuse the tragedy of Vincennes; and it is incredible that the First Consul would have forgiven Réal for not being on the spot in time, if, as Ménéval asserts, Réal had orders to stay the proceedings and to report on the subject. The following is mere sophistry; and the execution of the Duc, if it can be palliated, cannot be, in any sense, justified:

"Napoleon fulfilled a painful duty, as head of the government; and, instead of charging him with a crime, one should rather pity him for having been placed in the necessity of accepting all the odium of the act."

Ménéval dwells on the events that caused the rise of the Empire, but we shall pass over this part of his narrative. A remark made by Napoleon to Joseph, when the coronation was over, is characteristic of the strong love of family the Emperor felt:

"'Joseph,' he cried, as he looked at his brother and himself clad in the attributes of power, 'if father could see us!' This reflection was inspired less by pride than by a family feeling, which in Napoleon's heart towered above the intoxication of glory and the splendours of supreme rank."

We shall not refer to Austerlitz and the dazzling period when the Empire seemed assured and permanent: all this is to be found in numberless histories. Ménéval's sketches of the leading men of the Consulate and of the Empire are, on the whole, just; and the same may be said of his account of the institutions of the day. He truly remarks that the Conseil d'Etat was the most important of the bodies of the state; and that, as many witnesses have said, its deliberations were quite untrammelled:—

"Napoleon felt respect for those who did not blindly subject their opinions to his own. They had no reason to repent having freely, and in good faith, expressed their way of thinking. His confidence even was forfeited by those who abdicated their independence before him."

We turn to the most interesting part of this work, the author's account of the inner life of Napoleon, in his closet and in the domestic circle. His intellectual activity, as we know, was intense—he could work without a pause for twelve or fourteen hours—but it was perfectly ordered, and for that reason fruitful.

"His ideas developed, as he dictated, with an abundance and a clearness which showed that his attention was firmly riveted to the subject with which he was dealing; they sprang from his head even as Minerva sprang fully armed from the head of Jupiter. . . . The various subjects were arranged in his head, as though in a cupboard. 'When I want to interrupt one piece of work,' he used to say, 'I close the drawer in which it is, and I open another. The two pieces of business never get mixed up together, and never trouble or tire me. When I want to go to sleep, I close up all the drawers, and then I am ready to go off to sleep.'"

As everyone knows, he repeatedly worked at night—a habit he had acquired in his campaigns, for reports from the front usually came in at night:

"Be here to-night at one o'clock, or at four in the morning, we will work together. . . . He used to make his appearance, dressed in his white dressing-gown, with a Madras handkerchief round his head."

To Ménéval, as to all who were dependent on him, Napoleon was a most considerate master:

"When the work was finished, and sometimes in the midst of it, he would send for sherbet and ices. He used to ask me which I preferred, and went so far in his solicitude as to advise me which would be better for my health. Thereupon he would return to bed, if only to sleep for an hour, and could resume his slumber as though it had not been interrupted."

The simplicity of Napoleon in his home life—a rare interval in a grand drama of action, and a sign of real greatness—has struck many observers:

"In his retreat at La Malmaison Napoleon appeared like a father in the midst of his family. This abnegation of his grandeur, his simple and dignified manners, the pleasing ways and gracious familiarity of Madame Bonaparte, had a great charm for me. In our leisure moments the First Consul used to go over his bookcases with me, telling me what books I ought to read. . . . I had expected to find him brusque and of uncertain temper, instead of which I found him patient, indulgent, easy to please, by no means exacting, merry with a merriness which was often noisy and mocking, and sometimes of a charming bonhomie."

The kindness of the Emperor to his kindred is attested by a whole host of witnesses, whose evidence has been put together by M. Arthur Lévy. As to these relations we shall only remark that Ménéval rejects with contempt the infamous falsehoods associated with the names of Hortense and Pauline:

"Madame Louis Bonaparte gave birth to a son ten months after her marriage. The partiality of the First Consul for this child may have strengthened these lying rumours, spite of their proved absurdity."

Napoleon was anything but a selfish despot: he identified self with the grandeur of France; he staked and lost all in this hazard:

"All the powers of his ambition were strained to render the French nation great and prosperous. He never spoke of France but in terms of affection. France had no rival in his heart, nor in his mind; her greatness was the object of all his thoughts, the opinion which she had of him was his constant preoccupation."

This estimate of Napoleon errs on the side of eulogy; but it is infinitely more just than the wicked detraction of the slanderers, who have tried to defile that great name.

"The revelations, which time will bring, will show Napoleon raised on the summit of greatness, by means of which morality approves; this will show him free from all baseness, straightforward, magnanimous, exempt from low passions, endowed with every kind of courage, constantly occupied with the care of ameliorating the condition of humanity, and finally moved by the noble ambition to have desired to make of France the most glorious and the most prosperous of nations—ambition too great, perhaps, in a worn-out society, for the rejuvenation of which time, as well as the constancy of fortune, were lacking to him."

We would quote more had we not outrun our limits; we shall look forward to the remainder of this work with interest.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR MORRIS.

TWO TRANSLATIONS OF "BRAND."

Brand: a Dramatic Poem in Five Acts. By Henrik Ibsen. Translated in the original metres, with an Introduction and Notes, by C. H. Herford. (Heinemann.)

Brand: a Dramatic Poem. By Henrik Ibsen. Translated into English Verse in the original metres by F. Edmund Garrett. (Fisher Unwin.)

THE most striking difference between these two volumes is to be found in the length of their Introductions, Prof. Herford's extending to ninety pages, and Mr. Garrett's to nine. That of Mr. Garrett, though somewhat dictatorial, is very much to the point, and we have great sympathy with his scorn for symbol-weaving Ibsenites. Certainly "there is a broad simplicity about the central motive of 'Brand,'" and "it is this simple central motive which gives it its poignancy"; but, as Prof. Herford points out, this "very fascinating and suggestive poem is also a distinctly complex and difficult one, and its difficulties are far from disclosing themselves completely at first sight."

Mr. Garrett's contemptuous rejection of any meaning in the hawk is as rash as Mr. Wilson's statement (in the preface to his prose translation) that "Ibsen's mind, essentially and strongly inquisitive, is as unwilling as it is unable to teach anything"; and now that most of us have read "Brand," the time has come for the appreciation of Prof. Herford's masterly and lucid interpretation.

There happens, in this case, to be a certain amount of positive evidence concerning the moods and methods in which "Brand" was composed, which naturally forms the groundwork of Prof. Herford's analysis. It seems certain that Ibsen began the work with the intention of satirising the Norwegian people—

"A little pious in the pew,
A little grave—his fathers' way—
Over the cup a little gay—
It was his fathers' fashion too!
A little warm when glasses clash,
And stormy cheer and song go round
For the small folk, rock-will'd, rock-bound,
That never stood the scourge and lash.
A little free in promise-making;
And then, when vows in liquor will'd
Must be in mortal stress fulfill'd,
A little fine in promise-breaking.
Yet, as I say, all fragments still,
His faults, his merits, fragments all,
Partial in good, partial in ill,
Partial in great things and in small;
But here's the grief—that worst or best,
Each fragment of him wrecks the rest."

The idea of a priest who should awaken the people to a sense of their own littleness was partly founded on the life of his friend G. A. Iambers.

But Henrik Jaeger goes too far in saying (Life of Henrik Ibsen, translated by Clara Bell) that "what Ibsen has tried to create is an ideal contrast with the reality he is satirising: and this has determined the aspect of the man," that Brand "was planned as a contrasting image"; for, as Prof. Herford has pointed out, the satiric motive was gradually overpowered by the tragic, and "the ideal type grew human and individual; the Titan going forth with drawn sword against the world became a struggling and agonised soul, swayed by doubts and entangled by illusion." In other words, the didactic element is merged in the dramatic, and the interest centres in the development of individual character.

Prof. Herford maintains further that Brand, "the man who had hated in the name of love, and slain out of very passion for life," is "Ibsen reduced, if one may say so, to simpler terms, and at the same time raised to a higher power." The phrase is dangerously ingenious; and we are inclined to question its truth, among other reasons because, as Herr Jaeger remarks, Brand "is a creation of the imagination, not a figure from real life." However that may be, there are undeniably very strong points of sympathy between Ibsen and Brand, which Prof. Herford has clearly established; and they emphasise the perversity with which Mr. Bernard Shaw regards "Brand" as a satire on Christianity, and forces its teachings into his formula—The Quintessence of Ibsenism—"that conduct must justify itself by its effect upon happiness and not by its conformity to any rule or ideal."

The poem "represents an heroic attempt to spiritualise society by a teaching which saps its human basis"; and "the gist of the whole is ethical . . . the faith which inspires it is the faith in the spirit of man—the one eternal thing":

"But there is One that shall abide;
The Spirit, that was never born,
That in the world's fresh gladsome Morn
Was rescued when it felt forlorn,
That built with valiant faith a road
Whereby from Flesh it climbed to God,
Now but in shreds and scraps is dealt
The Spirit we have faintly felt;
But from these scraps and from these shreds,
These headless hands and handless heads,
These torso stumps of soul and thought,
A man complete and whole shall grow,
And God his glorious child shall know,
His heir, the Adam that he wrought."

And

"to follow out any one course rigorously involves more Will, calls more Spirit into play, than to follow several partially. Hence we reach Brand's paradox, that to 'sacrifice' less than all is worse than to sacrifice nothing, and the terrible formula 'all or nothing,' with which he 'pierces the bosom' of a 'human' and compromising age. The formula is thus, in spite of its intensely theological colouring, a product of ethical and not of theological ideas. To fall short of absolute service is no doubt infidelity to God; but the root of Brand's fierce denunciation of it is that it is infidelity to character.

"To thy own self be true;
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man."

"A large majority of those who know the original," says Prof. Herford, "believe that it marks an epoch in the literature of Europe. Nothing in English literature in the least resembles a work, which is nevertheless peculiarly fitted to impress and to fascinate the English nature. But those who can imagine the prophetic fire of Carlyle fused with the genial verve and the intellectual athleticism of Browning, and expressed by aid of a dramatic faculty to parallel which we must go two centuries backward, may in some degree understand that fascination."

In attempting to reproduce this masterpiece, Prof. Herford and Mr. Garrett have adopted the same methods. Both have used the original metres—"the iambic and trochaic varieties of the four-beat line, with an irregular rhyme-scheme"—(which Ibsen chose because "he wanted a verse in which he could career where he would, as on horseback"); and both have aimed, generally speaking, at a line-by-line translation, though "the order of lines forming part of the same sentence has been modified without reserve." There can be no question, we presume, that these methods are right, and it seems to us that they have been justified by signal success.

Of the two versions Prof. Herford's, while not shrinking from the rapid transitions of mood in the original, is throughout literary and poetic; Mr. Garrett's is rugged and colloquial. The differences may be readily illustrated by quoting from Mr. Garrett the description of the Norwegian people which we have already given in Prof. Herford's words:

"A little smug (on holy days);
A little true to old-time ways;
A little sensual when he sups—
(His fathers were so, in their cups);
A little ardent when in hall
Sounds festal song about the small,
But rock-embattled, rock-born folk
That never bore with stick or stroke;
A little lavish in his pledges;
A little snivelling, when he edges
(Sober) from what his lips but ill-meant,
E'en liquor-loosened, for fulfilment.
But all, you see, is just a little;
He fails—a jot; succeeds—a tittle;
In gross and detail, he's a fraction
Of good and ill, of thought and action;
And every fraction (that's the pest of them)
Completely cancels all the rest of them."

An excess of the two manners produces the result that Prof. Herford's English is sometimes inappropriately erudite, as in the use of "bight" for "bay," and that Mr. Garrett loses dignity by the reiteration of such slang terms as "slack" and "budge."

A more serious complaint, unfortunately, must be urged against Mr. Garrett, who, in at least two cases, has given a very weak rendering of an important passage.

He translates:

"Af slet blir slet kun, slet og ret,
Men ond tild godt kan vendes let.
Mere worthlessness bides still the same;
But ill may turn to good some day.

And

"Ind i natten. Gennæu døden,
Bagom daemrer morgenrøden.

Into night! Through death! Withdrawn
Far, comes glimmering in the dawn.

But the greater part of his work is above this level, and may be profitably studied in connexion with Prof. Herford's brilliant translation, which is itself a dramatic poem of absorbing interest and peculiar charm.

R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON.

The English Church in the Nineteenth Century, 1800-1833. By John H. Overton. (Longmans.)

THE position of the Church of England during the first thirty-three years of this century would be described by most students of its history as a state of stagnation. If they could be induced on further consideration to modify this statement, they would probably only vary it so far as to say that any spasm of activity which momentarily shook its frame resulted from fear lest its position as a state establishment should be endangered, and not from any anxiety as to the absence of any growth in its spiritual life. Its enemies would allege that the value of the assistance of its ministers as a means of promoting or retarding the development of any general movement in our land was never more apparent than on the occasion when Spencer Perceval raised the banner of "No Popery" and ousted his opponents from office. They would point to the opposition of its rectors and vicars to the carrying of Catholic Emancipation, or to the Reform Bill, and they would in triumph put to its defenders the question: What religious movement received from the clergy even a tithe of such material aid?

Such an attack cannot be met in equal combat. It can only be parried for a time. The best defence of the Church's position lies in the fact that, during this period, its friends succeeded in framing many schemes of future development which have since proved of the greatest value to its spiritual progress. The ministers of the Church are divided by Mr. Overton into the traditional three classes: the "Orthodox," the "Evangelicals," and the "Liberals." In the first class, which afterwards was playfully designated the "high and dry," hardly a single name of the first rank is to be found. Bishop Horsley was a man of an active mind and of great fighting power; but he died without leaving behind him any work, either in the literary or the ecclesiastical world, which causes his name to live in the mouths of men. Jones of Nayland was a leader of thought in his time; but his days came to an end in the first year of the nineteenth century, and he is practically outside the period of which Mr. Overton treats. Most of the other prominent figures in this class, such as William Stevens, Joshua Watson, Norris, and Daubeny, have long perished, and their names are not now associated in the minds of most of us with any conspicuous enterprise. Hugh James Rose is better known. He was united with Keble, Newman, and Isaac Williams in some of their literary labours, and in the earlier days of the Tractarian Movement he exercised a great influence in the counsels of its leaders. A natural desire to sweep into the pages of his volume as many conspicuous names as possible has induced Mr. Overton to include that "well-known authoress, Miss Agnes Strickland"; but the whole of her historical works were given to the world long after 1833. At that date she had only published a small volume or two of poetry, and her poetic effusions were not attended with permanent vitality.

For the first thirty years of this century the Evangelicals formed undoubtedly the strongest party in the church, and numbered the most conspicuous names in its history. Charles Simeon was their leader; and, in spite of little affectations of manner and eccentricities of character, he exercised a great impression on the minds of the young men at Cambridge, which was not effaced until long after his death, and in the "syndicate" for the purchase of ecclesiastical livings which is connected with his name he still remains the embodiment of bygone Evangelicalism. Isaac Milner and Farish are forgotten, but Wilberforce lives and will always live. Nor indeed can James Stephen and Zachary Macaulay said to have perished, for the lives of their more illustrious issue perpetuate the memory of their own good works. The influence of this party in the church was much strengthened by their acquisition of the more important benefices in the "popular watering places, inland and marine."

If the "Liberals," as the precursors of the Broad Church section are called by Mr. Overton, had but slight support in the ranks of the laity, the list of their clerical leaders comprised many distinguished persons. Parr lived for twenty-four years after the commencement of this century; Bishop Bathurst's life, although his energy was somewhat dimmed at the concluding years, lasted far into the fourth decade; Sydney Smith died in 1845, and Bishop Stanley in 1849. During this period a small section destined to exercise a great influence over the minds of men came under the fascination which Whately inspired from the common-room of Oriel College, at Oxford. Chief among them was Thomas Arnold, of Rugby.

For men of active minds and reforming natures, little preferment from the rulers of the church was expected, and little was obtained. Such men as Jones of Nayland were to be found starving in country curacies, or in benefices of but insignificant value. Parr was for many years troubled by want of means; but a prebendal stall in St. Paul's, worth at the time of its bestowal on him but the nominal sum of ten pounds per annum, ultimately brought him a considerable income. The richest preferments in the English cathedral establishments and the most lucrative livings were bestowed on the "safe" men and on the tutors or relations of the aristocracy.

After the cessation of the great French War, large sums of money were voted by Parliament for the erection of additional churches in populous places. Too often the money was but ill-applied; the churches of St. Pancras and St. Marylebone are a sufficient proof of that. But in spite of such failures a considerable number of new churches were erected: indeed, says Mr. Overton, "a sum of at least six millions may fairly be supposed to have been spent during the last fifteen years of our period" in this manner. Many other improvements were quietly, almost imperceptibly, effected in the administration of the Church. Colleges were established for the education of the future clergy, a better system of religious education was introduced into the great public schools of England, and, thanks to the energy of Dr. Andrew Bell, great strides were made in the education of the poorer classes. Missionary and Bible societies carried their organisations into distant lands. Henry Martyn died in early life in Persia, but he left his impress on the age, and Claudius Buchanan fought for "an extensive ecclesiastical establishment" in India against all comers with an energy which secured its triumph. The first bishop of Calcutta was consecrated in 1814, and new centres of religious work were soon started all over Hindostan. The opening years of the present century were marked by a great advance in organisation.

The views of Mr. Overton on ecclesiastical topics are expressed with moderation of view, and with kindly sympathy for the opinions of those employed in religious work outside the pale of his own Church. As a rule, his tone is admirable. Almost the only phrases in a volume of over 300 pages which have grated on my feelings are those (on p. 151) on the erection of dissenting chapels. His style is more epigrammatic than of old. Whately was "beyond a doubt the leading spirit of that rising party which never rose," and Arnold's scheme "of making the Church a sort of theological omnibus" are phrases of undoubted directness. The evidences of his industry and knowledge are apparent on every page. He has practically exhausted the subject. There are a few misprints: the chief is probably contained in the reference on page 274 to "Mr. Gillmore, who knew Coleridge in his later years better than any man did."

W. P. COURTNEY.

Fifty Years of My Life, in the World of Sport, at Home and Abroad. By Sir John Astley. (Hurst & Blackett.)

I SHOULD recommend the Anti-Gambling Association and their active secretary to buy up an edition of this book, and circulate it at a nominal price among their most earnest followers, as a shocking example of the bad habit at which they are tilting. If Lord Rosebery, as he states, mildly informed their secretary that he was not ashamed to own a good horse, I fear that, if our jolly baronet were called on to reply to that gentleman's remonstrances, his language would hardly be so mild or parliamentary. I have no doubt that he would express his pride at having once possessed a horse that was possibly the best in the world, when he chose to show his quality, though Peter, as his enthusiastic owner acknowledges, on the racecourse was at times an idiot. I never shall forget the wonderful Hunt Cup at Ascot, when the angel, ridden by Archer, and carrying 9 stone 3 lbs., stopped halfway to kick, the whole field being well in front of him, and when we all thought our money gone, took it into his head to gallop, and walked in an easy winner.

Now Sir John tells us frankly that he has taken to authorship in the hopes of pocketing a monkey; and, doubtless, like Peter, he stopped more than once in his task and took to kicking, but coaxed himself into galloping again, and ended by writing the best book of sporting reminiscences to be found in the English language, dedicated it, with permission, to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, and, stone-broke as he is, will have the good wishes of every reader, that he may pocket the wished-for monkey—and why? because, to use the style of the worthy Mate, he has proved himself to be a good sort.

There is hardly any kind of sport in which Sir John Astley is not proficient. As a young man, he was the best amateur sprinter of his day; a good performer in the hunting field, and with the gun; a patron of professional sportsmen of all degrees; for some thirty years an owner of race horses; became a steward of the Jockey Club; in the course of twenty-six years won close upon £29,000 by betting; put hundreds of pounds into the pockets of professional runners, by the series of run-as-you-please contests which he organised; was the founder (to his own cost) of the Orleans Club; was present at the great fight between Sayers and Heenan; and, as Bell's Life would have put it, shared in the "greater mill" upon the Alma, where he climbed the hill with the thin red line, after which the sporting subaltern, with a severe bullet wound through his neck, but having still the use of his legs, bustled about and made tea for his wounded comrades; displayed his courage by facing the Irish brigade in the House of Commons in the seventies; and for fifty years proved himself among all sorts and conditions of men a brave, kind hearted, and lovable English gentleman. All these things the reader will find detailed in his book; and at the end of his career the worthy sportsman finds himself stone broke, and, if he has been his own worst enemy, certainly with no other enemy in the world.

Sir John Astley is an admirable story teller, and it would be easy to fill a column or two of the ACADEMY with plums picked from his book. I will content myself with one, which ought to amuse, without shocking, the most straight-laced follower of the Anti-Gambling League. He is describing how he gratified his Lincolnshire constituents by an equestrian performance, competing for the jumping prize at the county Agricultural Show.

"I believe it was on four occasions, that I competed on a good old hunter, a perfect and confidential fencer, that was bound to clear any obstacle, not excepting iron rails, or sheep nets, but barring water. At the Show at Grimsby there was fortunately no water jump, and I landed the first prize cleverly; the lad that rode the second was over seven stone lighter than I was, a fair margin at even this game of romps. Being naturally elated at my success, I, the following year, was rash enough to attempt the performance again; but, bad luck to it! there was a water jump, which caused me grave misgiving; for, to tell the truth, my old gee and I were not fond of water-jumping. If there was a fair bottom we always walked through any water obstacle; and if not, we galloped over it by means of the nearest bridge. So on that lovely, bright, hot day at Lincoln Show, I divested myself of my coat, waistcoat, and hat,

(all being my best, that were to appear the following week on the Lawn at Goodwood), and then with a cigar in my mouth, and a lady's parasol in my hand, I took my turn at the jumps. The old gee and I got on first rate till we arrived at the water, and then—well then we both seemed bent on a grand performance. He went at it hard all, I got firm hold of my baccy, likewise of the parasol, and it looked good odds on a mighty fly—but deuce a bit! As soon as ever his keen eye caught sight of the water over the guard fence he scotched a bit, and, jumping short, came down on his knees on the edge of the water, and I went over his head splendid, and turned two or three somersaults on the (fortunately soft) grass, fairly bringing the house down. Deary me! how the crowd did laugh, and large bids were made to me to have another shy at it, but no, not for me! The most creditable part of the entertaining cropper was that my cigar was not interfered with, nor the parasol any the worse. But my feelings were somewhat hurt by overhearing one of the crowd remark to his neighbour, 'If that old fool, Jack Astley, had not ridden his 'oss hisself he would have won.' That was hot, very—though not true" (vol. ii., pp. 127-9).

We must refrain from transferring any more good stories from Sir John's pages; let the reader enjoy them in his book. One word only to thank the editor for never interfering with the Mate's racy phraseology: the book is a splendid specimen of the vernacular.

JAMES INNES MINCHIN.

NEW NOVELS.

A Modern Buccaneer. By Rolf Boldrewood. In 3 vols. (Macmillans.)

The Queen of Love. By S. Baring-Gould. In 3 vols. (Methuen.)

An American Peeress. By H. C. Chatfield-Taylor. In 2 vols. (Chapman & Hall.)

A Son of the Forge. By Robert Blatchford. (Innes.)

His Troublesome Sister. By E. T. E. Poole. (Digby, Long & Co.)

Her Day of Service. By Edward Garrett. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

Eighteen of Them—Singular Stories. By Warwick Simpson. (The Leadenhall Press.)

Tales of the Early Australian Days. By Price Warung. (Sonnenschein.)

The Death Penalty. By C. Mellor. (Sonnenschein.)

Is Rolf Boldrewood about to poach upon the preserves of Mr. Stevenson—not, indeed, the Mr. Stevenson who has written Catriona, but the Mr. Stevenson who has written that ghastliest of modern tragedies, The Ebb Tide? Samoa, at all events, is almost as much in evidence in A Modern Buccaneer as in the recent years of Mr. Stevenson's life; and Captain Hayston only needs a slight admixture of orthodox theology to be such another as the Mephistopheles—Cromwell—Paton of The Ebb Tide. There is no other suggestion of Mr. Stevenson, however, in these three pleasant volumes. Rolf Boldrewood has none of his contemporary's mastery of the gruesome; and even although he reproduces scenes of violence in the life of his modern buccaneer, he hies to some South Pacific Arcadia as soon as possible. This shrinking from the absolutely unpleasant spoils what would otherwise have been a perfect story. The final volume is the most agreeable of the three; but it is a superfluity, if not an excrescence. The hero, who started as a Byronic Corsair, closes his career as a very matter-of-fact Ferdinand, married to an excellent and quite matronly Miranda. In creating Miranda Christian, also, it is obvious that Rolf Boldrewood has yielded to the undoubtedly strong temptation of utilising the familiar story of the Pitcairn Islanders. The two first volumes are in every way admirable. They realise, as nothing in English literature has yet done, the piratical life which can still be led in the South Sea Islands, the most important elements in which are English energy and English blackguardism. From his first appearance on the scene to his mysterious departure, Captain Hayston, unscrupulous, sensual, uncontrollably passionate, yet kind and even magnanimous, towers above all smaller and meaner spirits. It is also but fair to Rolf Boldrewood to say that, in compactness of plot and crispness of style, A Modern Buccaneer is a distinct advance upon anything he has yet published.

Mr. Baring-Gould has written several more oppressively "strong" stories than The Queen of Love, but hardly one better conceived or more artistically constructed. None of his girl-creations is equal in loveability or caprice to Queenie, whose travelling-show title is "The Queen of Love"; while as a combination of unscrupulous and remorseless selfishness with sour but sincere religious fanaticism, Jabez Grice stands easily first among his creator's sinister heroes. It is Mr. Baring-Gould's weakness, however, to carry things—especially "strong" things—to what Marcus Aurelius styles the "sweating point." This tendency is not absent from The Queen of Love. It is exhibited in the harshly contrasted characters of Ada Button and Rob Rainbow and, in their farcically tragical departure together from the stage on which they lag superfluous. It is hardly possible, indeed, to refrain from chuckling with Ada's light-hearted and light-fingered father over her effectual crushing of her father-in-law; but one feels at the same time that the crushing is essentially theatrical, since Jabez, having a certain amount of moral force, was really more powerful than Ada, who is absolutely unmoral. It is difficult, too, to get up any liking at first for Andrew Grice, the spiritless son of a tyrannical father, or to understand any reason, except the mystery of female caprice, why Queenie should prefer such a creature to her saviour, the magnanimous, loving, and loveable, if also eccentric and ungovernable, Rob Rainbow. But there are at the least possibilities of good in Andrew, and of these Mr. Baring-Gould makes the most. On the whole, however, Queenie is the best character in The Queen of Love, although there is in her story no incident so striking as the death of Jabez Grice. A good-natured kitten who is at the beginning, when her beauty, her misery, and her circus fascinations make both Andrew Grice and Rob Rainbow her slaves; and a demure kitten she is at the end, when tragic circumstances have removed her rival.

The author of An American Peeress can tell a story even of modern society simply, and without resorting to fin de siècle preaching or "psychology." But the plot is deplorably conventional. Badly treated by an English girl, Hugh Vincent, the heir to a peerage, turns for consolation to an American heiress, who is beautiful, and innocent, and simple, and in short "stunning." They are married and go to England, and there, of course, the English girl turns up again in all her imperious selfishness. Mischief and misunderstanding ensue between Laura and her husband. She discovers what London society is made of. Then Arthur Langdon haunts her with an object that may be gathered from the questions put to him by Lady Twirlington: "Why did you not leave her side at Lady Rawdon's? Why did you have her on the box seat of your drag at the last meet of the Coaching Club? Why was she in your party at Ascot? Why were you walking in the Park with her yesterday morning? And why were you with her at Lady Greybrooke's last night?"

Of course Arthur Langdon fails in his attack upon Laura, and she and her husband come to understand each other thoroughly. And, of course, Hugh and Laura and the baby go to America, and Langdon travels in Africa as "another Stanley in short." It is rather a pity that "of course" sums up An American Peeress, for it is not badly written.

A Son of the Forge is a study in matter-of-fact and almost sordid realism, which compels respect, in virtue of its obvious sincerity. The son of a drunken chain-maker in the Black Country, the hero of the story, who tells it himself, is apprenticed—or, rather, sold for a gallon of beer—to another chainmaker, who is appropriately known as "Black Jack." His father is stabbed to death; but he has a good angel of a sister, who exacts from him a promise that he will neither drink nor gamble, and sends him money out of her poor wages as a servant. She does not, however, exact from him a promise to return good for evil; and, shamefully treated by his master, he resolves to have his revenge. He takes lessons in boxing and wrestling, and, finally, after six years' persecution, provokes a quarrel with Black Jack. The result is quite satisfactory. The tyrant "drops like a poleaxed bullock beside his own anvil, and the blood gushes from his mouth in a stream." After this triumph over Black Jack, the Son of the Forge has many adventures, including service in the Crimea, and is taught many lessons in fraternity, the art of carnage, and female selfishness. On his return to England, he is compelled to take the post of messenger in the shirt factory of Solomon Brothers in Shoreditch, and to become the slave of "a huge pasty-faced, black-bearded, bloated Jew." Finding Solomons insulting Carrie, a girl whom he had met before he went to the Crimea, he administers to the scoundrel just such another thrashing as he had given to Black Jack. Then Mrs. Armitage, a benevolent lady and the good angel of the story, steps in and enables the Son of the Forgo and Carrio to marry and emigrate to Canada, where they have a farm of their own. The plot is loosely constructed; it is not easy to see why Mrs. Armitage should not have played her Canada trump at a much earlier period than she did. But the characters—especially the waif Carrie and her sister—are admirably drawn, and the Crimean and White-chapel scenes seem to be thoroughly life-like. The author of A Son of the Forgo ought to have a future before him.

His Troublesome Sister is paved with good intentions; but out of the poor materials of which it is composed it was quite impossible to make a good story. Jack, the best of young men and brothers, has a wilful sister Cynthia, who, very wickedly perhaps but not unnaturally, gets tired of the humdrum existence she leads with him, and, by way of experiment, tries life as a half-servant and half-companion to a vixenish invalid with a beautiful cousin, of whom the invalid is fiendishly and senselessly jealous. Cynthia falls in love with the betrothed of the beautiful cousin. He shows her some friendly but quite innocent attentions. But these are, of course, misconstrued: in fact, Cynthia's folly leads to a great deal of "trouble," including the death of this excellent young man. Jack discovers her, and she ceases to be troublesome, although it is rather provoking that she should not marry Jack's friend off hand, especially after she had been rescued by that friend's (sometime) erring mother. His Troublesome Sister might have been made a good tract instead of a most indifferent story.

Mr. Garrett's new book is a quiet study in Northern rectitude as embodied in Margaret Ede, a Scotch girl, who goes into domestic service under the best auspices in England, and who does good, in a variety of ways, to all with whom she is brought in contact. In particular she "saves" from disgrace a somewhat weak-willed, empty-headed, and conceited young man, and probably would have married him but for the romance that entered into the third-class carriage which bore her from her mother and her country life, and which took the not very promising shape of a young man of "vigorous limb, with a Glengarry bonnet pushed up from his broad forehead." This young man settles in one of the colonies, does well, makes money, meets the other young man who has been "saved" by Margaret Ede, and of course returns to England to marry her. Thus her "day of service," which included attentions of the most practical kind to a brother who has ambitions as an artist, comes to a fitting end. Altogether, this is a simple story of an unpretentious kind.

Despite a strain of affectation in Eighteen of Them—Singular Stories, the majority are above the level of ordinary bookstall fiction. There is a touch of boyish and therefore quite harmless cynicism about some of them, and the introduction at certain pages of Nelson's monument and the roan and the chestnut strikes one as rather a useless impertinence than anything else. But when the author is natural and sticks to heroes of the "old chappie" sort, who are born, as a rule, to happiness and cigarettes, he can produce as pleasant a story as need be. Take, for example, the sixteenth in the series, which is almost unspotted by fin de siècle. In it a young man gets engaged to a woman who is a great deal older and a very great deal uglier than himself, simply because he is too weak of will to resist female scheming, even of a rather vulgar kind. Then—quite in the usual course of fiction—he falls in with the sweet girl whom he can care for, and who can care for him. So the sixteenth story resolves itself into the desperate effort of Ernest Leicester to be off with Myra Stockwell and on with Sara Vaughan. That effort ought, no doubt, to have resulted in failure; but the author is old-fashioned enough to prefer a pleasant ending to an unpleasant one, if he can manage it at all, and probably the majority of his readers will not object. The best of these eighteen stories are mildly rollicking, and are excellently adapted for a railway journey.

The humour of Tales of Early Australian Days is occasionally too sardonic, and the indignation of its author is now and then too sibilant; but it is a book of very great power. The late Charles Reade himself could not have more effectually reproduced the horrors of that old penal system in Norfolk Island, which made bad men fiends, and converted even good men into tyrants. The ineffectual efforts of the courageous and philanthropic Captain Maconochie to humanise the system, and to baffle the demoniacal "Ring" which fights it, have the air of painful truth about them. "The Pegging Out of Overseer Franke" and "The Amour of Constable Crake" are calculated to afford the grim pleasure which comes from the punishment of savage cruelty and the defeat of ferocious sensuality. "The Heartbreaking of Anstey's Bess" is a proof—though not quite an adequate proof—that the author has a mastery not perhaps of all pathos, but certainly of that pathos which is based upon tragedy. He is, however, rather deficient in humour. Thus, there is a touch of barrack-room coarseness in "Parson Ford's Confessional," and there is not a touch of anything better. All things considered, however, it must be allowed that a powerful writer—one, too, whose strength is subjective rather than objective—is revealed in Tales of Early Australian Days.

The Death Penalty does not claim to be anything but a "shocker"; but it is clumsily constructed, and by no means attractively written. It supplies almost a superfluity of modern horrors—a liaison, a marriage which is morally less defensible than the liaison, two murders, an incredible piece of detectivism, and a suicide. Criticism is superfluous, and would be cruel.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

CURRENT THEOLOGY.

Adversaria Critica Sacra. By the Rev. F. H. A. Scrivener. (Cambridge: University Press.) This volume, the last contribution of the late Dr. Scrivener to Biblical criticism, contains a description of some sixty-three MSS. of the Greek New Testament, with numerous collations, and forms a valuable addition to the materials at the disposal of the critic. Most of the codices here illustrated belong to the Burdett-Coutts collection of Cursives, and to no more competent person could they have been entrusted than to Dr. Scrivener. Of the more important MSS. thus made accessible, special notice should be directed to Evan 556, of which a full collation is printed. The interest of this Cursive arises from the fact that it belongs to the "Ferrar" group, of which the four best known members are Codd. 13, 69, 124, 346. That this group is larger than used to be believed, seems to be everyday becoming more clear. The Abbé Martin would include in it Cod. 348, and some critics add Cod. 561; but Dr. Scrivener was of opinion that Cod. 556 more certainly belonged to the family than did either of these, inasmuch as it has the pericope de adultera after Luke xxi. 38, and transposes Luke xxii. 43, 44 to Matthew xxvi. 39, which characteristic variants (though present in Ferrar's MSS.) are not to be found in either 348 or 561. It is probable that the last word has not yet been said upon this curious family. Other Cursives, wholly or partially collated here, are Evann. 59, 66, 492, 503, and, of the Apocalypse, 26, 27, and 89. The numbers are those given in Scrivener's Introduction. The collation seems to be executed with care and skill so far as we have been able to test it. Scholars may be glad to compare the MSS. of the Apocalypse with the recensions of the late W. H. Simcox, referred to by Dr. Gregory, and published in the current number of the Journal of Philology. On p. xliii. an account is given of a Cursive in the possession of Mr. Hoskier, to which the number 618 is assigned; but this seems to be a mistake. Both the third and fourth editions of Scrivener's Introduction agree in assigning this number to a MS. in the University Library at Cambridge, and in neither is any mention made of Mr. Hoskier's Cursive. It is numbered 1278 in the Addenda to Dr. Gregory's Prolegomena. Evan 604, which was also collated by Mr. Hoskier, is, we note, described through a misprint on p. xxv. as B.M. Egerton 604; it is really B.M. Egerton 2610. A transcript is also given here of W<sup>a</sup>, an Uncial fragment of St. Mark at Cambridge; but this does not add anything to our knowledge, as it was printed in full (with photographic facsimiles) in 1889 by Prof. Rendel Harris as an appendix to his tract on Tatian's Diatessaron. This repetition may be accounted for by the fact (which we learn on inquiry) that a large portion of the volume was printed off before Dr. Scrivener's death, and that for the remainder his manuscript has been reproduced as nearly as possible in the form in which it left his hands. More important is the transcript of the LXX. passages from the Palimpsest B.C. iii. 46, which underlie a lectionary taken "partly from the Gospels, partly from the Epistles." We do not know, however, what system of numeration is followed when this MS. Evast. 249 is equated to Apost. 82.

The Liturgy of the Holy Apostles Adai and Mari: together with two Additional Liturgies to be said on Certain Feasts and Other Days, and the Order of Baptism. Complete and entire, collated from many Manuscripts from various places. (S. P. C. K.) This handsome quarto has followed in quick succession on the East Syrian Daily Offices, translated by Dean Maclean, which was noticed in the ACADEMY of April 14. The translation bears the same stamp of scholarly thoroughness; and we are able to say that, though in the present case more than one have been engaged on the task of translation, this work has had the singular advantage of being executed with Dean Maclean's co-operation. The text is much more full than that used by Renandot, and for the first time the English reader is put in possession of the complete Eucharistic services of the Nestorian Church. The "two additional liturgies" mentioned in the title of the book are the liturgies of Theodore and Nestorius. The shape (large quarto) given to the volume, as we have learned on inquiry, was adopted with the view of its being bound up with the Syriac text printed at the press of the Archbishop of Canterbury's mission at Urm, this Syriac text being intended for actual use in the native church. As in the case of the Daily Offices, the translators have wisely, in many cases, merely transliterated Syriac technical terms, there being no real equivalent for them in Western rituals. It is by no means certain that the words of institution are always introduced in the actual use of the liturgy of Mar Adai and Mar Mari, and it is questionable whether this tampering with the original text (though the fact is indicated by a footnote) is not a mistake on the part of those concerned. The introduction of the deacon's part, so far as it is derived from authentic texts, stands on a different footing.

The Celtic Church in Scotland. By John Dowden, D.D., Bishop of Edinburgh. (S. P. C. K.) This is another of the monographs on the early ecclesiastical history and antiquities of these islands which are appearing under the auspices of the S. P. C. K. Bishop Dowden is a specialist in Scottish, and more generally in Celtic, ecclesiology; and the preparation of the present volume could not have been entrusted to more competent hands. It is professedly a compilation from larger and more expensive works, to which the Bishop freely calls attention and acknowledges his own indebtedness. The object is to lay before the general reader all that is known about the history and character of the Christian Church in Scotland from the earliest times to the death of St. Margaret. The sources of information, if we except Adamnan's Life of St. Columba, admirably edited by the late Bishop Reeves, though various, are few and scanty; but they are here well brought together, and they are garnished by comments, sometimes amusing, always both sensible and true. We must not occupy space by quotations; but, in illustration of this remark, we would refer our readers to the Story of the Water Cow (p. 78), and to the remarks about that very debatable subject, the origin and character of the Culdees (pp. 203-7). On two points of detail where Dr. Dowden expresses uncertainty we think that we can help him. The title, præcipuus sacerdos, as the equivalent of Bishop, is given to St. Xystus I. in the Sacramentary of Leo. Hence we may infer that the præcipui sacerdotes on the Kirkmadrine Stone were Bishops and not Presbyters (p. 14). The meaning of polaire (pp. 319, 338) may now be considered to have been settled by Mr. Whitley Stokes. It is a loan-word from the Latin pugillaris, and means not a "bookcover," but a "writing tablet."

The Church in France. By R. Travers Smith. With Maps. (Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.) This volume belongs to "The National Churches" series, and will compare favourably with any of its predecessors. The points selected are those which throw the best light on that which distinguishes the history of the Roman Catholic Church in France from that of the same Church in other countries of Europe. The outline is well designed, and the proportionate value of events is well kept. There is, however, a difference to be observed in different portions of the volume. In the early part Dr. Travers Smith seems familiar with the texts of the Illyriæ, of Sidonius Apollinaris, of Salvian, and of the early French Councils; but when we come to later times we find indeed good authorities used, but hardly the same acquaintance with the originals. Augustin Thierry, H. Martin, Michelet, l'Abbé Guettée, Taine, Jervis, and Sidney Lear, are excellent guides to follow; but they hardly make up for the lack of the knowledge of the originals in all cases. In dealing with Jansenism and the Port-Royalists, acquaintance with the memoirs of the Arnauld family, so many of whom had gained hereditary distinction in the wars against the Huguenots, helps to account for their utter lack of sympathy with the persecuted Calvinists, whose doctrines their own approached so closely on some points. So, too, their excessive dependence on St. Augustin, their want of the broader outlook which an equal acquaintance with the Alexandrian school and the Fathers of the East would have given them, is apparent to all who study the writings of the Jansenists. If, as stated on p. 473, the Church of France "has dismissed St. Paul with Port-Royal," it might with almost equal truth be said that Port-Royal had previously substituted St. Augustin for St. Paul. Now and then a fact is omitted which we think should have been noticed: e.g., the establishment of the Rosary by St. Dominic amid the horrors of the Albigensian War, reaffirmed as a fact by the present Pope, who has dedicated the month of October to the Rosary, and made its recitation one of the most popular forms of devotion. So, too, the annulling by Leo XIII. of the Bull of Clement XIV. for the suppression of the Jesuits should have been mentioned in a note. In treating of the Catholic revival of the present century, the parallel of Sir Walter Scott with Chateaubriand, and English parallels with the whole movement that has followed, might have been indicated. We should feel inclined to give a larger place to Lamennais than does Dr. Travers Smith. Lamennais, like Carlyle, had something in him of the prophet and the seer, and the teaching of the Paroles d'un Croyant is by no means yet exhausted. A little too much is made of Lasserre's Translation of the Gospels, which was certainly not impeccable either in scholarship or in style. Our author does not seem aware how numerous are the translations into French, even from mediæval times. The account of Bossuet is somewhat poor: the Discours sur l'Histoire Universelle should have been mentioned as the last great attempt, like St. Augustin's De Civitate Dei and Milton's Paradise Lost, to justify the ways of God to man. The peculiar sensibility or sentimentalism of the Revolution, so strangely mingled with its cruelties, seem to descend from Fénelon, through Bernardin de St. Pierre and Rousseau. The great weakness and misfortune of the Protestants, that which paralysed their action during the Revolution and afterwards, lay in the fact that they owed their tolerance largely to Voltaire, that they were still more influenced by Rousseau, and that, when the Evangelical revival came at last, it came through foreigners. But all this is little more than matter of opinion. Of more serious consequence is the occasional clumsiness of the style. This is sometimes startling: the author should go through the whole volume, and ask himself carefully to what his pronouns refer. On p. 114, we have "the excessive intemperance of the prince in ecclesiastical affairs," surely "interference" is the word meant; "pretended" is more than once used in the sense of "claimed." In the notes, both in Latin (p. 119) and in French (p. 293), and elsewhere, punctuation, accents, and orthography are all faulty. Dates occasionally need to be supplied. All this might be easily set to rights in a new edition, and the work be rendered the best manual within the compass which we have in English of the History of the Church in France.

Addresses by Phillips Brooks. (Fisher Unwin. No man, whatever form his religion may take, can read these addresses without profit. We can well believe, as we are told in the introduction, that Bishop Brooks "was listened to eagerly by the brainy men of State-street, the merchants and the lawyers of the city, and by the devout women of the Black Bay, and by the poor and plain men who found a sitting at the noon hour in St. Paul's Church." "Brainy men" have not always been addressed in churches as the good Bishop addressed them, or they might be seen there more often. "My friend, the atheist," says this unique bishop. Were this the tone adopted towards those who doubt, many a so-called atheist would be in name as well as indeed an earnest Christian. The most interesting of the eight sermons is incontestably that on Abraham Lincoln, preached in Philadelphia, while the body of the President was lying in that city. The text was taken from the Psalms:

"He chose David also His servant, and took him away from the sheepfolds; that he might feed Jacob his people, and Israel His inheritance. So he fed them with a faithful and true heart, and ruled them prudently with all his power."

Phillips Brooks is not a preacher whose sermons can be judged by extracts. Those who never heard the torrent of his eloquence must now be content to read him; but they might fare worse. After they have read this unassuming volume we shall be surprised if they do not ask for more—an unusual request in the matter of sermons.

NOTES AND NEWS.

PROFESSOR MASPERO'S great work on the Dawn of Civilisation (Les Origines), treating of Egypt and Chaldaea, will appear some time in the autumn, simultaneously in Paris, London, and New York. It will consist of over eight hundred pages, copiously illustrated with drawings and maps made expressly for the work. The English translation, edited by Prof. Sayce, will be published by the S. P. C. K.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co. will publish in the autumn a new book by Sir Edwin Arnold, entitled Wandering Words, consisting of a series of articles which have been contributed chiefly to American magazines and newspapers, with numerous illustrations from photographs and from drawings by Mr. B. Boothby.

ADMIRERS of "Cheer Boys Cheer," "A Life on the Ocean Wave," and other songs by Mr. Henry Russell, will be glad to learn that he intends to publish at an early date a volume of random reminiscences, extending over the past seventy years. The book, which will be jointly edited by Mr. H. St. John Cooper, a grandson of the composer, and Mr. Percy C. Bishop, will be published simultaneously in London and New York.

MR. WALTER SCOTT proposes to issue three volumes of "Dramatic Essays," under the editorship of Mr. William Archer and Mr. Robert W. Lowe. The first series will consist of selections from the criticisms of Leigh Hunt, both those published in 1807 (long out of print) and the articles contributed more than twenty years later to the Tatler, which have never been republished. The second series will contain the criticisms of William Hazlitt on Keats and his contemporaries. The third series will contain hitherto uncollected criticisms by John Forster, George Henry Lewes, and others, with selections from the writings of William Robson ("The Old Playgoer").

MESSRS. WILLIAM ANDREWS & Co., of Hull, propose shortly issuing The Quaker Poets of England, by Evelyn Pyne (Mrs. Evelyn Noble Armitage) author of "The Message of Quakerism to the Present Day," &c. The volume will include biographical notices of all Quaker poets down to the present time, together with selections from their poetry, and will be prefaced with an essay on the peculiar characteristics of Quaker poetry, and a brief sketch of the rise of the Society of Friends in England.

MR. HENRY DUNNING MACLEOD's Treatise on Bimetallism will be published by Messrs. Longmans & Co. next week.

MESSRS. JAMES PARKER & Co., of Oxford, are the publishers in this country of a supplement to the Bollandist collections, dealing chiefly with the saints of the Merovingian period, which is now being edited by the Abbé Narbey. The work is based upon the discovery of valuable MSS. in public libraries and in ecclesiastical archives on the continent, relating to the first bishops of churches in Gaul, the martyrs of later persecutions, and the founders of abbeys in the sixth and seventh centuries. Each of the texts is preceded by an introduction, in which the editor explains the degree of authority that the MS. deserves; and he has also added a dissertation on the date of the abridgement of the Old Latin versions of the Bible. The mode of publication is in parts, of which there will be about twenty-five in all, forming ultimately two volumes. We may mention that one of the parts will be devoted to the evangelisation of Britain by the efforts of King Lucius, and another to the lives of British and English saints.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces the following volumes of verse for early publication: Sonnets and Other Verses, by Edward Harding; Jezabel: A Dramatic Poem, by H. H. Orpea-Palmer; A Christmas Tale, and Other Poems, by G. E. Gillett; and Sea Spray, and Other Verses, by J. G. Bednall.

MESSRS. WARD & DOWNEY, the publishers, have removed from York-street, Covent-garden, to 12, York-buildings, Adelphi, W.C.

MR. A. J. BALFOUR will take the chair at the annual meeting of the British Economic Association, to be held on Wednesday next in the lecture theatre of the Museum of Practical Geology, Jermyn-street, when Prof. J. S. Nicholson, of Edinburgh, will deliver an address on "Political Economy and Journalism."

THE library of St. Paul's School has recently received some interesting donations. The stock of Miltons has been enriched by a fine copy of the fourth edition (the first illustrated one) of Paradise Lost; the Defence of the People of England (1692); and Literae Pseudosenatus (1676). Another gift is that of Hermes, a forgotten magazine edited by Paulines in 1832.

THE Rev. W. Donc Bushell has issued two more of his interesting series of "Harrow Octocentenary Tracts" (Cambridge: Macmillan & Bowes), which—it may be as well to repeat—have nothing to do with the School, but take their title from the fact that the parish church was consecrated in January, 1091. No. 3 prints a charter of King Offa, dated 767, granting to Abbot Stidberht "terram xxx. manentium in Middil Saexum bituū gumeniga hergae end liddinge," which is by far the earliest mention of Harrow, though it has hitherto escaped the notice of local historians. No. 4 contains the record of Harrow in Domesday, together with explanatory notes, and contemporary documents relating to the consecration of the church by Anselm. It appears that the Bishop of London had disputed the claim of the Archbishop to intrude into his diocese, and that Anselm fortified himself with the opinion of Wulstan of Worcester, the survivor of the Anglo-Saxon bishops. There is also an amusing account of a medieval miracle that took place on the occasion. The Tract is illustrated with a portrait of Anselm, from a copy of the Monologion in the public library at Rouen, which has never before been reproduced.

THE last of the sale catalogues issued by Martinus Nijhoff, of the Hague, deals with military history and military science. It comprises 2225 lots, elaborately classified under about twenty-three headings. Some of the most interesting relate to Asiatic warfare and to sieges. There are also several curious pieces associated with the Emperor Charles V. The prices set on English books seem rather high.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

IN the July number of the Antiquary will appear a description of children's songs in Berwickshire; an article on the Heraldic Exhibition recently held at Burlington House; a report on the progress of the excavations at Silchester, so far as they have been undertaken this season; a description, with plan, of the earthworks on the Wolds called Huggate Dikes; and an account of certain antiquities in Anglesea, by the late H. H. Lines.

IN addition to the learned articles mentioned last week, the July number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review will contain the following: "Is the State the Owner of All the Land in India?" by Mr. B. H. Baden-Powell; "The Mussalmans of Bengal," by Mr. John Beames; "The Protected Princes of India," by Sir Roper Lethbridge; and "Badakshan: its History, Topography, and People," by the editor (Dr. Leitner), who will also publish portraits of the chiefs of the Ismailis, the disciples of the Old Man of the Mountains, the so-called "assassins" of the Crusades.

THE Humanitarian will henceforth be published by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. Among the contributors to the July number will be Sir Henry Rosevear on "Technical Education"; the Dean of Ely on "The Labour Movement"; the editor (Mrs. Martin) on "Commercial Immorality"; Lady Violet Greville on the "New Woman"; Lady Burton on "The Position of the Animal Creation"; Iota on "Life in the Australian Bush"; and Mr. W. H. Wilkins.

THE Newbery House Magazine begins a new series with the July number. The outward appearance, some details of typography, the paper on which it is printed, will all be changed, and the alterations editorially announced in June will come into force. Two new serial stories will commence, and the number will be profusely illustrated.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

CAMBRIDGE anticipated Oxford by two days in conferring an honorary degree upon Captain Mahan, of the United States' Navy. The following is the Latin speech which the Public Orator (Dr. Sandys) delivered on the occasion (June 18):—

"Hospitem nostrum, trans oceanum Atlanticum ad Britanniam nuper advectum, animo fraterno hodie libenter salutamus. Salutamus reipublicae maximae civem, virum et scientiae et historiae navalis peritissimum, qui in litterarum monumentis ordine perspicuo dispositis luculenter ostendit, gentium maguarum in historia maris imperium quantum valuerit. Dum talis viri libros stili lucidi lumine illustratos perlegimus, ante oculos nostros gloriae nostrae navalis imago velut ex ipsa nudis splendida resurgit; in imperio nostro maritimo non modo commercii nostri late diffusi causam et originem respicimus, sed etiam coloniarum nostrarum procul iacentium praesidium et auxilium agnoscimus; novis denique stimulis incitamus, ut orbis terrarum ad communem fructum, pacis universae ad communem utilitatem, gloriam illam e manibus nostris ne sinamus eripi. Auguramur etiam in posterum fratres nostros transmarinos gloriae illius participes futuros; interim utrimque eiusdem sanguinis, eiusdem linguae, eiusdem gloriae consilii, trans oceanum non iam ut olim dissociabilem, hospitio in perpetuum (ut speramus) duraturo, dextras invicem libenter tendimus.

Qua coniungit amor, nequiquam dividit aequor; Lungimus unanimis trans freta magna manus.

Duco ad vos virum hospitii iure Britannis coniunctissimum, rei navalis Americanae inter decora numeratum, ALUREDUM THAYER MAHAN."

At the same time the honorary degree of M.A. was conferred upon Mr. Ernest Clarke, the secretary, and Dr. John Augustus Volcker, the consulting chemist, of the Royal Agricultural Society. The other honorary degrees, in connexion with the Agricultural Show, will be conferred by the Chancellor in person (the Duke of Devonshire) on Wednesday next, June 27, for extraordinary expenses on which occasion the university has made a grant of £150.

OF those whose names have already been mentioned as recipients of honorary degrees at Oxford, Prof. Lanciani was unable to be present at the Encaenia on Wednesday.

TRINITY COLLEGE, Dublin, will next Thursday confer the honorary degree of LL.D. upon Lord Russell of Killowen.

MR. G. W. PROTHERO, of King's College, Cambridge, has been elected to the new chair of history at Edinburgh. His only serious competitor was Mr. P. Hume Brown—the biographer of Buchanan and author of several volumes published by the Scottish History Society—who had the additional advantage of being an Edinburgh graduate.

MR. M. R. JAMES, dean of King's College, and curator of the Fitzwilliam Museum, has been approved by the general board of studies at Cambridge for the degree of Doctor in Letters.

BALLIOL College, Oxford, has elected to honorary fellowships Sir Edward Fry (a graduate of London) and Prof. Lewis Campbell (some time exhibitor of the college).

THE Rev. Edmund Hogan, S.J., has been re-elected Todd Professor of the Celtic Languages of the Royal Irish Academy.

A UNIVERSITY Extension congress is to be held on Friday and Saturday of the present week, in the lecture theatre of Burlington House. The Chancellors of the three universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and London will preside at the three meetings, for the discussion of the following subjects:—

"The means of preserving and further developing the educational character of University Extension work, and the relation of the more popular to the more strictly educational side of the movement.

"The essentials of efficient central and local organisation, and the relation, educational and financial, of the University Extension movement to the state and to local authorities.

"The educational possibilities of University Extension work and methods in relation to regular university studies and degrees."

THE annual gathering of past and present pupils of Queen's College, Harley-street, will be held on Saturday next, June 30, at 4 p.m. Dr. Montagu Butler, master of Trinity College, Cambridge, has promised to deliver an address.

WHEN noticing the last number of Minerva, the German "Jahrbuch der Gelehrten Welt" (ACADEMY, January 20), we expressed a hope that the two portraits which have appeared—of Mommson and Pasteur—might be followed by a portrait of Lord Kelvin. We are now pleased to hear that our desire will be realised in the volume for 1895.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

THE LILY AND THE POET.

(A Reminiscence of Thirlmere, May, 1893.)

A Lily on the highroad lay
Beneath the fierco and scorching ray
Of midday summer sun.
It chanced a Poet, passing by,
Upon the Lily cast his eye;
His sympathy it won.

"Poor little flower," he pitying said,
"Who left thee thus with drooping head
Beneath a burning sky?
Ah me! it was a thoughtless deed
To cast thee forth, like common weed,
To wither and to die

Away from cool and grateful shade
Of garden bed or mossy glade,
Where, erstwhile, thou didst bloom.
My heart with pity bleeds for thee,
Thus treated so despitely
And left to such a doom.

The Lily is the spotless flower,
The emblem of the priceless dower
Of purity of heart;
King Solomon, in all his power,
Was not arrayed like thee, sweet flower,
Thou work of Nature's art.

I cannot leave thee in thy need,
Amidst the dust to pant and bleed,
I cannot leave thee so.
Close by there lies a lovely mere
Whose sparkling waters, bright and clear,
O'er waterlilies flow.

Upon its cool refreshing breast
I'll lay thee gently down to rest
And banish all thy pain.
The water-sprites will change thy shape,
And, as a 'Lily of the Lake,'
Thou yet shalt bloom again."

C. M. A.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE June number of the Revue de Paris opens with a witty drawing-room comedy: "Villégiature," by M. Henri Meilhac; "Une Colonne de Guerre au Soudan" is a fragment of Commandant Péroz's forthcoming volume, "Au Niger," the narrative of the French expedition against Samory (1892-3) under the command of Colonial Humbert; M. Rébellian's essay on Le Père Joseph is drawn in a great measure from the recent work of M. Fagniez, "Le Père Joseph et Richelieu," and is a rehabilitation of the character of the celebrated Franciscan monk so erroneously portrayed in de Vigny's "Cinq-Mars." Fiction is represented by the second part of M. Ferdinand Fabre's pretty story, "Mon Ami Goffert"; M. Gabriel d'Annunzio contributes a morbid sensational nouvelle "La Sieste"; and the number concludes with an article on Greek music, by M. Théodore Reinach.

THE chief article in the Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia for May is by Antonio Blázquez, on the Coasts of Spain during the Roman epoch. It is accompanied with a map. The preponderance of Celtic names on the north and north-west coasts over those on the south and south-east is very marked. Señor Blázquez pays more attention to the topography and to the measured distance of the itineraries, and less to toponymy and etymology than most of his predecessors have done. There is a laudatory notice of Carmelo de Echegaray's Historical Investigations in Guipuzcoa, by Gomez de Arceche.

F. Coñera, reporting on some newly-acquired volumes, asserts that there are far more books printed (i.e., lithographed) in Morocco than European scholars generally imagine. A new prehistoric station near Badajoz is signalled; and Father Fita prints an interesting letter from the lately beatified Fr. Diego de Cadiz, describing his method of conducting a Mission in 1781.

In the Revista Contemporánea, Javier Soravilla is now bringing to a close a valuable series of studies on "La Celestina," which began in the number for January 15.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- MENDÈS, Catulle. La Maison de la Vieille. Paris: Charpentier. 3 fr. 50 c.
SOMOGGI, E. Ludwig Kneuth. Sein Leben u. Wirken. Leipzig: Wigand. 3 M.
SPOELBERCH DE LOVENJOU, le Vicomte de. Les Lundis d'un Chercheur. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
WARNECK, E. Bücherzeichen d. 15. u. 16. Jahrh. v. Dürer u. A. 2. Hft. Berlin: Stargardt. 5 M.
WEIDMANN, C. Deutsche Männer in Afrika. Lübeck: Röhrig. 6 M.

THEOLOGY.

- CORPUS scriptorum ecclesiasticorum latinorum. Vol. XXIX. Sancti Pontii Meropii Paulioi Nolani opera. Pars I. Epistulae. Leipzig: Freytag. 15 M. 50 Pf.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- AUDIFFERT-PASQUIER, le Duc d'. Mémoires du Chancelier Pasquier. 2e Partie. Restauration. I. 1815—20. T. 4. Paris: Plon. 8 fr.
BOHMES, J. F. Regesta imperii. V. 7. Lfg. Innsbruck: Wagner. 12 M. 60 Pf.
DEMANTE, Gah. Etude historique sur les gens de condition mainmortable, en France, au 18e siècle. Paris: Picard. 3 fr.
DEPASSE, Hector. Transformations sociales. Paris: Alcan. 3 fr. 50 c.
DUVIVIER, Ch. Les Influences française et germanique en Belgique au XIIIe siècle. La Querelle des d'Avennes et de Dampierre, jusqu'à la mort de Jean d'Avennes (1257). Paris: Picard. 20 fr.
FORTES iuris germani antiqui. Hincmarus, de ordine palatii. Ed. V. Krausa. 16 Pf. Leges Visigothorum antiquiores. Ed. K. Zeumer. Hannover: Hahn. 6 M.
GESCHICHTSQUELLEN, württembergische. 1. Bd. Geschichtsquellen der Stadt Hall. 1. Bd. Bearb. v. Ch. Kolb. Stuttgart: Kohlhammer. 8 M.
GUILLAUME, le Baron. Le Mariage en droit international privé. Paris: Muquardt. 7 fr. 50 c.
HAMPE, K. Geschichte Konradins v. Hohenstaufen. Innsbruck: Wagner. 6 M.
LACROIX, Sig. Actes de la Commune de Paris pendant la Révolution. T. 1. Première Assemblée des Représentants de la Commune. Paris: Quantin. 7 fr. 50 c.
PEREY, Lucien. Le Roman du Grand Roi. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
PUBLIKATIONEN der Gesellschaft f. rheinische Geschichtskunde. Nr. XII. 1. Lfg. 4. Blatt. Bonn: Behrendt. 18 M.
REGESTEN der Pfalzgrafen am Rhein 1214—1508. 1. Bd. 1214—1400. 8. Lfg. Innsbruck: Wagner. 10 M. 80 Pf.
ROEBRICH, R. Die Deutschen im hl. Lande (c. 850—1291). Innsbruck: Wagner. 3 M.
SCRIPTORES rerum germanicarum. Lamperti monachi Hersfeldensis opera. Recognovit O. Holder-Egger. Hannover: Hahn. 6 M.
SCUDER, A. Führ. v. Betrachtungen üb. den Feldzug 1866 in Italien. 1. Thl. Wien: Seidel. 4 M.
WEISS, André. Traité théorique et pratique de droit international privé. T. 2. Paris: Larose. 12 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- LORENZ, F. Ueb. das schwache Präteritum des Germanischen u. verwandte Bildungen der Schwester Sprachen. Leipzig: Koehler. 2 M.
WALL, R. Das Ganze der Philosophie n. ihr Ende. Wien: Braumüller. 10 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- KROYMANN, E. Questiones Tertullianae criticae. Innsbruck: Wagner. 3 M. 20 Pf.
PAULI, C. Altitalische Forschungen. 2. Bd. Eine vorgriech. Inschrift v. Lemnos. 2. Abthlg. Leipzig: Barth. 14 M.
PORTA linguarum orientalium. Pars XIV. Koptische Grammatik. v. G. Steudorff. Berlin: Reuther. 13 M. 20 Pf.
SCHWARTZ, W. Nachträge prähistorischen Volksglaubens im Homer. Berlin: Seehegen. 1 M. 60 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A BASQUE GRAMMAR IN THE LIBRARY OF SHIRBURN CASTLE, OXFORDSHIRE.

Jesus College, Oxford: June 15, 1894.

In the ACADEMY of January 21, 1893, you were good enough to print a long letter of mine about a Basque Version (a fragment) of the Old Testament existing in MS. in Lord Macclesfield's Library. In that letter I promised to describe the other Basque MSS. belonging to the same owner—viz., a Grammar and a portion (in five volumes) of a Latin-Basque Dictionary. It was my intention to fulfil this promise last year; but the task of preparing for the press the edition of Genesis and part of Exodus exhausted all my leisure, and it is only after the lapse of more than a year that I am able to write. In this letter I intend to deal with the Grammar only, leaving the Dictionary for a later effort. I regret the delay; for it is characteristic of a stage of very early acquaintance with a subject that one then writes with more confidence and dogmatism. In 1893 I had just enough knowledge of Basque questions to justify me in writing a letter to The Times, as people do; but I have not yet acquired sufficient to give me any confidence in writing to a learned journal like the ACADEMY. It has, however, been impossible to copy out more than seventy chapters of a Basque MS. and to read the proofs over and over again, without gaining some knowledge of the strange language in which it is written, and even getting some insight into the vagaries of the Basque verb. The Delegates of the Clarendon Press have, with their usual generosity, published the O.T. Version in their series of "Anecdota Oxoniensia," and it is to be purchased for the not very moderate sum of 18s. 6d.

From the Introduction to that work I quote the following description of the Grammar. A Basque Grammar (press-mark, North Library 112, H, 18). This is a folio volume of 540 pages. It is written in a careful and legible hand on both sides of the leaf; it contains few erasures or corrections and (unlike the other MSS.) is apparently not a first but a final copy, ready for the press. The following introductory remarks are worth quoting, because they contain the only indication given of the authorship of the work:—

"Grammaire Cantabrique faite

Par Pierre D'urte Min. du st. Euangilo natif de st. Ieandeluz de la Prouince de Labour dans la Cantabrie françoise ditte vulgairement pais de basque ou bizcaye. Escalherria ou bizcaya.

De Toute la Cantabrie françoise on l'on parle le meilleur basque c'est dans la province de Labour qu'on nomme Laphurdi et surtout à st Ieandeluz et a Sara, deux parroisses de cet e province distantes de deux petites lieues l'une de l'autre, c'est ce que tout le s suone vnamim en co pais la."

The MS. proceeds to give a description of the Basque Alphabet, with minute instructions as to the pronunciation of every letter; this takes twelve pages. On page 13 we have the Pater Noster given in Basque ("en tutoyant et sans tutoyer"). On page 14 we have the Credo. From page 15 to page 39 is a set of vocabularies, French-Basque. These have been copied by the Rev. Andrew Clark, Fellow of Lincoln College, and have been published in the Revue de Linguistique of October, 1893, and January, 1894. On page 73 the verbs begin and continue to page 425. Then the adverbs, participles, prepositions, interjections, and syntax are briefly treated, not without continual reference to the verb. Then follow almost thirty pages of "phrases familières," French-Basque, and some more pages of the verb: these I have inadvertently omitted to mention in my Introduction. Page 538 is evidently the end of the treatise (though a leaf, by the mistake of the binder, has been placed after it), for it ends thus:

"Soli Deo honor
Et Gloria in saecula saeculorum
Amen."

Such is the Grammar which is now, by the kindness of Lord Macclesfield, in the Bodleian

Library. The question which arises is: "How shall it be published, if it is to appear at all?" About the seventy-three pages which precede the verb there is no difficulty. I have already copied the greater part of them, and they may be printed in some foreign journal during the course of this year. But I have neither the leisure nor the inclination to copy about four hundred pages of verbal forms. It is a task which would take a practised copyist about two months, but which would occupy me (with the time I could spare) as many years. It is not to be expected that the noble owner will allow the MS. to remain in the Bodleian indefinitely. It, therefore, must be asked whether scholars interested in the study of Basque will contribute the necessary funds for copying the greater part of this Grammar. The question of publication may be considered later; but it must, probably, be done by subscription. The generosity of the Delegates of the Clarendon Press is very great, but it is not reasonable that they should be asked so soon again to undertake an unremunerative work. Possibly their interest in philological science may induce them to offer favourable terms for the publication. If this should be so, I will gladly see the work through the press.

Having thus cleared the way for a practical result, allow me to conclude this letter with a few observations on the vexed question of the Basque Verb. They may be justified by the consideration that the publication of this Grammar depends on the question, whether the Basque Verb is worth the trouble or not. If the importance of the Basque Verb is admitted, we can hardly deny that it is somewhat of a disgrace to scholars that an independent treatise on the subject written two hundred years ago should not yet have seen the light.

I must be careful not to depreciate Basque studies, for even differences of opinion on this subject excite animosities which were once thought to be peculiar to theological controversy. With such a mass of verbal forms before us, it may seem paradoxical to inquire whether there is a Basque Verb at all, or whether these pages represent an effort to make up for the want of it. If its existence is allowed, we may next inquire whether these verbal forms attempt to secure, with inadequate material, in a way more or less clumsy, a result which other languages attain by a simpler method, or whether, as some Baskophils (lately styled Basco-manics) affirm, the Basque Verb is the most exquisite instrument ever invented for the expression of human thought. These enthusiasts are never tired of pointing out the ingenuity with which separate verbal forms mark the age, sex, rank or condition of the person addressed. Of course, no processes of the human mind are to be despised; but one is sometimes tempted to reply that the foreign learner (who alas! was not considered in the formation of the language) would be more inclined to appreciate the ingenuity if, instead of indicating relations which must be fairly well known to the conversing persons, it had been employed to distinguish with more precision, between Active and Passive, Nenter and Transitive, Past, Present, and Future, &c., &c. These verbal forms do not, as a rule, add to the richness and harmony of the language, but are usually unwieldy and cacophonous polysyllables.

No fact strikes the impartial critic more forcibly than the variety of results chronicled by observers of the Basque Verb. We are prepared to find gleaners bringing burdens of unequal weight from the same field, but we are startled when they show us different kinds of grain. It would be easy to give many instances, but I content myself with one. M. Van Eys observes in his compendious little Grammar (p. 46), "The Basque language has no more a Subjunctive than the English language," "the Infinitive is also unknown" (p. 47). Pierre d'Urte in a Latin dissertation, prefixed to his Dictionary (this dissertation has been copied by me and published in the Revue de Linguistique, July, 1893), treats the verb as remarkable for the variety of its Infinitive mood; Lecluse dwells at much length on the Subjunctive. Of course these contradictions may be reconciled, but there are many similar ones. What is wanted is that someone should give us an account of the Basque Verb which can be understood by plain people. If we can get at the actual facts, we shall be able to form theories for ourselves.

The most recent writer on the subject is Prof. Schuchardt of Graz. His treatise is a monument of the patient and thorough method of the German professor, but it is too deep and difficult for the ordinary mind. I have been told, and I believe the remark to be correct, that, if he be right, all other authorities on the Basque Verb are wrong. This is why it is important that a competent critic should test his conclusions. Your reviewer was somewhat unfair, for he complained that the professor took too much knowledge for granted in his reader, and that he did not explain. I have never seen a treatise on the Basque Verb in which more explanation is given: to the trained philologist familiar with the German nomenclature I have no doubt that it is admirably lucid. At any rate, Prof. Schuchardt has introduced a new method into Basque grammar by attempting to explain. Such is not the habit of native grammarians. Pierre d'Urte ushers his reader into a vast plain covered with a profuse growth of dry verbal forms, and leaves him to feed or starve according to his appetite. But there are a few oases in the desert. It is absolutely refreshing in such a dreary waste to come across such gems of complacent provincialism as the following:

"Generalem<sup>t</sup>. Toute la Cantabrie anoue que L'Expression de la Prouince de Labour a quelque chose de grand qui la distingue d'auec toutes celles des autres Lieux."

and

"Cette Grañaire peut seruir de Clef pour les autres Grañaïres ou Liures quelques differens quilz paroissent estre. Ils sont tous contenus dans celleci ou formellem<sup>t</sup>. ou virtuellem<sup>t</sup>."

and

"Tous ceux qui possèdent bien la Langue Cantabrique La preferent a toutes les autres."

LLEWELYN THOMAS.

A RADICAL BRIGHTON PARSON IN 1575.

London.

Among the Depositions made in trials in the Consistory Court of Chichester in 1575, are some curious ones against a Brighton parson, named David Thickpenye, on October 8, 1575.

Thomas Brapull, of Brighthelmston, in the county of Sussex, yeoman, aged sixty or thereabouts, deposes:

"That the articulate David Thickpenye giveth grete occasions of controversy in the towne of Brighthelmstone, and forbyddeth men to paye their tithes in the place where yt hath ben accustomed to have ben payde, tyme out of mynd . . . and charged this deponent and others, in the Quenes name, that they, meanenge the parishioners, shulde pnye none, neither that they (meaning this examinat and his partener Frend) shulde receive noe tithes. And this, he saith, was spoken on St. Stevens Daye, after eveninge prayer, in the open church."

Brapull further says:

"That in his conceyence he verely beleveth that the saide Thickpenye hath spoken particulrly against hys neighbour, Jhon Frend, in hys sermons, contrarye to the rule of Godes worde; but the particular pointes he dothe not remember; savinge he saithe, that whereas the said Frend should jeste with one Woigar (?) about a Leepe of wheate and a pecke of bariye, the saide Thickpenye did dyvers tymes repeate it in his sermons, seynge that the said riche man (meaning the said Frend) haveinge a barne full of corne, denyed the said poore man a Leepe or a peck."

Also:

"That the said Thickpenye will not suffer the ciarck to receive monye for marriages and purrenge of woman, nor the offerings at Easter, as it hath ben accustomed. And this, he saith is true, for the said Thickpenye hath forbydden this deponent, being Farmour (of the tithes), to receive none."

Also Brapull

"Saith, when the somnour cited some of the parrishe to answer for not painge their duties, the said Thickpenye said they [the owners] could not be content to wronge the poore men, but to send caterpillers amonges them, and saithe further, the said Thickpenye saide in his pulpitt openly, that the richest man of them all wold hange a poore man for xjd. And this was spoken, because this deponent, beinge constable, founde halfe a barrell of heringe stolen by one of Brighthelmston — viz., Nycolas Milles, which Milles he was indyted on at the Sessyons, and then rested at a xjd."

The second witness is the said John Frend, of Brighthelmston, Sussex, yeoman, and he deposes

"that the saide Thickpenye doth muche stande against the Farmers for there tithes, and that the said Thickpenye hath charged men, in the Quenes name, not to paye their tithes in the church, accordinge to their custome, charginge the churchwardens, 'yf they suffere anye to be payde there, he wolde present them, and also suche as paye the same' . . . he hath herd that the said Thickpenye hath taken upon him to be the Cunstables deputye, and that he hath knowne that the said Thickpenye hath ben in company of the xij, beinge non of them, and busiest of anye there, in-soe-muche that this examinat hath tould the Cunstable, if the said Thickpenye were there, this examinat wold not tarye."

Frend also says:

"the articulat Thickpenye hath preached againste riche men particulrlye, but not naminge them, but describinge them byc signes, that it might be easely perceaved who was mente."

John Slutter, of Brighthelmston, Sussex, yeoman, aged fifty, is then examined, and says:

"that the articulat Thickpenye ys a minister, and ought to be quyet, but instead, that he hath ben the author of manye controversies and debates within the parrishe of Brighthelmston, in forbyddynge men not to paye their tithes in the church, where yt hath bene accustomed to have ben payd, tyme out of mynde. Also, that when the constable and the rest of the xij, of the which this examinate ys one, are dealinge in matters concerninge there towne, the articulat Thickpenye ys intermedlinge amonges them, and wold always be dealinge in these matters, but that they doe forbeede him."

Also, that Thickpenye

"hath preached againste particular persons, but not naminge them, but yet describinge them, that every man could tell whom he ment."

And, evidently as to payment of tithes,

"He hath harde the sayde Thickpenye charge the parishioners to the contrarye in the Quenes Majesties name."

And

"That the articulat Davyd Thickpenye preached openly in the pulpitt in the church of Brighthelmston upon the xxth of Marche last, that the busschoppes were covetous. Whereupon, immediatly he saide, 'Haye, Thickpenye, haste thou spoken against the busshoppes? Well, noe fere, I shall heare of thys."

Further,

"The articulat Thieckpeny hathe openly preached in the pulpitte, in the hearinge of this deponent and dyvers others, that one of the xij in the same towne ya a whoremonger, and that he can presently appoynt him out with a wette finger."

Lastly, William Wuller, also of Brighthelmston, mercer, aged twenty-eight, deposes that

"the said Thieckpeny hathe delt in matters not pertayninge to his callinge, and that he hathe made muche controversye in the towne of Brighthelmston; and that upon a certayne night in July laste paste, aboute x or xj of the cloock in the night, the said Thieckpeny mett this deponent in Brighthelmston, and tould this deponent that he, the said Thieckpeny, muste examyne hym, sainge to this deponent, that the Cunstable had made him his Deputye, and therupon this deponent askid hym, where he had ben, sainge, 'if some in the towne shulde see yow soe late, with your staff on your shulder, they wolde marvell whether you wente'; and soe departed from hym."

There are no records of child marriages in the Chichester Depositions, though one boy of twelve falls in love with a girl and promises to make her his wife. Of course a number of curious cases of Libel and Incontinence occur. The most amusing of the latter is one of Thomas Cheynye, parson of Brightlinge, Sussex, who will have at his parsonage the wife of one of his parishioners, Thomas Harmor; and when she is remonstrated with, she answers indignantly "that her husband should be glade to tak the parson's Leavings."

F. J. FURNIVALL.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, June 24, 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Over-Specialisation in Work and Life," by Mr. J. A. Hobson.
MONDAY, June 25, 8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Kafiristan," by Mr. J. S. Robertson; "The Harnsworth-Jackson Polar Expedition," by Mr. F. G. Jackson.
TUESDAY, June 26, 5 p.m. Statistical: Annual General Meeting.
8.30 p.m. Japanese Society: "Court and Society in Tokio," by Mr. F. H. Balfour.
WEDNESDAY, June 27. British Economic Association: Annual Meeting: "Political Economy and Journalism," by Prof. J. S. Nicholson.
9.30 p.m. Cymrodorion: Conversazione.
THURSDAY, June 28, 9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Phosphorescence and Photographic Action at Very Low Temperatures," by Prof. Dewar.
FRIDAY, June 29th, 4.45. Japanese Society: Annual General Meeting.

SCIENCE.

The Garden that I Love. By Alfred Austin. (Macmillans.)

SCARCELY has the reader got through half a dozen pages of this bright little book before he finds himself on terms of close friendship with the author. Mr. Austin takes you at once into his confidence—or at least appears to do so: he tells you by what good fortune he chanced to light upon his rural retreat; he lets you pry into the details of his domestic arrangements; and then, taking you kindly by the hand, goes with you round the Garden that he Loves. Month after month, from April till October, he depicts his garden in varying phase; but, whatever its aspect, he somehow contrives to make the reader a partner in the simple pleasure which it yields. It is true that one is never quite sure, when listening to a poet, how far his descriptions are a direct reflex of the concrete, and how far the creation of his own imaginings. But no matter: whether real or imaginary, Mr. Austin's descriptions of his garden are equally delightful.

At first sight, the book reminds us a little of Alphonso Karr's Voyage autour de mon Jardin. Only the Frenchman deals more than Mr. Austin does with the animal life of his garden; and he comes down harder upon the systematic botanist. Karr accuses botanists of desiring to make flowers resemble the dried specimens in their herbariums—"horrible cemeteries, in which flowers are buried with ostentatious epitaphs." But Mr. Austin apparently objects but little to these epitaphs; and, with a rather liberal hand, sprinkles his pages with generic and specific names, all printed in the most proper italics. Some of his pages have consequently a very scientific look, curiously contrasting with others rich in verse: indeed, one hardly knows at first whether the book is a botanical treatise or a poetical reverie. As a matter of fact, it is neither.

Although the author shrinks not from the free use of technical terms, he strikes us as being hardly in sympathy with the scientific spirit of the age. In one of those philosophical reflections, which add so much weight and value to the volume, he puts into the mouth of a visitor these words:

"The present age has several marks of distinction; but it is not simple and it is not lofty. It is practical and pedestrian, caring for astronomy only as an auxiliary to navigation, and for chemistry only as it promotes light, heat, or locomotion. It has no disinterested interest in anything."

But surely it is hardly fair to brand us all with this utilitarian stamp. Astronomers study solar physics, and chemists delight themselves with the benzene-ring from sheer love of science, and simply to satisfy their craving for unadulterated knowledge. So also with the greatest scientific movement of the age, as reflected in the new biology. Does anyone suppose for a moment that organic evolution is studied with the view of making the ground yield a single additional blade, or in any way tending to further our material weal? We rather fancy that, on the whole, scientific men are a trifle too prone to transcendentalism, and it is only the necessities of life that tie them down, when they are tied, to utilitarianism. Man, it is true, does not live by bread alone; but still, as things go in this world, the crust counts for something.

Mr. Austin, however, has no intention of being hard upon scientific men, and his pages are, in truth, overflowing with charity. Gardening begets in its votaries a charitable temperament, and the author by no means overlooks the freemasonry recognised among amateurs. That man was assuredly no gardener who could say, in a moment of despair, "I cannot dig: to beg I am ashamed." Digging, of course, is of the very essence of garden-culture; and as to begging, no horticulturist feels its shame. Mr. Austin tells us how he has called upon an utter stranger with the request—"never, we are sure, refused"—"Will you give me a cutting of your Woodruff?" or, "Can you spare me a piece of your Rosemary?" And so your garden becomes, as he pleasantly puts it, "a perpetual reminiscence of the generosity of the rich, of the graciousness of the poor."

It is said, on no less an authority than that of Cowper, "Who loves a garden, loves a greenhouse too." Probably then Mr. Austin has a Greenhouse that he Loves, though he keeps silence about it in this volume. The volume, indeed, smells throughout of the open air, and we care not for the confined atmosphere of the greenhouse. The story of the garden breaks off with the first October frost, and then the volume closes with a little love scene. It must be remembered that the garden is throughout a central object, which the author manages to surround with much thoughtful and suggestive meditation, not untinged, however, with a slight cloud of pessimism. There is much charity for the past, but rather a lack of faith in the present and hope for the future. Still, the volume is one which will be heartily enjoyed by every cultured reader. He who opens its pages shall find enshrined in them many a sage apophthegm, many a sparkling bit of dialogue, and many a verse of tenderness and grace.

F. W. RUDLER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TRACES OF A FRESH SOURCE OF TRADITION REGARDING THE LIFE OF LUCRETIVS.

London: June 6, 1894.

When Munro published the last edition of his Lucretius, he was not aware that the British Museum contains a very complete copy of Pontanus's emendations on Lucretius. These emendations were copied with the utmost care on the margin of the Venice edition of 1492 by Pontanus's friend, Hieronimus Borgius (Girolamo Borgia), a well-known historian and poet of the time. He completed his task in 1502, the year before Pontanus's death.

Borgius contemplated an edition of the poem, for seven blank pages at the beginning of the volume contain a preface and dedication. We wish to call attention to a passage of the preface containing some details new to us regarding the life of Lucretius.

"T. Lucretius Carus nascitur Licinio Crasso oratore et Q. Mutio Scevola pont. cons. quo anno Q. Hortensius orator in foro quom diceret non parvam eloquentiae gloriam est auspicatus. Vixit annos IIII. et XL. et noxio tandem improbae feminae poculo in furias actus sibi necem concevit, recte gulam frangens, uel, ut alii opinantur, gladio incubuit: matre natus diutius sterilis."

"Cum T. Pom. Attico, Ciceroe, M. Bruto et C. Cassio coniunctissime vixit. Ciceroni vero recentia ostendebat carmina, eius limam sequutus, a quo inter legendum aliquando admonitus ut in translationibus servaret verecundiam, ex quibus duo potissimum loci referuntur, neptunni lacunas et coeli cauernas."

"C. Memmio epicureo dicavit opus. Romani autem epicurei hi memorantur praecipui: C. Memmius, C. Cassius, Fabius Gallus, C. Amafinius, M. Catus, L. Calphurnius Piso frugi qui Polidemum audiuit, C. Velleius Gallus senator, Vergilius Maro Seyronis auditor, Pollius parthenopeus, L. Torquatus, L. Papirius Paetus, Caius Triarius, in primis gravis et doctus adoleseens ut inquit C. de fi. T. Pomponius atticus et hic T. Lucretius Carus."

"Sunt qui putent unum et viginti libros composuisse et poematis praecipuum hoc esse, Aetheris et terrae genitabile quaerere tempus, et usque ad eum locum Concelebras, quindecim carmina intercidisse, quorum ego opinionem nequaquam probaverim."

The preface concludes with the date: "Nonis Julii M. D. II. sub Pontano cursim legente et emendante."

From what source are these details derived? We may point out that, in other points not concerning the life of Lucretius, Borgius shows that he had access to information regarding Lucretius' contemporaries, and also regarding the poem, which is derived from a source new to us. In the list of Roman Epicureans of Lucretius' time occur two names entirely new—Pollius parthenopeus and Polidemus. (For the latter name Prof. Robinson Ellis, to whom I have shown these passages, conjectures Philodemus, and Mr. J. D. Duff, of Cambridge, sends me the same emendation.)

Again, the legend of lost books is familiar; but the curious notion of an immense gap in the poem just before Bk. I. l. 4, Concelebras is entirely new to us, though Borgius goes on to give excellent reasons for rejecting it.

Borgius shows himself a man of not uncritical temper. Pontanus, it is well known, was a most diligent student of MSS., to whom we owe the discovery of several texts of Latin grammarians, one being the MS. of Donatus's commentary on Virgil. His notes testify to an intimate acquaintance with such writers. During his over twenty years' study of Lucretius—"supra viginti annos cum Lucretio consuetudinem habuit," as Borgius says towards the close of his preface—Pontanus had the opportunity of examining many a MS. now lost to us. I hope very soon to discuss these new details more fully elsewhere.

JOHN MASSON.

HERODAS.

Hithia: June 16, 1894.

VIII. 16 ff. The restorations of Prof. Crusius in his excellent second edition give us an abrupt and disjointed narrative. And in 19 the synizesis of σφάγια is very questionable. The word πόλις stands on a different footing. Crusius (Pref., p. 20) supposes synizesis in ερία, viii. 11: I do not know why (cf. πίνει διὰ σέ νιν, πρότερον οὐκ εἰδισμένον). He has overlooked 1. 19. In fact, he is somewhat careless about scansion: in il. 6 he gives us a spondee in the fourth foot, and (Pref., p. 20) ranks a line with a similar blunder among "potiora quadam." If Crusius is right about σφα, I would take the superscript above η as π, and read προσφάγματ' εἰμέν.

17. δδην with ε γ, ἀρίμας in 16.

18. ἐπεὶ δ' εἶδε με (εἶδ),

19. λήη ἐφάνημεν, assuming the superscript to be λ and a dittography, e.g., φαρφαρ, to account for the space. For λήη as a dissyllable cf. μουσήιον in i. 31. κήγω σὺν τ' ἀπαγγέλλαι. Lycophron has ἀρπαγείσης.

21. The line is marked as corrupt. Perhaps ἡμᾶς, or rather τηρούσι, ἢ ἢ παύγμ', the last word miswritten ποιμ. Crusius' ἡπάτα seems to anticipate matters.

23. ἐμπεσόντες, ὡς εἶλον.

31. Crusius might have said that exactly eight lines are lost after 31, viz. 32-39.

From 8. εἶσα κάμπειν. I do not agree with Prof. Crusius, who denies a κάμπη to the Choliambic.

F. D.

P.S.—VIII. 11. For the rhythm cf. εἰς αὐτίκα μάλ'.—ἀλλ' οὐδὲν ἡμπολήκα πω.

VII. 54. I do not think that there is room for δμα in the first gap. ?δεῖ δμῆλει νῦν ἡσέλας. The letters λι are sometimes indistinguishable from ν. In δμαεΑΙΝον the ν was omitted by parablepsy and inserted above the line. This would account for the stroke, of which a trace is left above the line on the verge of the second gap. For looped μ cf. iii. 66; vii. 127; viii. 43 (Crusius').

SCIENCE NOTES.

AN extra meeting of the Chemical Society will be held at the Royal Institution, Albemarle-street, on Thursday next, at 9 p.m., when Prof. Dewar will describe and illustrate his recent observations on phosphorescence and photographic action at very low temperatures.

WE regret to hear that the American journal, Science—which was started in 1883 very much on the model of Nature—has been discontinued, owing to insufficiency of support.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE June number of the Classical Review (David Nutt) contains two or three articles of importance. Mr. J. H. Moulton sends an elaborate criticism of the novel theories which Mr. F. W. Walker has contributed to recent numbers upon the Greek aorist. Dr. E. A. Abbott maintains, against the common view, that the method of reckoning the hours of the day is the same in St. John as in the other Gospels—namely, that it must begin from sunrise and not from noon. Prof. Percy Gardner re-asserts the main positions of his notable pamphlet on the origin of the Lord's Supper, for which he claims the support of Prof. Pfeiderer. Mr. Cecil Torr defends, against German criticism, his theory of the harbours of Carthage, which is (briefly) that the outer harbour was formed by piers in the sea, and that the inner harbour was nearly surrounded by the outer, but that its position is otherwise unknown. Mr. J. B. Mayor prints a first instalment of critical notes on the "Stromateis" of Clement of Alexandria. Among the reviews we may specially mention a very severe one, by M. A. E. Housman, of Schultze's edition of Babrens' "Catullus"; and a very enthusiastic one, by Mr. J. W. Mackail, of Jebb's "Growth and Influence of Classical Greek Poetry."

Διορθώσεις εἰς τὰ Ἀριστοτέλους Πολιτικά ὑπὸ Ἰωάννου Ἀργυρίου. Τεύχος α. (Ἀθήνησιν.) Any one interested in the text of the Politics will find here conjectural emendations on the first four books (modern order). The writer shows considerable acuteness in the perception of difficulties, and often, too, in his suggestions for dealing with them. Some of these suggestions have, prima facie at any rate, a good deal of plausibility, e.g., the change of πολιτικῶ to δεσποτικῶ in 1325 a 20, or that of οἱ μὴ κεκτημένοι πλῆθος οὐσίας to τὸ μὴ κεκτημένον πλῆθος οὐσίας in 1279 b 20. Many others would give us what seems a better or, at any rate, an easier sense than we can get from the received text, but depart from it too much to be regarded as anything more than the merest possibilities: indeed, the writer seems to be very little hampered by considerations of probability and evidence, if only he can think of something that Aristotle might fairly have written. Others, again, are quite needless, where there is no legitimate exception to be taken to the text as it stands, or where it is actually better than the proposed reading, e.g., πάντων, as compared with πάντας, in 1283 a 26. In 1282 a 10, the suggested change gives us καίπερ as a conjunction with a verb, an inadmissible construction.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

CLIFTON SHAKSPEARE SOCIETY.—(Saturday, May 26.)

MISS LOUISA MARY DAVIES, president, in the chair.—The Rev. H. P. Stokes, whose paper at the meeting of the Society on April 28 (see ACADEMY, May 26) was read by proxy, sent a note in which he said that he had since inspected the British Museum Harleian MSS. 2412 and 6926, of which the Museum Catalogue says Henry Lacey was the author. But they are both merely transcripts of Legge's play. The words "Henry Lacey, Coll. Trin: Camb: 1586" are indeed given at the end of MS. 6926; but this is doubtless only the name of the student who copied out the popular play. No. 2412, written in 1588, has nothing to do with Lacey; but it gives the words and music of the song, which are wanting in the old Shakspeare Society's edition and in the Cambridge MS. of the play. The contemporary handwriting says that the celebrated W. Birde was the composer of the music, a fact which is stated in Grove's Dictionary of Music. Mr. Cooper, the Cambridge antiquary, has also pointed out that the Harleian MSS. are only copies of Legge.—The president, in a paper entitled "Inconsecutive Notes on 'Loocrine,'" said that it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that the speeches in the play are tediously long, and that At's explanations were either unnecessary or should have been delivered in the undiluted vernacular; that big cacophonous words are constantly dragged in when simple and not unmusical ones would have answered every worthy purpose; that there is too much classical allusion in it; and that probably the poet was young in years, heart, and experience. But with these we get also the impression that the rollicking fun stands out bright and sparkling from the gloomy background. The cynical reader can find plenty to criticise in the anachronisms of the play and many other obvious defects. But gems of real poetry and sound moral apophthegms are scattered abroad with no niggard hand. Characterisation is not a strong feature of the play. The poet's best efforts seem to have been devoted to Loocrine and Guendolen; but the former, though well-intentioned, is common-place, and the latter is shadowy and not wholly true to nature. "Loocrine" is a tragedy indeed. The Strumbo scenes, which would seem to be the work of another hand, are an irrelevant burlesque. We walk through darkness and tempest; a light flashes across the road through an open doorway; we hear laughter and singing inside, but have to pass on again into the dark. The keynote of the play is revenge, and we are not allowed to close our ears to its imperious insistence. For a moment it seemed as though the pale light of the tenderer virtues in the mutual loves of Loocrine and Guendolen, of Humber and Estrild, might relieve the gloom; but both are quickly clouded by wrong and revenge. The Goddess of Revenge as chorus heralds every act. Others have dealt with the story differently. Spenser tells it with much simplicity, and alters its details; Milton, with the eclecticism proper to his exquisitely refined taste, takes from a howling wilderness of slaughter, passion, and revenge "a gem of purest ray serene," and fixes it in an imperishable setting.—Mr. Arthur S. Way read a paper on "Gorboduc," a play allied in many ways with "Loocrine." The tragedy of "Gorboduc" possesses a very special interest for those who love Shakspeare, and who appreciate the debt which English literature owes to him. It shows us from what Shakspeare saved us. It is the finest and most worthy example of a literary fashion which once threatened to become paramount; and not only so, but there was for some thirty years a strenuous and sustained effort to make it paramount—an effort backed by the influence of literary coteries, by the patronage of the learned and the noble, by the approval of royalty, and by the example of the literary models of that country to which of all others England was then looking for intellectual light and leading: an effort which was frustrated, first, by the innate repugnance of the English mind and spirit to such intellectual shackles; and, secondly, by the transcendent power of those who led the literary opposition, and who would have swept the invaders before them amidst a storm of triumphant enthusiasm though they had been ten times as strong and as numerous as they were. The appearance of "Gorboduc" marks the culmination of the falsely-styled classical influence, as it reached us after passing through Italian hands. Italy had given us many evil things: examples of loose living, of refinement in vicious pleasures, of underhand subtlety in politics; these our young nobles and budding statesmen brought back with them, along with their costly and fantastic garments, from the fashionable sojourn; and our scholars fell upon the wealth of Italian literature, till for one noble poem that rose like Spenser's, the daughter and the rival of the great Italian epics, there were a thousand translations of loose romances, thronged in shameless ranks upon the London bookstalls, till Asham sighed and Sidney shuddered. But all these, potent as they might be to corrupt the morals and vitiate the tastes of a passing generation, constituted no such peril to English literature as the so-called "Revival of the Classical Drama," whose harbinger and brightest luminary withal was

"Gorboduc." For the models on which this classical drama of the Renaissance was moulded we must go back, not to the golden days of Athens, to the free-thoughted, keen-witted audience that thronged the Dionysiac Theatre under the clear sky, not to the stormy splendours of Aeschylus, nor to the perfect modelling and calm majesty of Sophocles, nor to "Euripides the human." We must pass down the stream of time till we reach the hothouse atmosphere of a Roman tyrant's court, the artificial preciousness of the literary culture of an effete society which applauded declamation, sophistry, and word-painting, as against the portrayal of action, human motives, and development of character. In the early days of Nero there lived at the Emperor's court a man who occupied the difficult position of tutor, adviser, and check to the young tyrant, a man qualified for his responsible office by the endowments of a universal genius, a statesman, a philosopher and a poet—the Gladstone, Herbert Spencer, and Tennyson of his age combined. And this Seneca, while in all things he strove, according to the light that was in him, to elevate and purify the life around him, yet was the child of his age, an age in which plain living and single-hearted striving were supplanted by high thinking and high talking. And so it came to pass that, before he, too, fell a victim to the blood-thirsty suspicion of his master and passed from his sumptuous mansion and his paradise of gardens to the chill halls of Hades, he was wont to compose drawing-room tragedies for Roman salons, dramas which lounging patricians and languid beauties—to whom also the voice and harp of Nero appealed not in vain—applauded as far outshining the works of the Greek Titans, in repose, in refinement, in literary taste. The stage was no longer the scene where mighty destinies clashed, where in the storm and stress of passion characters were unfolded and hearts laid bare, where the transgressor was overtaken by Nemesis, and the hero showed "how sublime a thing it is to suffer and be strong," where through it all there thrilled and throbbled the life and stir of truest humanity, and men lived most intensely in the crisis of their fate. This new stage was a rhetorician's platform, occupied, not by actors, but by declaimers, whose so-called dialogue was composed of long alternating orations, of grandiloquent harangues, polished rhetoric, waxen flowers of eloquence, and sweetmeat confections of philosophy. So, while the stream of poetry and oratory flowed equally on before the curtain, various thrilling events transpired behind the scenes, and were duly and periodically reported by the messenger whose part was to bring life and colour amid these statueque serenities by the high-wrought elaboration and the intense sensationalism of his descriptions. That Seneca, in the Silver Age of Roman literature, should have been accepted by his own generation as the model dramatist is not surprising, for he voiced what was perhaps the highest thought of which that generation was capable; but the strange thing is that his influence persisted through long centuries and revived in full strength with the revival of learning in Italy, and spreading thence established itself firmly in a three hundred years' tenure in France and fought hard to make good its footing in England. At Christmas, in 1561 the gentlemen of the Inner Temple held high revel; the Lord of Misrule rode through the staring streets of London arrayed in panoply of gilded armour, followed by a train of a hundred gentlemen riding in gorgeous magnificence, "with chains of gold and their horses goodly trapped." Many of the Queen's Council were present at the banquet and entertainment that followed, whereat was presented for the first time this new play of "Gorboduc," whereof they spoke so well to their royal mistresses that on January 18, 1562, it was presented "upon a great decorated scaffold in the Queen's Hall in Westminster, by the gentlemen of the Inner Temple, after a Masque." Thus ushered into the world, and with such royal and noble sponsors, it is not surprising that the first English tragedy, hitting as it did the peculiarly educated taste of the literary leaders of society, achieved a success of enthusiasm. The subject was not ill-chosen, the argument being taken from Geoffrey of Monmouth's "Old British Kings," and might well furnish a useful lesson for Englishmen in the first years of Queen Elizabeth.

It was a call to Englishmen to cease from strife between themselves, and to be knit together into one great people, obedient to an undisputed rule. Considering the aim of the authors and the models they set before them, they executed their work creditably. A pirated and garbled edition of the play was published in 1565, when Shakspeare was but a year old, under the name of "The Tragedy of Gorboduc"; but the authorised edition did not appear till 1571, and then under the title of "Ferrex and Porrex." Its one great offence for us who have known Shakspeare is, that it is not a play. But this Englishmen had not yet been educated to discern, and those who were to teach them were yet in their cradles or unborn. Yet the spell of it lay long on the brightest minds. Sir Philip Sidney could find no fault in it except its disregard of the Unities (Apologie for Poetrie, ed. Arber, p. 63). Attention was also directed to papers on "Loerine" by Messrs. C. H. Herford and J. W. Mills, which had been read at a previous meeting of the Society (see ACADEMY, February 6, 1886).—This meeting brought to an end the work of the Society's nineteenth session. The plays chosen for next session are "Romeo and Juliet," "Edward III.," "John," "The Taming of the Shrew," "Every Man in his Humour," "The Merchant of Venice," "Much Ado about Nothing," and "Thomas, Lord Cromwell." The hon. secretary (9, Gordon road, Clifton, Bristol) will gratefully acknowledge the receipt of anything for the Society's library, which now consists of 589 volumes.

FINE ART.

THE ARCHAEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF INDIA.

THE death of Sir Alexander Cunningham naturally invites attention to the condition of the Archaeological Survey of India, of which he was the founder. So numerous have been the recent changes, that it is not easy to discover the present position of affairs. So far as we know, there is now no department anywhere which can be called the Archaeological Survey of India. There are, indeed, local departments—at Madras, Bombay, and Lucknow—which from time to time undertake excavations and publish reports. But the other local administrations—such as Bengal, the Punjab, and Burma—spend practically nothing on describing or preserving their ancient ruins; nor is archaeology recognised by the central government, either in India or in England.

Without intending to depreciate the work of Dr. Hultsch and Mr. Rea in Southern India, it must be said that none of the archaeological surveyors (since Dr. James Burgess) has done such good work as Dr. A. Führer, the curator of the Lueknow Museum. Readers of the ACADEMY will remember the accounts of his fruitful researches at Muttra and elsewhere, communicated by Prof. Bühler, which have thrown so much light upon the earliest period of the Jain religion in India. He is probably the only scientific excavator in India worthy to rank with Dr. Dörpfeld and Prof. Petrie. But it appears that public parsimony has withdrawn him from his proper work of excavation in Northern India, and sent him off on a roving commission, to examine hastily the remains of antiquity in all parts of the peninsula. Hence, we have the anomaly of a report for 1892-93, addressed by Dr. Führer to the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces, which consists entirely of the notes of a tour through the native states of Rajputana and Central India; while we are told that the cold season of 1893-94 is to be spent by him partly in Burma, and partly in the Punjab. It was always a trick of the Indian Government, if they have a good thing, to make it too common.

Meanwhile, while we are compelled to wait for the illustrated volumes on Muttra and Ramnagar, we must be content with these brief pages on the temples, palaces, and mosques of Rajputana and Central India. Rajputana is to this day the chief home of the Jain sect; and it must have been with special pleasure that Dr. Führer visited the ancient Jain temples on Mount Abu, and discovered that the domestic architecture of Rajputana in medieval times is of Jain type. Among the places described by him are—Maudor, the former capital of Jodhpur; the comparatively modern city of Udaipur and the old hill fortress of Chitorgarh; the Muhamadan ruins of Mandu; and the Buddhist stupas of Sanchi. At the latter place he spent some time digging, and was fortunate enough to unearth quite a harvest of new inscriptions. From one of them he infers that Stupa No. 1 was probably built before the days of Asoka; while another proves that Buddhist pilgrims used still to visit the place as late as the tenth or eleventh century. These new inscriptions are to be published in the final volume of Epigraphia Indica, under the editorship of Dr. E. Hultzsch, of Madras; but hereafter, it seems, all epigraphical matter is to appear only in the official supplement to the Indian Antiquary, that admirable periodical which was founded by Dr. James Burgess as far back as 1871, and which is now edited by Major Temple. We understand, however, that Dr. Führer will himself bring out an illustrated volume on the Monumental Antiquities and Inscriptions of Rajputana.

The Government of the North-Western Provinces, while sending Dr. Führer to Central India, has not been altogether unmindful of archaeological interests within its own jurisdiction. During the past four years Mr. E. W. Smith, who holds the post of architectural surveyor, has been engaged upon a detailed survey of the Mogul city of Fatehpur Sikri, which is destined to furnish material for no less than four volumes of illustrations and letterpress. Mr. Smith is already known by his architectural descriptions of Jaunpur, where earlier Hindu temples have been utilised for building Muhamadan mosques. Fatehpur Sikri is a site of a different, indeed of a unique character. The entire city—with its gates, walls, palaces, private houses, official buildings, mosques, and tombs—was erected at one time, and remains to the present day almost untouched. It was built by Akbar for his capital, in a style of architecture that combines Muhamadan and Hindu forms; and it has been deserted since his death (A.D. 1605). We have thus a unique example of Mogul architecture at its best period, and in excellent preservation. Of special interest are the coloured paintings on the wall, which seem to show traces of both Chinese and Italian influence. Copies of these paintings have been made, and will be reproduced in facsimile by Mr. Griggs's process. During the past season, also, no less than 143 sheets of drawings were made, and 72 photographic negatives were prepared, while plaster casts were taken of the best specimens of ornamental carvings. In advance of the final publication, in four volumes, the Report before us is illustrated with half-a-dozen photographs, including one of the very Hinduised throne-pillar in Akbar's privy council chamber (of which, by the way, there is a model at South Kensington); and with drawings in outline of some of the frescoes, which reveal most distinctly Buddhist and Christian influences.

Whatever may be thought of the Archaeological Survey of India, there can be no doubt that the "circle" of the North-Western Provinces is actively employed on good work.

J. S. C.

EXPLORATION OF HADRIAN'S WALL.

No branch of Roman history has been studied with so much success during the last few years as the military system and frontiers of the Empire. In every quarter, on the Rhine and the Danube, in Africa, Egypt and Asia, excavations are being planned and discoveries made. In Germany the Imperial Government has lately established and subsidised a Commission to examine systematically the lines between Coblenz and Regensburg; and the work has already produced important results. It is now proposed to make further exploration of the best preserved and perhaps the most elaborate of all the Roman frontier lines, that which crosses northern England from the mouth of the Tyne to Solway Firth.

Much has been done to explore this frontier line. The life-long labours of Dr. Bruce were full of fruit; and ten years ago Prof. Mommsen was able to say, in his account of Britain, that Hadrian's Wall was at that date the best known of all the Roman frontier defences. But the progress of inquiry has brought forward new problems, and further exploration seems necessary. In particular, it is desirable to examine the Vallum, the strange and solid earthwork which accompanies the Wall for almost all its length, and further to ascertain whether our Wall is attached to any Græmatic Ditch like that recently found in Germany. It might also be possible, with the consent of landlords, to explore one or two of the stone forts and fortresses of the Wall. For all such work the present is pre-eminently the time, when other workers in other countries can interchange discoveries and lend mutual aid. The visit paid to the north of England last summer by Gen. von Sarwey, military director of the Reichslimescommission, showed how much such interchange of aid may profit.

Fortunately the work is not only proposed, but begun. In Northumberland the Newcastle Society of Antiquaries dug some sections in the Vallum last summer with very notable results, and the work is to be continued. The Cumberland Archaeological Society has voted £50, and appointed a small committee to select suitable sites and promote excavations along the western part of the Wall. We venture to appeal for subscriptions to be applied, according to need, to these good works. Oxford scholars, much as they have done for scholarship and for research, especially in Greek lands, have too much neglected the treasures at our doors; but many of them know the Roman Wall and may be willing to help in examining it. Subscriptions may be sent to the undersigned.

H. F. PELHAM.
J. L. G. MOWAT.
F. HAVERFIELD.

Oxford: June 12, 1894.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MESSRS. BLADES, EAST & BLADES announce a volume of photographic reproductions, by the collotype process, of forty of the pictures in the present loan exhibition at the Guildhall. Among these selected are—three of the early works of Sir J. E. Millais, Landseer's "Monarch of the Glen," Rossetti's "Joli Cœur," Sir E. Burne-Jones's "Hesperides," Mr. Whistler's "Miss Alexander," Mr. Holman Hunt's "Strayed Sheep," Mr. Orchardson's "Her Mother's Voice," and Lady Butler's "Scotland for Ever." Mr. A. G. Templer, art director of the Guildhall Gallery, contributes the letterpress to the book, which will be entitled Masterpieces of Art.

THE following exhibitions will open next week: a collection of two hundred water-colour drawings of Bible Lands—Babylonia, Egypt, Sinai, &c.—by Mr. Henry A. Harper, at the Fine Art Society's, New Bond-street; and a collection of bookbindings from all parts of the world, at the Caxton Head, High Holborn.

THE following four pictures were bought at the Eastlake sale for the National Gallery:—And. Cordelle Agii.—Virgin and Child, with St. John Baptist and St. Catherine; a signed picture, dated 1504. Ambrogio Borgognone.—Virgin and Child; the building of the Certosa at Pavia in the background. Filippino Lippi.—Virgin and Child and Infant St. John (attributed to Botticelli in the catalogue of sale). Ercole de' Roberti.—A Diptych. On the left the Adoration of the Shepherds; on the right the dead figure of our Saviour supported by angels, with St. Jerome and St. Francis; in the background the Crucifixion. Small, and very delicately finished.

THE late Mr. John Hill, of Streatham, has bequeathed to the South Kensington Museum his collection of bronzes, ivories, Chelsea and oriental china, enamels, lac, jade, oil-paintings, water-colour drawings, sketches and studies by Mr. Stacy Marks, "in gratitude for the pleasure and profit he has derived from his visits to that museum."

THE chairman of the Palestine Exploration Fund announces that Mr. Frederick Bliss has opened ground at Jerusalem. His instructions were to take up the "Rock Scarp of Zion," and to trace it eastwards in accordance with the description of Josephus. The excavations already made disclose the continuation of the Scarp, with unexpected chambers, passages, stairs, and mosaic pavements, of which it would be premature to attempt any explanation.

ON Wednesday evening the members of the Noviomagan, Cooked Hat, and Urban Clubs, of the councils of the Bibliographical and Ex-libris Societies, and other gentlemen, met at the house of Mr. H. S. Ashbee in Bedford-square, to inspect some antiquities which Mr. Ashbee had collected during his recent visit to Cyprus.

MR. F. HAVERFIELD has reprinted from the Archæological Journal (Exeter: Pollard) his third annual report on "Roman Inscriptions in Britain." It covers the period 1892-93, and also includes a few older finds that had been overlooked, and some corrections of published texts based upon fresh examination of the originals. As on previous occasions, Mr. Haverfield deals at greater length with the more important discoveries of the year: the dedication of a restored monument to Jupiter at Cirencester, which may date from the reign of Julian; the Carlisle tombstone of about the same date, which may possibly be Christian; and the Lan Chester altar dedicated to Garman-gabis. Among the inscriptions that are not new, we may specially mention two: a tile, with three lines of cursive writing, which is said to have been found long ago at Silchester; and a gold ring said to have been ploughed up more than thirty years ago at Birchington, in Thanet. Most of the inscriptions are illustrated either with photographs or with cuts. Mr. Haverfield hopes to go on with the work of revising all the readings in the seventh volume of the Corpus; and he will always be glad to receive information of new finds, addressed to him at Christ Church, Oxford.

THE STAGE.

"SARAH" AND MR. WILLARD.

THE return of Mr. Willard, and the appearance of Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, almost ensure for the week that has witnessed those events the distinction of being the most important—at least the most interesting—of the theatrical season. Hitherto, at all events, only the week that witnessed the return of Mr. Irving has vied with it in significance. But Mr. Irving's absences, though long, are not endless: in regard to Mr. Willard we were, we confess, almost beginning to despair about his coming back. All the world is glad to see him, and most wise has he been, in our opinion, in presenting himself—a truant of some four years' standing—in that very part which, so far at all events as England is concerned, has obtained for him his highest success. It is in "The Middleman"—in the great part, of course, of Cyrus Blenkarn—that he has chosen to re-appear, though next week he will be seen in a light piece now to London, Mr. Barrie's "Professor's Love Story." So much the better: we shall see him on a quite new side. As regards "The Middleman," there is, in the piece itself, something to blame, but more to like. In "The Middleman," as in at least one other instance in which Mr. Henry Arthur Jones has discussed social questions, he has been apparently not well-informed, and perhaps also a little prejudiced. In any case, his capitalist—his gentleman of method, who can organise, guide, and complete, where Blenkarn can but initiate—his capitalist is not typical. The character may be welcomed, perhaps as an embodiment and presentation of the evils of capital, by wholly unpractical High Church curates, silly women who dabble in political economy, platform-talkers who thrive on the remote remedy of some fancied present abuses; but to people with the means of knowing, this imaginary capitalist will seem, and always has seemed, curiously unreal. He is abnormal; he is an exception; he makes sympathy with Blenkarn cheaper, easier, and more obvious. Subtler treatment would have contrasted Blenkarn, the gifted and delightful inventor—the Palissy of the period—with some capitalist not wholly nor even chiefly heartless. Thus might truth have been served, and the Socialist, in his ill-lit, unventilated corner, with the partial view and the impassioned ignorance, naturally have been disappointed. But, at the theatre, subtlety of treatment—save on the actor's part—is, of course, rare. For the exercise of that virtue there is wanted other conditions: a printed book with the slower and calmer appreciation of it.

Now, in the interpretation of Cyrus Blenkarn—a character which Mr. Jones has admirably conceived—Mr. Willard shows singular subtlety, the subtlety which is truth. Simple, too, is the performance for all that—or seems so—in its broad presentation of a sympathetic humanity. America is sometimes foolishly charged with having spoilt our cleverest actors, in coarsening their effects. There is nothing whatever in the accusation. Certainly mere repetition—which a long American, or even a long provincial tour implies—is apt to coarsen an effect; but the American audiences in themselves are singularly good to act before: very refined, for the most part, in their perceptions; very alert to discern alike the main truth and the particular detail. As a matter of fact, American tours have spoilt nobody who would not have been spoilt elsewhere. Have they, for instance, for one moment spoilt Mr. Irving?—whose effects are more delicate than ever, more deeply thought out, and executed with a more complete precision. And as to Mr. Willard, by common consent his watchfulness, his real and sincere artistry, have kept his performance of Blenkarn happily fresh, so that he displays to-day—perhaps even more notably than four years ago—at once the refined intention and the convincing performance. Mr. Willard is an artist whose return it is indeed a pleasure to welcome.

Times have changed since the earlier appearances of Sarah Bernhardt in England; and even the Sarah Bernhardt of those days was not in all respects the Sarah Bernhardt who had bestowed fascination upon pieces that we saw at the Odéon, that were memorable chiefly by reason of her. But in her earlier London days—to go back no further—Madame Bernhardt was wont to be an interpreter of dramatic literature, exquisite or grand. Latterly, the more “swelling port” of the performer has in a measure eclipsed or over-ridden that which had been notable in the play. In place of Racine and Corneille, and Meilhac and Halevy, and André Thuriot, we have had first Victorien Sardou, as a pure purveyor of situations, and now Armand Silvestre, whose prose is apt to be turgid, and his poetry not the most refined and penetrating. “Izyl” is mainly notable as a great opportunity for an actress and as a fitting excuse for scenic display. But whatever be the medium through which we are invited to see her, “Sarah,” as an artist, remains wonderful.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

MUSIC.

OPERA.

THE season of so-called “German Opera” commenced at Drury Lane on Tuesday evening with “Die Walküre.” Wagner, in a letter, objected to one of his works and, if we mistake not, one of the sections of the “Ring,” being sandwiched between “Marta” and “Le Prophète”; but he probably never contemplated the idea of two great opera houses within a few yards of each other giving on the same evening, the one, his “Walküre,” the other Gounod’s “Roméo et Juliette.” Such was the case on Tuesday, and each master drew his many admirers. The performance at Drury Lane was not all that could be desired; there were, indeed, signs of hurried rehearsal. The conductor, Herr Lohse, has evidently thorough knowledge of the score, and he displayed great care and ability; but the forces under him would have been the better for further training. Genius is impracticable. Beethoven refused to acknowledge the limitations of the human voice; and Wagner wrote such complicated music, that, under ordinary conditions, shortcomings are inevitable. At present it is a question whether we are to hear the “Ring” or portions of it given as well as circumstances will permit, or whether we are to wait until we have a proper “Wagner” theatre, and specially trained artists and orchestra, so that the intentions of the composer may be realised as fully as possible. The answer to this question is simple. We ought thankfully to accept such performances as are offered, and live in hopes of better ones. The fine impersonation of Brünnhilde by Frau Klafsky, and the impressive presentation of Siegmund by Herr Max Alvary, amply atoned for any imperfections either on or below the stage; and Fraulein Gherlsen as Sieglinde and MM. Wiegand and David Bispham as Wotan and Hunding deserve very high praise. Fraulein Gherlsen was, at first, somewhat cold in voice and manner, but she was heard to much better advantage in the second act. Among the impracticabilities of the “Ring” must be counted its length; “Die Walküre” is only part of a whole, and for its full meaning and effect ought to be heard in its proper connexion. Wagner himself was the first to authorise this partition of the “Ring.” Excerpts from his works are now the fashion at concerts; and the day seems, as yet, far distant when it will be considered wrong to alter or mutilate Wagner, just as, now, any tampering with Beethoven causes vials of wrath to be poured on the offender’s head. “Siegfried” is to be given on Saturday.

M. J. Massenet’s Lyric Episode in two acts, entitled “La Navarraise,” was produced at Covent Garden on Wednesday evening. Short and exciting libretti are the order of the day, and the present one forms no exception. Anita, La Navarraise, is beloved by Sergeant Araquil, and his proud father disdains the poor maiden. But she kills the Carlist chief, Zuccaraga, and obtains the reward offered by Garrido, the general of the Royalist forces. Araquil sees her returning from Bilbao, held by the Carlists, and a hasty attempt at explanation between the lovers leads to misunderstanding of Anita’s motive; he, already wounded, dies of a broken heart, and she loses her reason. The book is highly sensational, and, for the time, holds the audience spellbound, and it is wonderful how well, considering the gloomy character of the piece, the interest is sustained throughout. The maiden’s poverty causes her to despair, despair leads to a wild resolve, and finally, ecstatic joy is changed into raving madness. And this dark story has no silver lining: there is only war with its horrid sounds and sights, there is the sad song of the soldiers, and the tragic death of the young officer. The composer by his art, by his admirable colouring, has intensified the story, and always in so appropriate a manner that, for the most part, one almost forgets that music is being played: word and tone seem one. It is a fine specimen of modern, and, one may say, French art, but to produce proper effect demands artists of the very highest rank. The performance on Wednesday—the first, in fact, of the work in any country—was magnificent, and the piece was picturesquely mounted. Mme. Calvé was the Anita, M. Alvarez the Araquil, and M. Plançon the Garrido; and their names suffice. M. Ph. Flon, the conductor from the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels, displayed great ability. There were calls for the composer, but he would not appear; such modesty is rare. “La Navarraise” was preceded by Gluck’s “Orfeo,” the placid music of which formed a striking contrast to the storm and stress of the new work.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

RECENT CONCERTS.

MR. TIVIDAR NACHEZ gave his last violin recital on Saturday afternoon at St. James’s Hall. The programme was again, on the whole, one of great excellence. The two Romances of Beethoven, although originally written with orchestral accompaniment, are justifiable in the concert-room; but when will violinists give up “recital” performances of the whole, or even a part, of the Beethoven or the Mendelssohn Concerto? Mr. Nachez played the first movement of the Beethoven Concerto (and pray why was it announced as grand?), but the effect was unsatisfactory. There is plenty of good genuine violin music that only requires a pianoforte accompaniment. The concert-giver played his best in Bach’s Suite in E, and he was also heard to advantage in an effective Romance by Mr. A. Hervey. Mr. Ben Davies was successful as the vocalist.

Herr Richter gave his third concert on Monday evening, and it was certainly the longest on record: and unnecessarily long, for it included a pianoforte Concerto by Rubinstein, of small musical value in itself, selected, apparently, merely to show us that Mr. Josef Hofmann has wonderful command of the keyboard, and that he is an excellent interpreter of his master’s difficult music. But of this the pianist has already this season given repeated proofs; and at an important concert, such as the one in question, he might surely have chosen something really worth listening to. His performance was a remarkably fine one, and the public clamoured for an encore—and obtained it. It is many years since an encore has been granted at these concerts, so that this slight lapse from the path of progress may, perhaps, be forgiven: probably Herr Richter was anxious that the talented young pianist should have his full share of success. The programme contained Dvorák’s bright, clever “Carneval” Overture, and the Verwandlungs-Musik and Graal-Feier from the first act of “Parsifal,” and concluded with Schumann’s Symphony in D Minor. The Overture was brilliantly performed; but we have heard more impressive renderings, even in the concert-room, of the “Graal” music.

Miss Eleonore D’Esterre-Keeling commenced a series of pianoforte lecture recitals at the small Queen’s Hall on Monday afternoon. They are to illustrate “two centuries of pianoforte music”: commencing with the “fathers of the pianoforte,” she will pass on to their legitimate children, “the classical composers,” and, according to some, to their illegitimate offspring known as the “romantic school.” The scheme is an excellent one, and, on the whole, Miss D’Esterre’s first recital was one of considerable interest. There are many young pianoforte players, who know little more of pianoforte music than the notes, and who would learn something useful by attending such recitals. With regard to the “romantic” programme, it was scarcely wise to represent Liszt merely by two transcriptions, one from “Lohengrin,” the other from Mendelssohn’s “Midsummer Night’s Dream.”

It is impossible to notice many interesting concerts, such as the successful one given by Miss Esther Palliser and Miss Agnes Janson on June 15, or the pianoforte recitals of the clever pianist, Mr. Slivinski, or the interesting concert held by Mr. Somervell on Wednesday evening, with a programme including many of his excellent songs.

MUSIC NOTES.

MR. ERNEST FOWLES has issued a preliminary prospectus of four concerts, which he proposes to give in the autumn, devoted exclusively to chamber music from the pen of British composers. A special feature will be the selection of works which, from one cause or another, have hitherto been unable to obtain a hearing; another will be the issue of careful analyses, in book form, of the works performed. Among those who have already given their support to the scheme are—Sir Joseph Barnby, Sir John Stainer, Sir Arthur Sullivan, Prof. Villiers Stanford, Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, Dr. C. Hubert H. Parry, and Mr. F. H. Cowen. Provisional arrangements have also been made with Miss Fanny Davies, Miss Emily Shinner, and Mr. W. E. Whitehouse.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS LIST.

CANADIAN INDEPENDENCE,
ANNEXATION, and BRITISH IMPERIAL FEDERATION. By JAMES DOUGLAS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"HEROES OF THE NATIONS" SERIES.

Edited by EVELYN ABBOTT,
Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford.

Illustrated with numerous Full-Page Plates and Maps, &c.
Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.; Roxburghe, 6s.

HENRY of NAVARRE and the
HUGUENOTS in FRANCE. By P. F. WILLERT,
M.A., Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford. With Maps and Illustrations.

VOLUMES PREVIOUSLY ISSUED.

NELSON. By W. Clark Russell.

GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS. By C. R. L.
FLETCHER, M.A.

PERICLES. By Evelyn Abbott, M.A.

THEODORIC. By Thomas Hodgkin,
D.C.L.

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY. By H. R. Fox
BOURNE.

JULIUS CÆSAR. By W. Warde
FOWLER, M.A.

JOHN WYCLIF. By Lewis Sergeant.

NAPOLEON. By W. O'Connor Morris.

THE ENGLISHMAN at HOME:

HIS RESPONSIBILITIES AND PRIVILEGES.

By EDWARD PORRITT.

Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"LEADERS IN SCIENCE" SERIES.

Illustrated with Full-Page Plates. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

I. CHARLES DARWIN: his Life and Work. By CHARLES F. HOLDER.

II. LOUIS AGASSIZ: his Life and Work. By CHARLES F. HOLDER.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION.

A NATURAL METHOD of PHYSICAL TRAINING. Making Muscle and Reducing Flesh without Dieting or Apparatus. By EDWIN CHECKLEY. With Illustrations. 12mo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE BIBLE: its Origin, Growth, and Character, and its place among the Sacred Books of the World. Together with a List of Books for Study and Reference, with Critical Comments. By J. T.
SUNDERLAND. Post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE EMPIRE of the TSARS

and the RUSSIANS. By ANATOLE LEROY-
BEAULIEU. Translated from the French by Z. A.
RAGOZIN, Author of "The Story of Assyria," "The Story of Chaldea," &c. With Maps. 3 vols., 8vo.

Part I. THE COUNTRY and its INHABITANTS. 12s. 6d.
[Now ready.]
Part II. THE INSTITUTIONS. [Shortly.]

THE WRITINGS of THOMAS

PAINE. Collected, Edited, and Chronologically
Arranged. By MONCURE D. CONWAY, Author of "The Life of Thomas Paine," &c. 4 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top. Prices per Volume, 12s. 6d.

[Vol. I, ready.]

STUDIES of TRAVEL in

GREECE and ITALY. By the late Prof. E. A. FREE-MAN, D.C.L. With a Preface by Miss FLORENCE
FREEMAN. With Portrait. 2 vols., 16mo, cloth, 5s.

NEW CATALOGUE FREE ON APPLICATION.

21, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON; AND NEW YORK.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

Just published, small 4to, gilt top, half-volum, 21s. net.

* 300 Copies only are printed on Large Paper, of which 220 only (Nos. 81-300) will be offered for sale.

LATIN PROSE VERSIONS. A

Collection of Translations into Latin by Thirty well-known Scholars, including the

ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY	Rev. Dr. WILLIAM HAIG
Professor BUTCHER	BROWN
Professor ROBINSON ELLIS	Sir WILLIAM D. GEDDES,
Professor GOODHART	L.L.D.
Professor MARGOLIOUTH	Rev. Dr. W. W. MERRY
Professor POSTGATE	Very Rev. E. C. WICKHAM
Dr. J. S. REID	The late Prof. J. CONINGTON
A. SIDGWICK, Esq.	The late Prof. H. NETTLE-
Dr. SANDYS	SHIP
Dr. EVELYN ABBOTT	The late Prof. T. S. EVANS

Edited by GEORGE G. RAMSAY, M.A., LL.D.

Just published, in 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 32s.

AN ESSAY CONCERNING

HUMAN UNDERSTANDING. By JOHN

LOCKE. Collated and Annotated, with Pro-legomena, Biographical, Critical, and Historical, by A. CAMPBELL FRASER, Hon. D.C.L., LL.D.

"This work is the outcome of a lifelong occupation with philosophy, and a lifelong familiarity with the epoch of Locke, Berkeley, and Hume in particular. The Editing is as full, as accurate, as completely satisfying, and the philosophical insight and sympathy as marked, as in his edition of Berkeley.
It will, no doubt, remain the standard edition of the famous 'Essay.'"—Scotsman.

THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

Translated by various Oriental Scholars and Edited by F. MAX MÜLLER.

This Series is published with the sanction and cooperation of the Secretary of State for India in Council.

NEW VOLUME. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

Vol. XLIX. BUDDHIST MAHA-
YANA TEXTS. Translated from the Sanskrit by E. B. COWELL, F. MAX MÜLLER, and J. TAKAKUSU.

"This Series is now so well known to scholars, and the reputation of its editor and his associates in the work so well established, that no more is needed than to mention the appearance of successive volumes and to congratulate the editor and his colleagues on the progress achieved."—Times.

ANECDOTA OXONIENSIA.

New Part, crown 4to, paper covers, with a Facsimile, 18s. 6d.

THE EARLIEST TRANSLA-

TION of the OLD TESTAMENT into the BASQUE LANGUAGE: a Fragment. By
PIERRE D'ORTE, of St. Jean de Luz, circa 1700.
Edited, from a MS. in the Library of St. Albans
Castle, Oxfordshire, by LEWELYN THOMAS,
M.A., Fellow of Jesus College, Oxford.

Just published, in 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 36s.

THE MEMOIRS of EDMUND

LUDLOW, Lieutenant-General of the Horse in the Army of the Commonwealth of England, 1625-1672. Edited, with Appendices of Letters and Illustrative Documents, by C. H. FIRTH, M.A.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

STUDIES in FORESTRY: being

a Short Course of Lectures on the Principles of Silviculture delivered at the Botanic Gardens,
Oxford, during the Hilary and Michaelmas Terms,
1893. By JOHN NISBET, D.Oec., of the Indian Forest Service.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, with numerous Illustrations, 10s. 6d. net.

ALTERNATING GENERA-

TIONS. A Biological Study of Oak Galls and Gall Flies. By HERMAN ADLER, M.S.,
Schleswig. Translated and Edited by CHARLES
R. STATION, F.R.C.S. Edin., F.E.S.

Full Catalogues will be sent post free on application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE,

CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

Just published, price 3s. 6d. net.

A POCKET FLORA of EDINBURGH

AND THE ### SURROUNDING DISTRICT.

A Collection and Full Description of all Phanerogamic and the Principal Cryptogamic Plants, Classified after the Natural System, with an Artificial Key and a Glossary of Botanical Terms.

Fcap. 8vo, limp cloth, round corners, with a Map of Edinburgh and District, price 3s. 6d. net.

By O. O. SONNTAG,

The Royal High School, Edinburgh, formerly Secretary of the Microscopical Society of Glasgow, &c.

NEW VOLUME OF THE

ARMY SERIES OF FRENCH & GERMAN NOVELS.

ER ZÄHLUNGEN.

By E. HOEFER.

Edited by J. T. W. PEROWNE, M.A.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s.

"The series has brought fascinating examples of fiction under the eyes of English readers in a neat and handy form, besides having the military flavour they are models of style."
Scotsman.

DIGEST of MR. HERBERT SPENCER'S WORKS.

Third and Enlarged Edition, concluding "Principles of Ethics," now ready. 8vo, cloth, price 15s. net.

AN EPITOME of THE SYNTHETIC PHILOSOPHY.

By F. HOWARD COLLINS.

With a Preface by HERBERT SPENCER.

A SUPPLEMENT, containing the Added Chapters, and Complete Index, 8vo, cloth, 4s. net.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, London and Edinburgh.

This day in 1 vol., 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE GREAT PYRAMID

BY MODERN SCIENCE AN INDEPENDENT
WITNESS

TO THE LATERAL CHRONOLOGY OF THE

HEBREW BIBLE

AND BRITISH-ISRAEL IDENTITY

IN ACCORDANCE WITH

BRUCK'S "LAW of the LIFE of NATIONS."

With a New Interpretation of the Time-Prophecies of Daniel and St. John.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH OF

M. CHAS. LAGRANGE,

Professeur à l'Ecole Militaire, Astronome à l'Observatoire Royal de Bruxelles, and Membre de l'Académie Royale de Belgique.

Recently Revised, with 5 New Appendices, by the Author, and a short Note by

C. PIAZZI SMYTH, F.R.S.E.

Late Astronomer-Royal for Scotland.

LONDON: CHARLES BURNET & CO.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,

&c.—KING, SELL, & RAILTON, Limited, High-class Printers
and Publishers, 12 Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C. have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Journals, and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 16 or 32 page Journals at one operation.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 259. Telegraph, "Africaism, London."

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1156.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JUNE 30, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
LA GALLIENNE'S PROSE FANCIES, by GRANT ALLEN	527
ROBINSON'S THE LAST EASLES OF BARRYMORE, by F. HAWKINS	528
THESE BOOKS ABOUT PARIS, by CECIL NICHOLSON	529
KIPLING'S JUNOLE BOOK, by PEBBY ANDLESIAW	530
A POLISH STUDY ON BYRON AND HIS AGE, by W. R. MORRILL	530
NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH	531
CURRENT LITERATURE	532
NOTES AND NEWS	533
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	534
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	531
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	534
ORIGINAL VERSE: "SPRING SONNETS FROM MY GARDEN," by Mrs. FRILLIGRATH-KROEGER	535
IGNORANT DEBATES AT CAMBRIDGE	535
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	536
CORRESPONDENCE— "Ethelred-Mucil, Gaiorum Comes," by W. H. Stevenson; What is Slaag? by F. E. Gsrett	536
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	538
TWO BOOKS ON AFRICAN SPORT, by the Rev. M. G. WATKINS	538
TWO BOOKS ON ANCIENT PHILOSOPHY	538
PHILOLOGY NOTES	539
REPORTS OF SOCIETIES	533
LADY EVANS ON GREEK DRESS, by TALFOURD ELY	540
THE ASMOLEAN MUSEUM	540
CORRESPONDENCE— Two Chaldean Statues in the Guildhall Museum, by A. W. Mengedob	541
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	541
STAGE NOTES	541
THE HANDEL FESTIVAL, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	541
MUSIC OF THE WEEK	542
MUSIC NOTES	542

FROM MANUSCRIPT to BOOKSTALL:
THE COST OF PRINTING AND BINDING BOOKS, with the VARIOUS METHODS OF PUBLISHING them EXPLAINED and DISCUSSED. With Frontispiece. Price 3s.

AUTHORS' MSS. TYPEWRITTEN at moderate cost, and returned with ESTIMATE for PRINTING and BINDING, with SPECIMEN PAGE (in style and type recommended) FREE.
London: SOOTHAM & Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

POPULAR WRITERS OF FICTION
wishing to secure the most extensive COPYRIGHTED PUBLICATION obtainable in United States, Canada, and elsewhere, should communicate with P. F. COLLIER, 521, West Thirtieth Street, New York City.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—
Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by HAYSE & Co., 49, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
112, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List:—115, Fleet Street, London.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
11, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS. CATALOGUES sent on application.

LAW LECTURES.

THE LIVERPOOL BOARD OF LEGAL
STUDIES are prepared to receive APPLICATIONS by Gentlemen willing to deliver, in Liverpool, a COURSE of TEN LECTURES (with Classes) on

(a) EQUITY.

(b) COMMON LAW.

The Courses will be consecutive, extending from January to June. Fee, Fifty Guineas a Course, with an allowance for travelling expenses. Applications to be sent in on or before the 3rd July. Address the Hon. SECRETARY, Liverpool Board of Legal Studies, Law Library, Liverpool.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL
(VICTORIA UNIVERSITY).

ROSCOE CHAIR OF ART.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for a PROFESSORSHIP of ARCHITECTURE. Fixed Endowment £375 per annum, with share of fees from students, and other emoluments. The Professor will conduct Architecture Classes at the College, and will likewise act as Director upon the representative MASONRY BOARD appointed to conduct the newly constituted SCHOOL of ARCHITECTURE and APPLIED ARTS for the City of Liverpool, supported from funds set apart for Technical and Commercial Instruction. The appointment will be for five years, and the Professor will be eligible. Applications, with testimonials, must be lodged with the REGISTRAR by or before July 25.—For further details apply to the REGISTRAR, University College, Liverpool.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, DUNDEE.
ST. ANDREW'S UNIVERSITY.

CHAIR OF CHEMISTRY.

The Council of the College will shortly proceed to APPOINT a PROFESSOR to occupy the above Chair, recently rendered vacant. The successful Candidate will be required to enter upon his duties on October 1st.

Applications, accompanied by thirty copies of Testimonials, with references, should be sent to the undersigned, not later than 7th July. For further information apply to R. N. KEAR, Secretary.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, DUNDEE.
ST. ANDREW'S UNIVERSITY.

CHAIR OF ANATOMY.

The Council of the College will shortly proceed to APPOINT a PROFESSOR to occupy the above Chair, recently rendered vacant. The successful Candidate will be required to enter upon his duties on October 1st.

The salary is £250, with two-thirds of the Fees. Applications, accompanied by thirty copies of Testimonials, should be sent to the undersigned, not later than 14th July. For further information apply to R. N. KEAR, Secretary.

UNIVERSITY of GLASGOW.

LECTURESHIP ON CIVIL LAW.

The University Court of the University of Glasgow will, at an early date, proceed to the APPOINTMENT of a LECTURER on CIVIL LAW.

The Salary attached to the Lectureship has been fixed at £200 per annum, and the appointment is to date from 1st October next.

The Lecturer will be required to deliver during each Winter Session a course of not less than 40 Lectures, which shall be available both for Arts Students and for Students qualifying for the degrees of B.L. and LL.B.

Twenty printed copies of Applications and Testimonials should be lodged with the undersigned on or before 27th July next.

ALAN E. CLAPFERTON,
Secretary of the Glasgow University Court,
91, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to best
University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEYON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon-street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholastic Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers, may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL
MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—ASSYRIAN
SCULPTURES.—Statuettes of Sennacherib, Assurbanipal, and his Queen. Also reduced facsimiles of the famous and beautiful "Garden Scene," Winged Human-headed Lion and Bull, &c. Modelled from the famous Nineveh Sculptures, and made in Porcelain (parian). "Interesting and faithful reproductions."—Athenaeum, Oct. 7, 1893. Descriptive Prospectus on application to ALFRED JARVIS (Sole Publisher), 43, Willes Road, London, N.W.

BRITISH MUSEUM, BLOOMSBURY.

EVENING OPENING.

During the Month of JULY, the Galleries usually open from 8 to 10 p.m. will be CLOSED during those hours for repairs to the Electric Light Plant, and will be OPEN from 6 to 8 p.m. instead.

E. MACNIE THOMPSON,
Principal Librarian and Secretary.

British Museum, 26th June, 1894.

ASSISTANCE WANTED.

The undermentioned Cases, for which it has not been found possible to raise the necessary help from other sources, are RECOMMENDED by the CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY. Contributions towards their assistance will be gladly received by C. B. LOCH, Secretary, 15, Buckingham Street, Adelphi, W.C. :—

15,405.—A Northern Committee ask for £5 3s., to meet contributions from the clergy and district visitor and the Friendly Female Society, to complete an allowance of 7s. weekly for an aged widow, who has worked for one firm of employers 30 years, but owing to approaching cataract can now earn nothing.

16,354.—£5 4s. wanted, to supplement the contributions of relatives towards the maintenance of an aged and infirm couple in the "Homes of the Aged Poor," where they have been more than three years.

17,757.—Required £2 8s., to complete an allowance of 8s. a week for six months for a widow of a superior class, who, owing to increasing blindness, is no longer able to support herself. Has worked hard all her life as ladies' outfitter, and supported her father during his lifetime.

17,922.—Help is required to send a very respectable man to a Convalescent Home and help family while he is away. He has been ill four months; club-pay now reduced to 8s. a week. Character thoroughly good. No relations able to help. £3 11s. required.

17,854.—It is wished to raise £6 1s. 4d. towards a pension for a widow of a ship's captain who died in 1853. Since that date she maintained herself in a most respectable position till her failing eyesight forced her to give up work. She is now 75 years old, and all her relations are dead. A friend has promised to cover the rent, and a charity for the widows of seamen will contribute £3 a year. She is a most respectable and deserving old person.

17,003.—Wanted, £4 11s., to provide a weekly allowance for a very respectable widow, aged 66. Her husband died 30 years ago, and since then she has supported herself and partly supported her aged mother by needlework. Failing eyesight and rheumatism have now totally incapacitated her. A nephew allows her 2s. a week.

MUDIE'S
SELECT
LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and
SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at th Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand, at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, SELL, & RALTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Tavistock Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Journals, and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 16 or 32 page Journals at one operation. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 2739. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE.—A New Serial Story by Mrs. ANNIE EDWARDS is commenced in the JULY Number of "TEMPLE BAR," entitled "THE ADVENTRESS."

Now ready, price One Shilling.
THE

TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

Contents for JULY, 1894.

- I. THE ADVENTRESS. Chaps. I.-IV.
- II. WHERE HUGLI FLOWS.
- III. SOME RECOLLECTIONS OF YESTERDAY.
- IV. THE WORLD'S WAY.
- V. WHILE JOANNA WAS AWAY.
- VI. LIFE'S CONTRASTS.
- VII. A CHAT WITH MRS. LYNN LINTON.
- VIII. EIGHTEEN CENTURIES AGO.
- IX. THE LAST DAYS OF EDMUND YATES.
- X. BALLAD OF GLENFINNAN.
- XI. DANTE AND TENNYSON.
- XII. COMRADESHIP.
- XIII. AN INTERLOPER. (Chaps. XXI.-XXIV.)
- XIV. TO-MORROW and TO-MORROW.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES NOW READY. AN INTERLOPER.

By FRANCES MARY PEARD,
Author of "The Baroness," &c.
In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY. BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE CHILCOTES," &c. A TROUBLESOME

PAIR. By LESLIE KEITH, Author of "Lisbeth," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY. VICTIMS of FASHION.

By A. M. GRANGE. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY. The POWER of the PAST

By ESME STUART, Author of "Joan Vellascott," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.
"A strong and very good novel."—Scotsman.

NOW READY. IF MEN WERE WISE.

By E. L. SHAW. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.
"A distinctly clever and promising piece of work. Well written, and with a plot of considerable strength as well as interest."—Daily Telegraph.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND LIBRARIES. NOVELS OF MARIE CORELLI. THELMA.

A ROMANCE OF TWO WORLDS.
VENDETTA.

ARDATH.
WORMWOOD.

THE SOUL OF LILITH.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN begs to announce a NEW SERIES of POPULAR NOVELS, to be entitled the PIONEER SERIES, to consist of Original One-Volume Novels, modern in treatment and subject. They will be exquisitely got up in a handy and convenient form, in ornamental paper cover, with a Japanese design after Utomaro, at 2s. 6d. per Volume net; or, bound in limp cloth, 3s. net. The Volumes will be supplied to the Trade on terms which do not admit of Discount to the public, in order to do away with the unpleasant uncertainty of knowing what really is the cash price of a book. The following Volumes have been arranged for, the first of which will be published early in JULY, to be followed by others at short intervals.

Vol. I. JOANNA TRAILL, SPINSTER. By ANNIE E. HOLOSWORTH.

Vol. II. GEORGE MANDEVILLE'S HUSBAND.

Vol. III. THE WINGS of ICARUS. By LAURENCE ALMA TADEMA.

Vol. IV. AN ALTAR of EARTH. By Thymol MONK.

"A DELIGHTFUL BOOK."

By the Author of "AN ENGLISHMAN IN PARIS."
MY PARIS NOTE-BOOK.

In 1 vol., demy 8vo, price 14s.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"My Paris Note-Book" is one of those exceptionally delightful books the manifold fascination of which it is difficult to exemplify by quotation.... There is a rich fund of amusement and instruction in this brilliantly written work."

THE ROMANCE of an EMPRESS.

CATHERINE II. of RUSSIA. From the French of K. WALISZEWSKI. A New Edition in 1 vol., with Portrait, 7s. 6d.

TWO NEW LIBRARY NOVELS.

The MERCHANT of KILLOGUE

By EDMUND DOWNEY (F. M. ALLEN),
Author of "Through Green Glasses." In 3 volumes.

THE POTTER'S THUMB.

By FLORA ANNIE STEEL,
Author of "From the Five Rivers." In 3 volumes.
ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"We are inclined to regard 'The Potter's Thumb' as one of the best novels of Indian life ever written; and the author as entitled to rank with the most accomplished novelists of this generation."

NEW ONE-VOLUME NOVELS.

BLESSED ARE THE POOR.

(Les Vrais Riches.)

By FRANÇOIS COPPÉE.

Translated from the French by WINIFRED HEATON.
With an Introduction by T. P. O'CONNOR.
Post 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

The STORY of a MODERN WOMAN.

By ELLA HEPWORTH DIXON.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

ACADEMY.—"It is one of the best-written books which have appeared of late, whether by writers of 'the larger latitude' or otherwise. It shows altogether exceptional promise, and is written with reserve, dignity, grace, sobriety, and power. The two closing chapters have that largeness, whether we say 'of atmosphere,' 'of touch,' which we find in the masters only."

A SUPERFLUOUS WOMAN.

A NEW EDITION. Price 6s.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"A novel upon which has been expended an infinity of thought, and the pages of which betray a capacity for the analysis of human feelings and emotions but rarely met with."

A CONSPIRACY of SILENCE. By G. COLMORE, Author of "A Daughter of Music," &c. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE NOVELS OF IVAN TURGENEV.—Vol. I.

RUDIN. Translated from the Russian by CONSTANCE GARNETT. With a Portrait of the Author. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. net.

SCOTSMAN.—"The story is as charming as it is simple, and it has a keenness of interest which never flags, and a charm which remains with the reader when the book has been laid aside."

HEINEMANN'S INTERNATIONAL LIBRARY.

Edited by EDMUND GOSSE.

THE GRANDEE. By Don Armando PALACIO VALDES, Author of "Froth." Translated from the Spanish by Rachel Challice. With an Introduction by the Editor. Cloth, 2s. 6d.; paper cover, 2s. 6d.

LONDON:

WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

"One of Mr. Blackmore's best."—SATURDAY REVIEW.

BY THE AUTHOR OF LORNA DOONE."

Now Ready, a Cheap Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d., of

"SPRINGHAVEN," by R. D. Blackmore.

Of "Springhaven" the Saturday Review says: "The story is one of Mr. Blackmore's best. A fine touch of romance reveals the author of 'Lorna Doone' on almost every page. The portraits of Nelson and Napoleon are marvellously true and lifelike."

"Splendid" and "g.o.u.s" are strong terms, but they are scarcely too strong for application to some parts of 'Springhaven.'.... The story is among the author's best; and to read it is a most invigorating tonic."—Illustrated London News.

TRAVELS AMONGST AMERICAN

INDIANS: their Ancient Earthworks and Temples. Including a Journey in Guatemala, Mexico, and Yucatan; and a Visit to the Ruins of Palenque, Uxmal, Palenque, and Uxmal. By Vice-Admiral LINDESEY BRINE (Member of Council of the Royal Geographical and Hakluyt Societies), Author of "The Taiping Rebellion in China: a Narrative of its Rise and Progress." With 2 Maps, 8 Plans, 28 Full-page and 12 Text Cuts. 1 vol., demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"A pleasantly-written narrative of his visit to these strange places."—Times.

CHINA to PERU: Over the Andes.

A Journey through South America. By Mrs. HOWARD VINCENT, Authoress of "Forty Thousand Miles Over Land and Water," "Newfoundland to Cochin China," &c. With Appendix by Colonel HOWARD VINCENT, C.B., M.P. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. [Next week.]

IN THE LAND of the TUI: My Journal

in New Zealand. By Mrs. ROBERT WILSON. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"These charming pages."—Scotsman.

REMINISCENCES of an INDIAN

POLICE OFFICIAL. By T. C. ARTHUR. Fully Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth, 18s.

"We have to thank Mr. Arthur for a very interesting and informing book, the illustrations to which are instinct with life and reality."—Daily Chronicle.

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

SARAH. By Sydney Christian, Author

of "Lydia." In 2 vols., cloth, 12s.

"A graceful book, full of charming and whimsical touches, and written with a decided distinction of style."—Athenaeum.

"At last we have a story of a woman and of a womanhood which may be read with satisfaction and pleasure. 'Sarah: a Survival,' is a remarkable work in every sense—extremely clever.... written in admirable English.... abounds in humour of a quiet, delectable kind.... 'Sarah' is a gem."—World.

A BAIREUTH PILGRIMAGE. By

EDITH E. CUTHELL. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.

"Persons who know not their Wagner, but who yet intend going to Baireuth this summer, may read Mr. Cuthell's book with some profit. They will find therein the story of most of the great operas."—Daily Chronicle.

"A story that will unquestionably interest a large circle of readers."—Scotsman.

FIRE ISLAND. By George Manville

FENN, Author of "The Black Bar," &c. Numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s.

The EMIGRANT SHIP. By W. Clark

RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," &c. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s.

"The story is capitally told, and full of fresh interest."—Athenaeum.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

JULY NUMBER.

THE NORTH SHORE of MASSACHUSETTS. (Illustrated.) By Robert Grant.

THE GETTYSBURG WEEK. By Philip Schaff, D.D.

AMONG the TARAHUMARIS, the AMERICAN CAVE DWELLERS. (Illustrated.) By Carl Lumholtz.

JOHN MARCH, SOUTHERNER. Chaps. 43-47. By George W. Cable.

THE FRENCH in HOLLAND. Painted by Francis Flameng. With Full-Page Illustration (Frontispiece) and Portraits of Flameng. By Philip Gilbert Hamerton.

A MAN WITHOUT a MEMORY. (With Illustration.) By William Henry Shelton.

BEASTS of BURDEN. (Illustrated.) By N. S. Shaler.

THE WORKING MAN: Sketches of American Types. (Illustrated.) By Octave Thanet.

THE NEW YORK TENEMENT-HOUSE EVIL and its CURE. With Plans. By Ernest Flagg.

AUT CESAR AUT NIHIL. By Agnes Hepplier.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,

St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SATURDAY, JUNE 30, 1894.

No. 1156, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Prose Fancies. By Richard Le Gallienne. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.)

THIS is the day of the young men. Their star is in the ascendant. The lines are fallen unto them in pleasant places. No writer of the generation born between the forties and the sixties had ever such luck as comes of itself to the new crop of poets and essayists and story-tellers now growing up around us. The neophyte of those earlier days had to struggle on by his own efforts against enormous odds, weighed down from above by the crushing reputations of the acknowledged Titans—Tennyson, Browning, Matthew Arnold, Thackeray, Dickens, Carlyle, George Eliot. Against competition like that, what could youth effect? The young man's heart failed him. As yet, the Boom was not; the Logroller plied his humble art in vain; the Clique and the Claque availed us nothing. Mr. Le Gallienne, I take it, is well under thirty. No writer of the generation of which I speak had made a reputation like his at forty, save only Swinburne; and Swinburne owed his first start in public estimation (with reverence I say it) not so much to his great and noble qualities as to his youthful audacity. The men of the forties and fifties had for the most part to throw away on journalism faculties far superior to the production of those Ballades in Blue China and those Proverbs in Porcelain for which alone they could gain a hearing; and if in the end, like Thomas Hardy, they obtained at last by some work of genius, some Tess of the D'Urbervilles, an adequate recognition, they obtained it only after long waiting and watching, too late for it to produce that obullition of youthful fire so beneficial to Byron, to Dickens, to Swinburne. Hope deferred made their hearts sick with the gray sickness of pessimism. And pessimism is the keynote of the men of the middle epoch—the playful pessimism of Lang, the sombre and ironical pessimism of Hardy.

With the new generation, things have gone quite otherwise. Every day has brought forth its noble chance, and every chance its noble knight. The competition of the great gods having been suddenly removed, we have seen the lists cleared for Kipling, Barrie, Zangwill, Watson, Davidson. The Boom has become the rule. It has rigged the market. It began with Anstie Guthrie, Hugh Conway, Fergus Hume; it has continued with Conan Doyle, Norman Gale, Francis Thompson. We wake up each morning and find a new poet famous. And the odd part of it is, they almost all deserve it. The times are favourable to the development and encouragement of budding genius. The young man is no longer overshadowed by the giants of made repute: the incubus of greatness no longer weighs upon him. He is respectfully treated; he is listened to with sympathy; he is taught by kindly critics to take himself seriously. And the result is excellent. Where he has anything in him, he does take himself seriously, as artist or as thinker, and gets out of his soul the very best there is in it. The last generation was snubbed into the banalités of anonymous journalism; the present generation is led by the hand, along flowery paths, amid a chorus of praise, up the slopes of Parnassus. What epics they suppressed, those men of the forties! What leaders they wrote in the Daily News on the drainage of Clerkenwell!

In the front rank of these young immortals, not a few of us have long learnt to place Richard Le Gallienne. He is a spoilt child of literature. The Book-Bills of Narcissus took many critics by storm; Prose Fancies will set the seal upon his calling and election. I have never believed in the current critical doctrine, that kicking was good physic for the young author—that poets might make a fourth in the famous trio of a woman, a dog, and a walnut tree, whereof it is well known that the more you beat them, the better they be. For myself, I can never remember that a single upward step on my path of moral progress can be directly traced to a critical kicking. Rather does it seem to me that what brings the best work out of a man is generous appreciation. There is no knowing what tragedies and comedies we of the middle kingdom might have produced, if only we had had a little of that genial incense. Let us take good care that the young lions who are growing up around us don't starve for want of it.

Well, Prose Fancies is a delicious book. The title alone suggests the right name for a genre. It is a book to linger over; a book to remember; a book to roll appreciatively on the critical palate. It has the note of originality, personality, genius. A provincial critic objected to Le Gallienne the other day that it would be better "if he could be occasionally a little less obviously Mr. Richard Le Gallienne, and could serve up his sentiments plain without those garnishings and sauces which make one think too much of the chef, and too little of one's intellectual digestion." To my mind, that criticism has the rare merit of complete topsy-turvydom. Fancy objecting to Botticelli, that his touch was too uniformly Botticellian; to Michael Angelo, that one would like him the more if he could for a moment be simple and natural and human! As it seems to me, the great, the immense merit of Le Gallienne's work lies just in that peculiarity, that everything he says bears, in matter and form alike, the distinct impress of his exceptional idiosyncrasy. You may love it or you may hate it; but there it is—the man himself, his voice, his tone, his accent. Indeed, this very pervasiveness of the individuality is the true mark of seership. The personal equation counts for much. Our singer sees the outer world through the refractive medium of a poet's soul; and what he sees he says in the very way he sees it.

Not only so, but in these Prose Fancies, as before in The Book-Bills of Narcissus, we get a distinct element of personal and frankly autobiographical touches. With many other men, such touches would be sheer egotism. With Le Gallienne, they are etherialised and purged from that offence by I know not what strange undercurrent of impersonal personality and broad human portraiture. He interests himself, and he interests us, rather as a specimen than as an ego, rather as a unit of humanity than as the gentleman who lives in such a house in Blank Street. It is our common nature speaking out in him that engages us; but our common nature envious through the optic lens of the poet and the artist. Thus, the exquisite little idyll of "A Borrowed Sovereign" is as frankly personal as anything in Rousseau's Confessions—and a vast deal truer. There is absolutely no tinge of concealment about it; all is plain and straight as the Thames Embankment. "Jim lent me a sovereign" it begins; and you have never a doubt as to Jim's reality—he is just Jim—or as to the historical character of the financial transaction thus innocently forced upon you. Indeed, the very names of the two persons who form the dramatis personae of the pathetic wee idyll are ingeniously inscribed upon it. What then so redeems it from any tinge of egotism? Why, its utter want of false shame, of essential self-consciousness. The prose poet poses himself as one of mankind, and tells with an exquisite artlessness, which is the finest flower of art, a typical little tale of a minor act of selfishness and a minor repentance. The whole thing is but a passing episode in three young people's lives—we might all of us have lived it—but through it there runs, like a crimson thread, the sweet story of a girl's love and a brother's sympathy. The figures are by mere accident an I and a you; in their inner nature they are a man and a maid, a lover and his lass, and a brother and sister.

The Book-Bills gave us a glimpse of a new master of stylo. English Poems, to my mind, did not quite redeem that promise. I may be wrong: I may have pitched my expectations too high; but in spite of some exquisite little pieces of lyric verse, I still think Le Gallienne up to date has done best as a prose poet. His lawlessness in rhyme and metre contrast somewhat curiously with the delicate perfection of his workmanship in his best prose writing. But then, I will allow that I am probably prejudiced in this matter by the long habit of teaching and writing Greek and Latin verse—which pleasing task occupied some six years of an otherwise well-spent life with the solemnities of senarii or the frivolities of elegiacs; and I cannot entirely get over my feeling that poetry ought to be accurately divisible into lines and feet of so many dactyls and spondee. Hence formally perfect metrification, like Swinburne's and Watson's, appeals to me powerfully from the point of view of execution; while I find it hard at times to reconcile my ear to the native linnnet music of Le Gallienne or the irregular mocking-bird note of John Davidson. However this may be (and I apologise for such strictly personal intrusion of my own tastes and predilections) I feel sure that Prose Fancies is a work of the highest artistic value. It shows a great advance on the Book-Bills, which were hitherto the high-water mark of Le Gallienne's performance; especially in the direction of the management of the individual sentence, and the constant bright play of wit and fancy. Here, each clause tells: a lustro as of sh't silk, like the Magdalen's dress in the Mantegna at the National Gallery, gleams perpetually through the woof of grave thought or high sentiment. A nonconformist Sterne, a Puritan Jean-Jacques, our poet weaves over the strands of his ascetic creed the gold thread of a playful and fantastic humour. Not that even the asceticism must be taken too seriously, as one sees it taken by the admiring Wesleyan preacher. Le Gallienne's is one of those poetic natures in which a high and almost ecstatic morality of sentiment is wholly divorced from the vulgar routine of practice. He sings of tavern nights with the voice of an angel; he prophesies "Woe, woe," over his oysters and porter. "What a beacon-light of repentance!" cries the enchanted pastor. "I do love champagne and rump-steak," says the poet.

Almost all the papers in this little volume are good. Like the undergraduate who was asked to name the Minor Prophets, I decline therefore to make invidious distinctions. But if I were driven to make a selection, I should say, my favourites are "A Spring Morning," "Life in Inverted Commas," "The Woman's Half-Profits," and "The Blessedness of Woman." All these are instinct with a certain delicate and elusive aroma of humour, a bouquet as of the lightest and finest Johannisberg. But by far the most beautiful and touching poem among all these gems of lyric thought is the last in the volume—the sad note which closes a delicious diapason of poetic fancy. It is called "White Soul"; and it fitly enshrines the memory of a pure and lovely life, about which I dare hardly allow myself the luxury of speech. Everyone knows that tragedy: what all do not know is the gentle and shrinking nature of the woman to whom her husband unconsciously dedicated by anticipation this sweet and strangely prophetic elegy. I will not attempt to describe either it or her: the poet himself has painted that shy nature—half elfish, half gipsy-like, with a touch of genius and a touch of second sight—in one of the daintiest and truest fantasies in the English language. I refrain from saying more. Those who read the book itself will understand why it is not so much a theme for criticism as for sympathetic silence.

GRANT ALLEN.

The Last Earls of Barrymore. By John Robert Robinson. (Sampson Low.)

It is not very easy to understand why Mr. Robinson should have taken the trouble to write this book. The seventh and eighth Earls of Barrymore can hardly be said to have merited the honours of biography. Neither of them rose far above the level of the late Marquis of Ailesbury. On the whole, their chief claim to remembrance is the fact that they consistently sacrificed to frivolous pleasure their golden opportunities for doing a little real good in the world. Especially is this true of the seventh Earl, who appears to have been the more intelligent of the two. Sir Egerton Brydges has told the story of this madcap young peer in a sentence which I repeat from memory. "With the talents to enter upon a course of noble ambition, with wit, good nature, and engaging manners, he distinguished himself by freaks that would have disgraced a Buckingham or a Rochester, until the accidental explosion of his musket, while he was conveying some French prisoners from Folkestone to Dover, as captain of the Berkshire militia, put an end to his troubles and follies in the spring of 1793, in his twenty-fourth year." With respect to the eighth Earl, the most noticeable thing to be recorded of him is that he so far forgot himself on one occasion as to assault a coachman, who, quite regardless of the sort of divinity hedging the peerage, belaboured him with a whip until he slunk into a house hard by. It is clear that the careers of these two earls, if worthy of attention at all, might have had sufficient justice done to them within the limits of a short magazine article; but Mr. Robinson, always enthusiastic where English social life in the eighteenth century is concerned, has devoted to the subject a volume of about two hundred rather closely printed pages. Should the work be successful, we may expect to have full biographies of the ill-starred Marquis of Hastings, Mr. Ernest Benzon, the Marquis of Ailesbury above mentioned, and other notorious spendthrifts of our own days.

Of the seventh Earl of Barrymore a few words may be said here. He came of what is commonly termed a bad lot. The founder of the family was "in the train of William the Conqueror," but a sense of its antiquity did not deter some of its members from bringing it into discredit. The fifth Earl, as Viscount Buttevant, did his best to get his father executed for high treason, the latter having favoured the rising of 1745. An anecdote of the sixth Earl shows him to have been nothing less than a swindler. At a tavern dinner with some friends, it seems, he induced them to bet him £500 that he would not guess more correctly than any of them the number of playing cards required to cover the floor of the room. He won easily, for the simple reason that a few days previously he had quietly determined the question for himself. The seventh Earl had one excuse for the follies which made him a passing wonder. Like Byron, he was "lord of himself, that heritage of woe," at a very early age. His life from this moment seems to have been a continuous round of excitement, dissipation, and extravagance. He owned a stud of racehorses, kept up a large hunting establishment, erected a theatre opposite his house at Wargrave, gave innumerable entertainments, passed a good deal of time at the gaming table, and generally set no bounds to the gratification of his peculiar tastes. It is estimated that in about five years he squandered £300,000. With all his liveliness and good nature, we must add, he appears to have been incurably coarseminded. Besides perpetrating the freaks mentioned by Brydges, he found delight in the society of professional pugilists, fought in the streets with anybody who offended him, and once made a bet with the Duke of Bedford that he would get a man to eat a live cat. Gilray was not far wide of the mark when, in the caricature of "Les Trois Magots," he called him a blackguard. Birds of a feather flock together; and it is not surprising, therefore, that he and the First Gentleman in Europe should have been on friendly terms. Nor was he free from the suspicion of cowardice. "Damn me," said his Royal Highness to him at one of his street encounters, seeing him hit below the belt, "do behave like a man!"

Mr. Robinson is fond of talking about the Earl's "wit and humour," but is apparently unable to give a conclusive instance in point. Perhaps the nearest approach to such a proof is a Newmarket anecdote:

"Coming from his stables along the High-street, he stopped of a sudden, and began to call out lustily, 'Oh yes! oh yes! oh yes!' [sic], after the manner of the orthodox criers. So soon as a sufficient crowd had collected, the Earl submitted this offer, 'Who wants to buy a horse that can walk five miles an hour, trot eighteen, and gallop thirty?' 'I do,' said several of the bystanders in the same breath. 'Then depend upon it,' said the Earl, 'if I hear of any such prodigy for sale I will let you all know.' He then turned on his heel and walked quietly down the street."

Dr. Williams (Anthony Pasquin) was domiciled with the Earl as a sort of amanuensis. He "was not noted either for cleanliness of person or habits—a fault peculiar to many of the genus. One evening, when dining with his patron, he called a footman to bring pen and ink, so that he might note a bon mot of his host's. The Earl of Barrymore suggested that if he would wash his hands he would obtain a quart of that fluid."

Revolting practical jokes have also to be put down to the Earl and his brothers. A poor travelling conjuror and his wife were sleeping soundly in a beerhouse at Wargrave, and the jokers, with the connivance of the landlord, placed between them the dead body of a village coachman. On waking up in the morning

"They were almost demented with terror at beholding a corpse by their side, and rushed shrieking from the room. They had not gone far along the passage before they met the landlord, coming out, as he said, 'to see what the hullabaloo was about.' When he was told what he already knew, that a dead body had been placed in their bed, he coolly replied that he 'presumed that they knew well enough how it had got there, as they had, no doubt, lured the man to their room and killed and robbed him.'"

As if this was not enough, the pair were allowed to be charged with murder by the village constable, though only to be released shortly afterwards. Whether the double shock unhinged their reason is not known.

Now and then Mr. Robinson affords us a glimpse of Lord Barrymore's contemporaries. The following anecdote of Charles James Fox is not so well known as it deserves to be:

"Sir John Lade, better known as Sir John 'Jehu,' had an outstanding debt due or owing by Mr. Fox, who, one morning after a lucky night at the faro table at the Jockey Club, Newmarket, found himself in a position to discharge it. He accordingly sent a note to Sir John, in which he asked for an appointment to hand him his obligation. When they met, Mr. Fox produced the sum he owed, which he placed on the table. Sir John then called to a servant for pen, ink, and paper, and began to compute the interest. 'What are you up to?' demanded Mr. Fox. 'Only calculating the interest.' 'Are you, though,' replied Mr. Fox coolly, at the same time returning the notes to his pocket. 'Why, I thought, Sir John, that my debt was a debt of honour. But as you seem to look at it in another light, and intend making a trading debt of it, I beg to inform you that I make it an invariable rule to pay my Jew creditors last. You must therefore wait a little longer for your money, Sir John.'"

Mr. Robinson, while leaving something to be desired in the matter of composition, is not sufficiently alive to the importance of revising his proofs. Misprints in the book are neither few nor far between. He should also have been on his guard against the error of calling his hero "Earl Barrymore," as he sometimes does.

FREDERICK HAWKINS.

THREE BOOKS ABOUT PARIS.

Memorable Paris Houses. By Wilmot Harrison. (Sampson Low.)

Mon Vieux Paris. By Edouard Drumont. (Paris: Flammarion.)

The Paris Law Courts. Translated from the French by Gerald Moriarty. (Seeley.)

In the course of nine long walks through the streets of Paris, Mr. Wilmot Harrison professes to point out to the curious, who may be ignorant of French, the memorable houses of this city, so rich in historical and literary associations; and, as he passes from house to house, he relates anecdotes and trifles concerning the notabilities who have, at various epochs, inhabited them.

We can imagine a good book compiled on this plan, with a happy selection of stories to relieve the dryness of biography, and with an accuracy born of familiarity with Paris and its history. Unfortunately, the necessity of translating the jokes makes them fall very flat, and the number of blunders we came across on first opening the pages has made one very suspicious of the rest. We read that Gambetta lived with his mother as housekeeper, when it is well known that his housekeeper was la bonne tante Massabie; that Merimée died in 1888 at the age of fifty-five, whereas his death took place in September, 1870, at the age of about seventy; that the Hôtel Lamoignon was built by "Diane de Poitiers, natural daughter of Henri II.," whereas it was built by Diane de France, Duchess of Angoulême, daughter of Diane de Poitiers and Henri II. The gourmet Anthelme Brillat-Savarin figures as "Barthelmé Brillat de Savarin." Even the names of the streets fare badly: the Quai des Célestins becomes "des Célestines," and Pierre Leroux is canonised by the street named after him being called "Rue St. Pierre Leroux." Such errors exciting suspicion, we turned to a well-known person about the facts of whose life there can be no doubt, Madame Roland, and we find:

"Quai de l'Horloge. No. 41, at the western extremity, is memorable as the home in early youth (1754) of Jeanne Marie Philipon, afterwards to become famous as the soul of the Girondist party as Madame Roland, and fated to end her life on the scaffold. She lived there with her grandmother, and she has described in her 'Memoirs,' written in prison, how she wandered constantly by the winding course of the river in the company of her aunt Angelica."

Now, in this short paragraph there are about as many errors as there are lines. First, the house should have been pointed out as at the corner of the Pont Neuf and of the Quai des Lunettes, on the second story. She did not reside there in 1754, for that was the year she was born in the Rue de la Lanterne. Her name was Marie Jeanne Philipon (not Philipon); she did not live there with her grandmother, but with her parents; she lived there not only in her early youth, but, except for a few intervals, until she was twenty-five. One year, indeed, at the age of twelve, she did spend with her grandmother; but that was in the Ile St. Louis, and it was in that quiet island, not in the bustle of the Ile de la Cité, that she walked of an evening with her grand-aunt Angélique. Here are her own words contrasting the two islands:

"Enfant de la Seine, c'était toujours sur ses bords que je venais habiter. La situation du logis paternel n'avait point le calme solitaire de la demeure de ma bonne maman; les tableaux mouvants du pont-neuf variant la scène à chaque minute, et je rentrais véritablement dans la monde au propre et au figuré en revenant chez ma mère."

The author in another place tells us that "Mme. Roland died at sixty years of age." Let us hope this is a misprint for "forty."

After this examination of a single biographical sketch, all faith in the author's accuracy is gone, and we can only read the book for such amusement as the anecdotes give—when translated. Here is a sample of them, told of Heine. "On one occasion, when the doctor was examining his chest, he asked him, 'Can you whistle?' He replied, 'Alas, no! not even the pieces of M. Scribo.'" It is scarcely necessary to remark that the joke turns on the double meaning of siffler, to whistle or to hiss, so that translation must fall very flat on the "English-speaking reader," for whom the book is intended.

When Baudelaire is described as wearing "a 'lustrous' overcoat (presumably of broadcloth)," we feel that the author has probably stumbled over the word lustrine (whence "lutestring"); and this is not the only instance indicating a want of that perfect familiarity with the French language which is necessary for the compilation of a work of this kind, if it is to rise out of the class of guide-books for trippers.

We must hope that when "the enterprise of Parisian éditeurs" for which the author states he is waiting, enables him to bring out the book in French, the éditeurs will have it "edited" in the English sense. The title-page informs us that the woodcuts are from drawings made expressly for this work by Paris artists; the future publishers will, doubtless, also have the work of the artists better interpreted than it is in the present edition, where the portraits have mostly a family likeness not of the most pleasing character. Auguste Comte, Meyerbeer, and Guizot appear to be brothers; Mesdames Récamier, Roland, and de Staël to be sisters; Heine bears a strange resemblance to Gambetta, and that "lay saint" Littré becomes still uglier than nature made him.

Mon Vieux Paris is a reprint of an interesting volume on Old Paris written by M. Edouard Drumont fifteen years ago, long before he was seized with the rabid outbreak of anti-Semitism which resulted in the publication of La France Juive. The work is illustrated with charming sketches, in the text, of many of the old mansions and picturesque nooks and corners of the city, which have since disappeared in order to make room for the new Boulevards. The volume opens with a curious account of what the author terms the Paris Universal Exhibitions of olden times: the fairs of St. Laurent, of St. Germain, and St. Ovide. A sketch of the last-named fair shows us the Place Vendôme, where it was held, much as we see it now, minus the column of course. In the limited enclosures of these fairs were four or five pavilions in which goods from all parts of Europe, and even from China and the Indies, were classed in sections and groups after the manner of our modern World-Fairs, the nearest approach to which was the first Exhibition held in the Champ de Mars in 1798, where, among the list of exhibitors who received medals, we come across such well-known names as Breguet, Erard, Firmin-Didot, W. Robinson. A chapter is devoted to the history and topography of the celebrated Abbaye of St. Gervais des Prés; another to the career of Ange Pitou, the popular chansonnier, who during the Reign of Terror satirised the Terrorists and the Septembriseurs, while in his canard, "Tableau de Paris en Vaudeville," a sort of pamphlet printed on common "candle paper," he gave utterance in the form of witty banter to the indignation which was beginning to manifest itself in many honest minds. Twelve numbers of this publication appeared, in which the author, with wonderful brio, criticised in the jargon of the day the injustice and iniquities of the Jacobins. Eventually he was accused of being a Royalist agent, tried and condemned to death; but the sentence was modified to transportation for life to French Guiana, from whence he escaped, returned to Paris, became editor of his own works, bookseller, and died a "brave bourgeois" in 1826.

Among the most interesting chapters of Mon vieux Paris are the author's "promenades," the outcome of his flaneries through the Paris of thirty years ago. For example, starting from the Palais Bourbon, passing the residence of Mlle. de Lespinasse in the Rue St. Dominique, he enters the Rue de Lille where Mme de Tencin held her Bureau d'esprit, past the Hôtel Forcalquier, the centre of scandalmongering Paris, on to the Rue de l'Université, pointing out to the reader the Hôtels de Broglie, de Noailles, de Périgord, and others of equal celebrity. Our flâneur then turns into the Rue Taranne, stops to notice the quatrième which Diderot inhabited, and, just opposito, the residence of the Baron d'Holbach, with whom he takes the reader to the Café Procope (now a brasserie), Rue des Fossés St. Germain, opposite the Comédie-Française. On leaving this favourite resort of the Beaux-esprits of the period, he passes along the Rue des Cordeliers (now Rue de l'École de Médecine), where Marat set up the printing-office of L'Ami du Peuple; while, on the opposite side of the road, in the Passage du Commerce (still in existence), lived Simon, the cobbler, the future jailor of the Dauphin. And, if we choose to follow our cicerone further, he will lead us past the Hôtel Cluny and the Sorbonne, through many narrow and dirty streets, until we reach the Halle aux vins, built on the ruins of the abbey of St. Victor, where Thomas à Becket lived for some time. The last chapter of M. Drumont's work, entitled "Cinères et Osses," gives a brief account of the Cemetery of the Innocents and the Catacombs.

The Paris Law Courts offers a series of interesting and amusing details regarding men and customs in and around the Palais de Justice. It is also instructive reading; for the translator, Mr. Gerald Moriarty, has added to the original a concise sketch of the French judicial system, so different from the English, which will enable the reader to understand early the working of the Paris law-courts. The cleverly-executed "scenes in court," by Messieurs Renouard and Brun, together with the photogravure portraits and views, add to the attractiveness of this handsome volume.

CECIL NICHOLSON.

The Jungle Book. By Rudyard Kipling. (Macmillans.)

HITHERTO we have been accustomed to find inequality in Mr. Kipling's work. He has never yet given us a book entirely good: each collection of his stories is a mixture of success and failure. Naturally, this peculiarity has always stirred some annoyance and perplexity in his critics; for at his best he is not easily surpassed, while at his worst he is almost puerile. There is a popular superstition, not without an element of truth in it, that equality and mediocrity are interchangeable terms. But though no author, however gifted, can always be at his best, the inequalities of Mr. Kipling's work offer too startling a contrast. His frequent falls from the heights to the deeps, his dazzling leaps from the mire to the mountain top, cannot be satisfactorily accounted for by any theory however respectable. So we are unable to take up a new volume of his without knowing our hopes are dogged by a most uncomfortable fear. Faith in his ultimate success is founded upon the fact that, the more difficult his task seems, the greater the certainty that he will be successful. Consequently, if he wishes to sustain his reputation, he must refuse resolutely to write on subjects commonplace or indifferent.

The Jungle Book has been cordially welcomed; and it is only just to confess, at once, that it is more carefully designed than anything he has yet given to us. There are no serious blemishes in the style and grammar: as a piece of technique it is quite blameless. But a serious doubt arises as to whether the matter of the book is at all worthy of the labour bestowed on it. Again, it is certain that those flashes of genius that used to dazzle us seldom illumine its pages. In them Mr. Kipling's finest qualities are to seek. We prefer to hear his men and women talk, as only Mulvaney or Mrs. Hawkesby can talk, be Bagheera and Baloo never so ingenious. It is impossible to rid oneself of the conviction, that any author rather more clever than the average could have contrived the greater part of The Jungle Book. There are, indeed, a few pages that no one but the creator of Soldiers Three could have written: and one new friendship is cemented, for which we are grateful. Rikki Tikki, though only a mongoose, fights his way gallantly enough into the list of Mr. Kipling's immortals. The history of his war with the cobras is entirely delightful, and refuses to be forgotten.

There are times when plain speaking is necessary; and then the most ardent admirer of an author must, if he be honest, say the truth. The truth is, that The Jungle Book, had it been written by a person unknown, might have stirred a languid interest, and a certain reasonable hope of better things to come. As the work of a man of recognised genius, it compels disappointment. It is generally true that to gain a worthy success a writer must toil hard, must choose his words with discrimination. But there is no rule without an exception, and in this case Mr. Kipling would seem to be that exception. His best work achieves itself, apparently, spontaneously. It is a startling, nay dangerous, thing to say of a man that he places failure far from him only when he is most careless. But Mr. Kipling may, at any rate, be advised—adapting a remark of Mr. Henley's—not to concern himself again with words and phrases, but with the greater truths of destiny and emotion. His last book prompts this reflection: few authors know the human heart so well as he, let him forsake, therefore, Mowglis and mules and monkeys, and remember that his vital phrases have ever been born, not made.

PERCY ADDLESHAW.

A POLISH STUDY OF BYRON AND HIS AGE.

Byron i jego Wiek. Studya Porównawczo Literackie. Tom. I., "Europa Zachodnia." (Byron and his Age. Studies in Comparative Literature. Vol. I., "Western Europe.") By M. Zdzichowski. (Cracow.)

PERHAPS at the present time the works of Byron are more on our book-shelves than in our hands, and certain critics among us even affect to depreciate him: we may recommend the essay of Matthew Arnold as an eloquent rejoinder to their pretended contempt. Whatever may be the poet's position among ourselves, his glories have suffered no diminution with foreigners. The reasons for this are very intelligible. There is nothing insular about Byron. Moreover, his writings are full of action and human interest; hence he is the very opposite of the meditative and somewhat bourgeois Wordsworth, about whom we do not find much in French literature, except, perhaps, the well-known mention of Théophile Gautier. In most European countries Byron has founded a school, and his influence is linked with the names of some of the most considerable poets. It would be idle to point out the French and German authors who come under this category: their names are too well known. But we might cite Slowacki and Malczewski among the Poles; Pushkin and Lermontov among the Russians; and among the few poets of high rank produced by Italy in the present century we need but refer to Leopardi.

Prof. Zdzichowski has made a profound study of Byron and his influence upon his generation. He has already written on Byron's critics, on Shelley as the noble poet's fellow-worker (Shelley jako współzawodnik Byrona), and on his influence upon the Bohemian poet Macha and others (Karol Hynek Machajski i bajronizm czeski). Unfortunately, Bohemian literature is so little studied in our country that to most readers the comparisons of the professor in the latter work will prove a dead letter.

In the book before us the genesis of Byronism is investigated, and Rousseau and Chateaubriand are very properly regarded as his literary forerunners. To their influence must be added that of the French Revolution and Napoleon. The sketch of Byron's life, which occupies pp. 27-156 of the volume, is clear and accurate. Our author traces the poet throughout his chequered career, and criticises the last great episode of his life, the struggle for Greek independence. The death of Byron is described with much feeling. M. Zdzichowski refuses to believe that the poet was at heart a sceptic. He praises his generosity, his fidelity to his friends, and his real freedom from egotism, as shown in his submitting himself to the criticisms of such a commonplace and merely respectable person as Gifford. Finally, he sums Byron up as the poet of negation and revolution. The survey of his works is masterly, and could only be the result of a profound study. Leaving Byron, our author turns to Shelley, of whom he has written a highly interesting account. He is a mystic, whose whole life was passed in a kind of ecstasy (p. 163). The personal appearance of the poet is described to us such as he has been represented in the picture of Miss Curran, a copy of which now adorns the walls of the Bodleian. Towards the close of the part of the work consecrated to Shelley, that poet is contrasted with Lamartine, much to the advantage of the former. Shelley is becoming better known in Eastern Europe; recently a Russian translation of his poems made its appearance.

The Byronism of Lamartine is discussed at considerable length by M. Zdzichowski. To us the French poet seems harmonious and religious: there is plenty of fervour in his writings, but they lack strength. How weak, after the magnificent music of Byron's "Childe Harold," is Lamartine's "Dernier Chant," in which he attempts to supplement the poet! Supplements to the writings of great men have often been singularly unsuccessful. The late Martin Tupper affected to write a conclusion to "Christabel." We are, however, far from comparing Lamartine to the English poetaster. He is a melancholy and eloquent pietist. Byronism among French authors leads M. Zdzichowski to his essays on Alfred de Vigny and Alfred de Musset. The pessimism of the latter, he says, is more depressing than the affected scepticism of Byron, especially as exemplified in Rolla and the gloomy prose work: Les Confessions d'un Enfant du Siècle. German Byronism is represented by Lenau and Heine. In Lenau, moral and literary flabbiness seem to us to have reached their fullest development. The absolute purposelessness of his life terminated naturally in a madhouse. Whatever may have been the element of revolt in Byron, he was sane and manly. Lenau is the complete example of paralysed Weltschmerz. Heine, says M. Zdzichowski, is a pessimist who pleases people, because they always prefer those who laugh at things to those who weep over them.

"Church and State, Jesuits and magnates, believers and unbelievers, mystics and rationalists, were all in turn the objects of his ridicule and attacks; with the shafts of his sarcasm he was eager to wound and weaken what other persons held to be inviolable and sacred."

The only deity whom he acknowledged was Napoleon, and to him he offers an unreasoning and never failing homage. It was the Asiatic's love of concrete power and personal authority.

M. Zdzichowski has given us a bright, appreciative and wholesome book. He lets us see, wide as are his sympathies, that he has not broken with Christianity. We must only regret that, in consequence of the Polish language being so little studied in England, the suggestive work of the Professor cannot have that circulation which it well deserves. The Poles have of late shown great activity. The Academy of Cracow continues to publish works of considerable historical research, such as would do honour to any country. One of the most distinguished living novelists of Europe is Henry Sienkiewicz, whose interesting writings were introduced to the English-speaking public by Mr. J. Curtin, the American author, and were received with the heartiest welcome. In physiology and other branches of natural science, the Poles have also won their spurs. We shall look forward with interest to the next volume of Prof. Zdzichowski's Essays, when he will probably tell us of the influence of Byron on Polish and Russian authors.

W. R. MORFILL.

NEW NOVELS.

The Green Bay Tree. By W. H. Wilkins and Herbert Vivian. In 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)

The Perfect Way of Honour. By G. Cardella. In 3 vols. (Sonnenschein.)

If Men were Wise. By E. L. Shaw. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

In the Face of the World. By Alan St. Aubyn. In 2 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Lame Dogs. By William Bullock-Barker. (Bliss, Sands & Foster.)

His Wife by Force. By Nelle Yeul. (Remington.)

A Parish Providence. By E. M. Lynch. (Fisher Unwin.)

Under the Live Oaks. By T. M. Browne. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

The First Light on the Eddystone. By Mrs. Marshall. (Seeley.)

Girls of a Feather. By Amelia E. Barr. (Henderson.)

THE gospel of selfishness and vulgarity is fully expounded in The Green Bay Tree, which is described as "a tale of to-day." There is not one thoroughly good, strong, virtuous character in the three volumes. Those who are meant to be good are weak or canting, and the only virility is in the vicious. We cannot say that we care for the book. Take away the passages in which naughty people and their ways are depicted—that is, all the spicy parts—and there is very little left. Towards the close of the third volume there are, it is true, one or two scenes which have the elements of real pathos in them, and are powerfully written; but these isolated passages cannot redeem the work as a whole. This novel is, we fear, but another indication of the deteriorating forces at work in English fiction. Feverishness, sensationalism, and sensualism are gaining ground rapidly, and no one seems to be able to make a mark without resorting to one or other of these characteristics. Messrs. Wilkins and Vivian exhibit a certain smartness in their work, but it seems forced—as though they had treasured up sayings and epigrams in their heart, with the view of unloading at the first opportunity. Their collaboration is so minutely explained that not only chapters but even paragraphs are assigned to their respective authors, so that posterity will have no excuse in attributing to Wilkins what rightly belongs to Vivian. Walpole Coryton and Violet Tressilian are the two specially wicked ones who flourish "like the green bay tree." When Walpole's father, the Right Hon. Spencer Coryton, lay on his death-bed, he said to his son, "Remember always that your best friend is yourself." The son never forgot the injunction, but behaved with incredible baseness to his friends, Wilfrid Tyrconnel and others, all through life, and having got into the House of Commons, he is still left flourishing in his villainy at the close of the story. Shady scenes are depicted at Harrow, Cambridge, and Monte Carlo, in which "ladies" of burlesque figure. Cory-ton is responsible for many of these scenes, but he always manages to throw the blame on others, and deceives everybody to the last, bringing the best character in the novel to ruin and death. By the way, Milton is made to say, for the thousandth time, "fresh fields and pastures new"; and there are two errors more serious still in this one sentence: "After the betrayal of the country party by Peel in 1856, and their yet more shameful betrayal by their own leader in 1868," &c. Peel could scarcely betray his party in 1856, having been then dead six years; nor was the other betrayal in 1868, but in 1867.

We breathe purer atmosphere when we come under the influence of Mr. or Miss Cardella's story, The Perfect Way of Honour. Here there is something noble and elevating to absorb our attention, and we find that, for the true delineation of human nature, all those unhealthy and adventitious aids so much in vogue are wholly unnecessary. It is impossible to read this novel and not to feel the better for it. It braces up the moral feelings and energies, and gives us a high and worthy view of human nature, especially as regards those questions of affection between the sexes which are often thrust out of sight. Nor is this end achieved under the disadvantages of wishy-washy sentiment and a weak style. The author writes with considerable literary skill, and her descriptions of Scotch scenery are touched in with real fidelity to nature. But the one great merit of the book is its human element. Mary Alston, with her lofty moral nature and her intense revolt against all injustice, is a fascinating woman—fascinating by reason of all that is good and pure and womanly. She contrasts strangely with her sister, Adela, who is woefully deceived by that prig and paragon, the Rev. Everard Disney. Mary also loves "not wisely, but too well"; but, after all, there is some manliness in her husband, Anthony Carruthers. He has behaved infamously to a woman in the past, and neglected their offspring; but after years of happiness with Mary, his past sins find him out. His soul is not of the heroic mould, and he will not make the only reparation in his power; whereupon Mary sacrifices her own happiness and her very life, as it proves, to atone in some measure for his sin. She is one of those women who perish to establish justice and purity for all, to abolish useless suffering—the suffering of the innocent for the guilty and the clean for the unclean. She went about redressing human wrong, and when she died left behind her a sainted memory, which made her erring husband a better man, and knit his two sons together in indissoluble affection. There are several other characters in the novel of an unusual type, such as the sensitive little artist, Judith Armstrong, and Mary's silent worshipper, Evan Fairfax. Here again we have some mistakes to correct. The very first line in the book is misquoted from Scott; then, in the last stanza from Shelley's "Ode to a Skylark" there are no fewer than three errors; the name of Lord Strafford is given as Stafford, and that of Judge Jeffreys as Jefferies; while we read of John Knox's splendid epitaph being spoken over his grave. One does not speak an epitaph. When world-famous poems and names are quoted, it is as well to take sufficient trouble to see that they are correctly given.

A Quixotic young Englishman of good family, Laurence Wrayburn, settles down at a primitive place in Canada called Swan-neck, where the scenery is magnificent and the inhabitants are few. He has been sorely tried in the old country, and he hopes here to escape from all the mean and galling things which disgrace humanity. Such is the hero of the story If Men were Wise, when there suddenly comes upon the scene the new village schoolmistress, Mary Ford. Like himself, she is far superior to the other members of the settlement, who are of a grasping, canting, or despicable character. Miss Ford has had an even more painful past than Wrayburn. Without being able to help it, they fall deeply in love with each other; but they have enemies in the settlement who cannot understand their higher natures. One of these is a Scotchman named McFarlane, an insolent and argumentative person. After much persecution, Miss Ford is driven from Swanneck; but Wrayburn follows and marries her. They have a brief spell of happiness, which is rudely broken by the discovery that Mary's previous husband, a rascally convict captain, whose death had been circumstantially reported, is still alive. They are in England when this villain appears upon the scene, and Wrayburn returns in despair to Swanneck. Not long afterwards the real husband dies. Mary again goes out to Canada, and arrives at Swanneck only to find that Wrayburn is dead. He had heroically sacrificed himself to save the lives of others at a fire. It is a sorrowful ending to the narrative, and one that will be unpopular with the readers of Mudie and Smith; and yet it is a natural one. Wrayburn was too good for his time. The descriptions of scenery are excellent, and the character-drawing is equal to them. The novel is beyond all question a noticeable one: strong and thoughtful, and instinct with the passions of humanity.

The hero of Alan St. Aubyn's new story would be voted even more Quixotic than the hero of Mrs. Shaw's. In the Face of the World represents a son of the great brewer, Sir Tristram Lushington, fresh from Cambridge, deliberately resigning a million of money because it has been made by the accursed drink traffic. He starts a new crusade in the East End of London, and goes through terrible hardships for conscience sake. He is a little shaken by his father's arguments, when he finds that the philanthropic brewer has erected out of his profits model lodging-houses, people's institutes, almshouses, &c.; but it is only for a moment, for he reflects that it is no use serving God with what has been won by the aid of the Devil. Tristram, the chivalrous, incurs the bitter hatred of his family, and loses his betrothed, though the fault here is not so much her own, and his example finally makes a saint of her. Of course, he was voted "as mad as a hatter"; but he held on to his course of self-denial, and achieved a vast amount of good in an unobtrusive way. From the literary point of view this novel is not quite equal to its predecessors from the same hand; but it is pervaded by a noble spirit, and it calls earnest attention to many blots upon our civilisation.

It is inscrutable to us, yet no doubt Mr. Bullock-Barker had an object in view in writing Lame Dogs. The book is miserably weak, and utterly devoid of talent. It is called "An Impressionist Study"; but the only impression it has made upon us is one of commiseration for a writer who could thus deliver himself into the hands of the enemy.

His Wife by Force is evidently by a young girl of irreproachable sentiments; but why she should endeavour to disguise the honest, if unromantic, names of Lucy Ellen under the ugly ones of "Nelle Yeul" passes our comprehension. However, her story is fairly readable—youthful in style, but at any rate wholesome in purport. Beautiful Muriel Golfinch, a Royalist maiden, is married to Sir Edward Turner, a Roundhead, by force, and yet also through affection. The reader must discover the solution for himself. It will be seen that the story deals with the times of the Great Rebellion; and the authoress has read history to better purpose than many writers on this period, for she has not made Cromwell a cropheaded old villain, and the Stuarts saints and martyrs.

All persons who have the true welfare of the Irish people at heart cannot do better than read A Parish Providence, by Miss Lynch, and especially the introduction by Sir C. Gavan Duffy. The little volume is one of the series called "The New Irish Library." The story is concerned with a French doctor, who, by his humanitarian efforts in his own parish, completely changed its aspect into one of happiness and plenty. But Sir Gavan Duffy forcibly shows that, if a number of individuals imbued with sufficient patriotism were to do the same thing in Ireland, we should witness a marvellous development in her home industries, with a consequent elevation of the masses of the people. But the efforts must be thorough, systematic, and adapted to those conditions and natural products which alone can ensure stability of occupation for the people.

Under the Live Oaks is a graceful little Californian story, showing the good which may be accomplished in her own sphere by even one young girl, when she is moved by genuine love and sympathy. The narrative is interesting, and it achieves the difficult end of being pure and moral without being goody-goody.

Mrs. Marshall's semi-historical stories are always popular. They are nicely written, without severely taxing the intellect. The First Light on the Eddystone deals with Winstanley's effort to do what was successfully achieved later by Smeaton and Douglas—that is, to construct a lighthouse which should defy the elements. But this is only an incidental purpose in Mrs. Marshall's narrative, which really relates a touching love story of two centuries ago.

Mrs. Barr's Girls of a Feather is on different lines from most of her stories, being more sensational and more cynical—perhaps, in order to adapt it to the "Anglo-American Library of Fiction." But it is very bright and readable, notwithstanding its constant straining after smartness. The characters are all American, and are crisply drawn.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

Memoirs of Anne C. L. Botta. (New York: J. Selwin Tait & Sons.) The subject of this memoir enjoyed the friendship of a wide circle of literary men and women; and among the contributors to the volume are such well-known names as Mr. J. A. Froude, Mr. Justin McCarthy, Mr. Moncure D. Conway, Mr. Charles Dudley Warner, Mr. Edmund Clarence Stedman, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, and Miss Kate Field. Mrs. Botta herself was an author of merit. While she was yet Miss Lynch she achieved some fame as a poet, and several pleasing verses and thoughtful and suggestive prose essays from her pen are printed in the present volume. Her chief success, however, was not as a writer, but as the friend and entertainer of literary and artistic persons. "Her home was the centre of hospitality and the meeting place of whatever was best in letters and art." For many years she was an assiduous gatherer together of literary lions, but she was not in the least degree an American Mrs. Leo Hunter. She gathered her lions together, not that they might give lustre to her establishment or distinction to herself, but in a spirit of unaffected and disinterested hospitality. Moreover, her attentions were not confined—perhaps not mainly given—to famous persons. She was distinguished by her "ever-ready help" for unknown seekers after fame, and indeed for all persons in any sort of need or distress.

"Young men and young women struggling to make themselves felt in science, literature, art, or the work of higher instruction, were the especial objects of her interest; to seek them out, to aid them, to encourage them, to bring them into relations with others who could inspire them—all this was her delight" (pp. 63, 64).

Besides her literary tastes, she displayed a keen interest in public movements, and her sympathies were chiefly on the side of progress. Mrs. Botta lived to the ripe age of seventy-six, and during her long career she came in touch with several generations of writers. She knew Griswold, Poe, and Willis, Emerson, Bayard Taylor, and Horace Greeley, as well as the people of to-day. Willis has celebrated her as "Jessie Evreland" in his People I have Met. Bayard Taylor refers to a reception of hers in his John Godfrey's Fortunes. It was at one of these receptions that Poe gave his first reading of "The Raven." The best evidence of Mrs. Botta's excellence of character and disposition is found in the testimony of her many personal friends. Horace Greeley once said, in his emphatic way, "Anne Lynch is the best woman God ever made." Quite as significant is the calmer utterance of Mr. Dudley Warner, one of her friends of later life: "She was one of those rare natures which makes us think better of the world and better of our possibilities—that is, she was an inspiration to all lives she came in contact with." The volume, in respect to externals, is admirable, and it has been edited by Mr. Botta with excellent judgment. If its primary interest is for those who knew Mrs. Botta personally, who came under her influence and were benefited by her unwearied helpfulness, still the story and record of a career so benign are of more than private concern, and will repay the attention of any thoughtful reader.

Nigh on Sixty Years at Sea. By Robert Woodward. (Digby, Long & Co.). This is a book full not only of common sense, but also of uncommon humour. Its author is probably far too sensible a man to lay claim to unusual literary merits; but he has a right to try his hand at literature, for he has lived a long, active, and useful life. He commanded a transport vessel during the Crimean War, he served with considerable success in the China War, and for fifty years he has been an officer in the Royal Mail Line to the West Indies and Brazil. Several times, as he tells us, with an evident satisfaction and pleasure that is never offensive or obtrusive, he has received the thanks of passengers for carrying them safely through terrible storms, his log of which is admirable reading. He is proud of telling his readers, and has reason to be, that he is a good seaman, a good hater, a good friend, and that by the late Emperor of Brazil he was decorated with the order of the Rose. While by no means ignorant of his own worth, he is enthusiastic when he records the merits of others. He has written a "rattling"—that seems the proper epithet—book, full of good stories and shrewd comments from cover to cover. Whether he is discussing the relative merits of the screw and the paddlewheel, the ethics of shipbuilding, or the social position of the officers of the mercantile marine, he is always entertaining and sensible. As he says of himself, with perfect truth, he has a keen sense of humour; and we might add that he can spin a yarn, even on paper, remarkably well. Much of the matter in his book must have often delighted Captain Woodward's own family and personal friends. It is not giving it too high praise to say that by publishing it he will largely increase the number of those indebted to him. There is many a half hour of genuine enjoyment to be got from its pages. And concerning the work of how few professed book-makers can we say so much!

The Prose Tales of Alexander Pushkin. Translated from the Russian by J. Keane. (Bell.) The tales of Alexander Pushkin—or Pushkin, as we prefer writing the name—after having been neglected in this country for many years have at length found translators. The first to put them into an English dress was Mrs. Buchan Telfer, who published her book about fifteen years ago. A later translation has appeared from the pen of Mr. Sutherland Edwards, who has written well on many Russian subjects. Besides these there have been published versions of two or three of the tales, which have had an ephemeral existence in magazines. It was curious, at least, that while noticing some of these productions, one of our reviews spoke of Pushkin as a living writer! The translation of Mr. Keane now before us is faithful and spirited; but he has omitted from his list the clever fragment, "The Negro of Peter the Great," which gives such a striking picture of Russian society at that time. Mr. Keane is evidently well acquainted with the Russian language, and has occasionally added useful footnotes to his work. The volume begins with the dramatic tale of "The Captain's Daughter," one of the best things Pushkin ever wrote. His attention was drawn to the subject while searching for historical materials in the Russian archives. He has brought before us vigorously the details of the revolt of Pugachev; the pictures of the robber-chief, of the good old commandant of the garrison and his wife, and of the faithful serf are excellent. "The Snowstorm" is a bit of very powerful writing. In some of the other sketches, for instance "The Coffin Maker" and "The Queen of Spades," Pushkin shows a weirdly grotesque power, that reminds us of some of the phantasmagorical productions of Edgar Allan Poe. Belonging to the same class of stories is "The Pistol Shot," with its highly dramatic denouement. It is strange that the poet should have twice described a duel in such powerful language—here and also in Eugene Onegin—as if prophetic of the death by which he himself was to die in that fatal winter of 1837. In "The Postmaster" we have a truly pathetic tale; all readers have wept with the poor Smotritel for his Dunya. The least meritorious of the whole collection have always appeared to us to be "The Amateur Peasant Girl" and "The Snowstorm." The latter is entertaining, but exceedingly improbable. We are glad to find that these bright and very readable stories by the celebrated Russian poet are making their way among us.

Critical Sketches, by G. S. Street (Kegan Paul & Co.) is not very dissimilar from the hundred and one collections of magazine articles which it has become the fashion to publish in volume form. The author writes pleasantly, but with no great distinction; he is sometimes interesting, but never very original. The ten essays of which the book consists deal with a variety of matters: Rousseau, the Sea, Westminster Abbey, Diderot, the Realities of War; and a man must possess considerable learning or a genuine felicity of style to interest his reader in each and all of these subjects. Perhaps the best essay is that on Westminster Abbey; and in view of the present controversy as to the disposal of our "illustrious dead," it were not unadvisable to reprint it in pamphlet form.

A June Romance. By Norman Gale. (Rugby: George E. Over.) This is the second edition of a little story that has already won a certain measure of fame. Mr. Gale's work always possesses real literary merit; and though his poetry excels his prose, the latter is, for the most part, sufficiently distinctive to be treated with respect. Alice Ellarby is a charming heroine; and we are sorry that the priggish tutor, with his noisy affectations, should have won so fair a prize. Both the parson and the squire were better men.

The Queen who Flew, by Ford Hueffer (Bliss, Sands & Foster) is a pretty book, with a frontispiece by Burne Jones, and a border design, somewhat irritating by its frequent repetition, of C. R. B. Barretts. The story is well, but not too well, written, and will probably please a large class of readers. The ending however, where the Queen gives up her kingdom and marries the ploughman will, it is to be hoped, displease the lovers of old fairy lore. In a fairy tale, at any rate, she should have made the ploughman king and then married him. The author represents her as seeming to shirk, at the very last moment, her determination to be of some use in the world. For, admirable as it may be to drive a plough properly, it is more admirable, and more useful, to rule a kingdom well; and the Islands of the Narrow Seas wanted a good government after the rule of their turbulent regents. We can hardly believe in the bat's success as monarch, even in an allegorical fairy tale.

The New Werther: or, the Wealsman's Wrath, by D. S. Graham (H. R. Allenson), is a credit to its publishers, being beautifully bound and extremely well printed. Here all praise must end; for a more incomprehensible book was never issued, and it is to be hoped never written. On the second page occurs this passage, which cannot possibly mean anything, and yet is a fair sample of the whole. "Times were, however, when unaudited woes, like the fable of the birds and pomeranian sandgrains, piled up faster than sage-time servers, gagged with subterfuge, or politic panacea, lasting a day, till, through sheer force of gravity, the crag-heap toppled, rolled down, blood-spilling." But then the story, if it be a story, is all about "the pressing need of humanity," "whim-whams," a hero whose "eyes shone with a rolling frenzy," a heroine who becomes with him "a hunter in the glorious jungle of thought." The lady, however, has a lucid interval early in the book, and exclaims, "Dreamer of dreams, mused-madman, stop." Unfortunately for the reviewer, he refused, and continues for a further hundred and eighty pages. For the hero was a "slitterkin," or perchance a "bumlerkite"; and he who tries to understand him will be "pashed by amase-ment."

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE understand that Messrs. A. & C. Black propose to publish a new Dictionary of the Bible before the end of 1896. The work was originally planned by the late Prof. Robertson Smith, who hoped nearly to the last that he might be able to take a leading part in its preparation. Last February, finding that Prof. Cheyne agreed with him as to the nature of the book that was wanted, he transferred his share in the editorial management to him, the co-editor being Prof. Robertson Smith's old friend and associate in the work of the Encyclopædia Britannica, Dr. J. Sutherland Black. The new dictionary will not, however, be without contributions from the late Prof. Robertson Smith, many of whose articles in the Encyclopædia will probably be incorporated in it, after they have been revised by personal friends. Besides a number of our own scholars, some well-known foreign specialists will be represented, including Profs. Nöldeke, Tiele, Stade, Wellhausen, Kautsch, Budde, Spitta, and Jülicher, with Profs. Francis Brown, G. F. Moore, and Toy, to represent the United States.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will issue next week an edition de luxe, in two volumes, of Mr. W. M. Conway's recent work on The Karakoram Himalayas. This edition will contain, in addition to the narrative, Mr. Conway's large map, a photogravure frontispiece of the author, and duplicate proofs of a number of selected illustrations, mounted on Japan silk tissue. Each copy is to be numbered and signed.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will publish shortly a book on The Unemployed, by Mr. Geoffrey Drage, secretary to the Labour Commission. It is divided into four parts: (1) Introduction, presenting a classification of agencies dealing with the unemployed; (2) what has been done hitherto to solve the problem; (3) nature and causes of the present distress; (4) what can be done in the future to solve the problem.

THOSE who read the letters of Catherine Hutton, which were published about three years ago, under the title of Reminiscences of a Gentlewoman of the Last Century, will be glad to hear that a further instalment of her correspondence is now being prepared for the press by the same editor, Mrs. Catherine Hutton Beale. There will be included an interesting collection of documents relating to the Coltman family, of Leicester, giving an account of the machinery riots of 1785; and a letter by the Rev. Joseph Spence, describing a visit to the Pretender in Rome. The book will be issued to subscribers through Messrs. Cornish Brothers, of Birmingham.

A POSTHUMOUS work of the late Francis Adams will be published immediately by Mr.

T. Fisher Unwin. It is a tragedy in blank verse, entitled Tiberius, and Mr. W. M. Rossetti contributes an introduction. The edition is limited to 250 copies.

MESSRS. WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS will publish early in the autumn a History of English Literature by Mr. J. Logie Robertson, English master of the Edinburgh Ladies' College. The work, which has been suggested by the experience of nearly twenty years' practical teaching, covers the whole field of the history of our literature, and embodies the most recent and reliable results in fact and criticism. It includes an historical sketch and a general survey of each period; biographies of the principal authors, with specimens of the poets; short references to authors of less note; and full chronological lists of writers and their works.

British Family Names: Their Origin and Meaning, by Dr. Henry Barber, is announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock. The work will contain separate lists of names of Scandinavian, Frisian, Anglo-Saxon, and Norman origin.

CAPTAIN M. H. HAYES, the author of "The Points of the Horse," will publish next week, through Mr. T. Fisher Unwin, a volume of autobiographical reminiscences, with portraits of celebrities and other illustrations. The title is Among Men and Horses.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL will publish, in the course of July, a new book by Mr. Robert C. Leslie, entitled A Waterbiography, with illustrations by the author.

THE Guild of Handicraft, of Essex House, Bow, E., will publish immediately a volume by Mr. C. R. Ashbee, entitled, Chapters in Workshop Reconstruction and Citizenship.

A NEW novel by Darley Dale, entitled The Game of Life, will be published immediately, in three volumes, by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co.

MESSRS. BICKERS & SON will shortly publish, in one volume, the Complete Poems of the late Miss Constance Naden.

THE Harleian Society has just issued to its members Volume 37 of its Publications. It is the first of four volumes comprising the valuable MS. at the British Museum known as Hunter's "Familiae Minorum Gentium," edited by Mr. J. W. Clay. The fourth volume will contain a copious index to the whole work.

BARON TAUCHNITZ has just acquired from Miss Elsa D'Esterre Keeling the right of issuing a continental edition of Appassionata, in his series of "British Authors," in which all her other books have previously appeared.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS announce a six-penny edition of The Woman in White, by Wilkie Collins.

A RE-ISSUE of The Divided Irish, by the Hon. A. S. G. Canning, with considerable alterations, will be published almost immediately by Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER will publish next week, in their "Popular Series of Novels," a cheap edition of Annie S. Swan's Doris Cheyne: the Story of a Noble Life.

THE first tribute to the new-born Prince of the House of York was paid by Mr. Eric Mackay, in the Daily Telegraph of June 25, under the title of "The White Rose of the Crown."

A NEW stained glass window in the Stationers Hall, representing Caxton presenting a proof of his first printing in the Almonry at Westminster to Edward IV., will be unveiled on Thursday next at noon by the Lord Mayor, who is (we believe) himself a member of the Stationers Company. An interesting feature of the design is that the border contains the colophons of the eight best known nearly English printers. The window is presented by the master of the Company for the current year, Mr. Joshua W. Butterworth; but we regret to add that it has been "made in Germany."

THE library and reading room of the Royal Irish Academy will be closed from July 9 to July 21, both days inclusive.

DURING the first three days of next week Messrs. Sotheby will be engaged in selling the library of the late Sir Joseph Hawley, who is perhaps best known as a winner of the Derby. But he was also a great bibliophile, his special interest being natural history, the drama, and illustrated books in their finest state. His library includes—the second and third Folios of Shakspeare; first editions of Lycidas, Comus, and Paradise Lost; a set of the ornithological publications of John Gould; and several choice collections of portraits and gems.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

A SONNET on the late President Carnot by Mr. Swinburne will appear in the forthcoming number of the Nineteenth Century.

THE New Science Review, an Anglo-American quarterly, will make its appearance early in July, under the direction of Mr. J. M. Stoddart, who for several years, and until quite recently, conducted Lippincott's Magazine. Mr. Moncure D. Conway writes on "Thomas Paine, and the Republic of the World"; Mr. Sidney Low criticises Lord Wolseley's "Marlborough"; Mr. Julian Hawthorne has something interesting to say about the famous American inventor, John Worrell Keely, who will himself contribute to the second number; Major Ricarde-Seaver describes the situation in Africa, more particularly with reference to British interests; and Prof. L. M. Haupt (formerly professor of engineering at Pennsylvania University) describes the Coast-Atlantic Ship Canal. Among those who have promised to contribute to future numbers are Mr. Traill, Mr. Mallock, and Mr. Gilbert Parker. The London publishing office will be at 26, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

MESSRS. PERCY LUND & Co. announce a new photographic magazine, to be called the Junior Photographer. It will specially address itself to beginners, and deal with the popular side of the art. Illustrations by photographic processes will also form a prominent feature. It will be conducted by Mr. Matthew Surface, editor of "The Practical Photographer."

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE Marquis of Salisbury and the Earl of Rosebery have both been elected honorary students of Christ Church, Oxford. Mr. Gladstone received the same distinction as long ago as 1859. In view of the recent practice of electing outsiders, it may be as well to add that each of the three was, in his time, an undergraduate of the House.

THE late Prof. Robertson Smith bequeathed his Arabic and Syriac MSS., together with twenty early-printed or scarce books to be selected by the librarian, to the University Library at Cambridge. The rest of his library is left to Christ's College. It is proposed to raise a memorial fund, to be devoted to maintaining and extending the oriental department of the library of Christ's College, and to purchasing oriental MSS. for the University Library.

THE Vice-Chancellor of Oxford has nominated a committee to confer with a Cambridge committee on the subject of scholarship examinations.

THE curators of the Taylorian Institution at Oxford offer for the second time a prize of £10 for proficiency in the language and literature of Russia. The authors that will be the special subject of examination are Pushkin, Turgueniev, and Lermontov.

ON the nomination of the Teachers' Training Syndicate, at Cambridge, Mr. J. Bass Mullinger has been appointed lecturer on the history of education, and Mr. W. E. Johnson lecturer on the theory of education.

THE University of Madras has been admitted to the privileges of a colonial university at Oxford.

PROF. GOUDY's inaugural lecture, as regius professor of civil law at Oxford, has been published as a pamphlet (Henry Frowde). The subject is "The Fate of the Roman Law North and South of the Tweed," considered under three epochs—(1) the period prior to the Norman Conquest; (2) from the Conquest to the Reformation; (3) from the Reformation to the present time. Regarding the first period, Prof. Goudy declares his adhesion to the view that Roman law, together with other Roman institutions, must to a large extent have survived the Saxon invasion; and he suggests that traces of it may be found in testaments and in manumissions. During the second period, a considerable infusion of Roman law was introduced into England from the Continent by civilians like Vacarius, by writers of text-books like Bracton, and by the founders of equity jurisprudence; whereas, in Scotland, the chief influence was that of ecclesiastics and the canon law. In the third period, the civil law was deliberately adopted as the common law of Scotland, under French influence, and was consolidated in text-books. Finally, Prof. Goudy comments upon two important differences of law between England and Scotland. With regard to the doctrine of legitimation per subsequens matrimonium, he urges that England should adopt the practice of the rest of Christendom; and he argues that the Scotch "legitim" was not taken directly from Roman law, but was borrowed from England in early days, when the same rule also prevailed here.

WE have received the first number of the Alumni Bulletin of the University of Virginia (Charlottesville). To many in this country the chief interest attaching to this college is that its first professor of ancient languages was George Long, about whom a survivor of the original class of 1825 writes as follows:

"Prof. Long, who was an Englishman, made a very popular, enthusiastic, and efficient teacher. He was quite a handsome man and a very agreeable and sociable companion. He took his meals at the hotel where some other pupils and myself boarded, and we were very much attached to him. Always taking part in our conversation, he made us feel at ease in his presence."

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE new number of the Economic Journal (Macmillans) contains several articles of general interest. Mr. John Graham Brooks, of Massachusetts, writes upon "Results of the Retail Liquor Traffic without Private Profits"—in other words, the Gothenburg system. In an effective diagram, he shows how the annual consumption of spirits has decreased in Sweden from fourteen to seven quarts per head, while it remains at sixteen quarts in Denmark, and has actually increased in most countries of Europe. Mr. B. E. Walker, general manager of a large Toronto bank, gives an elaborate account, historical and analytical, of the banking system in Canada, as compared with that in the United States. Incidentally, he mentions that savings banks have made but little way in Canada, because they are not wanted. Mr. Edwin Cannan summarises from Hansard the career of Ricardo in Parliament: he was an advocate of the ballot and of the repeal of legislation against blasphemy. Mr. F. C. Harrison, of Calcutta, in continuation of previous papers, critically examines the present position of the Indian currency question. On the whole, he is still of opinion that the closing of the mints will ultimately be effectual in giving a scarcity value to the rupee, though he admits that the first consequence has been to draw rupees out of private hoards. Among the reviews, we may specially mention one by Prof. Charles Gross of Jacobs's "Jews of Angevin England"; among the notes, a study of the returns of the Census relating to the agricultural population, by Mr. W. E. Bear, and an impartial examination of the Budget, by Prof. Bastable.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

SPRING SONNETS FROM MY GARDEN.

WALLFLOWERS.

My Love complained I had no wallflowers gay;
And so, beneath a dull November sky,
I planted on two hundred very nigh,
And worked at them throughout the short-lived day;
I planted them in manifold array,
In stately rows beneath my fruit trees high,
In groups, or filling up some corner shy,
And then I left them to the seasons' sway:
And now, when cherry boughs, all milky white,
Fling their triumphant arches o'er the beds,
And their soft beauty shimmers day and night;
Behold, where, tossing their sweet fragrant heads,
Filling the place with colour and delight,
My wallflowers bravely spread their browns and reds.

WEEDING.

With all your labour and your anxious care
To clean the ground from too luxuriant weed,
You shall not altogether quite succeed,
But haply leave some standing here and there;
You hardly know, is it a tendrilled tare,
Or hydra-headed groundsel, whose fell speed,
To grow and blossom and to turn to seed,
Might whiten any decent head of hair.
But some fine day as down the path you go
You shall behold a yellow cornflower bright;
Or in between a dull potato row,
A radiant sunflower, turning to the light;
Or lonely poppy, flaming on waste land—
Then weed not all, but let some few still stand!

BLOSSOM RAIN.

ROSES of Heliogabalus, indeed!
(Imperial whim, Imperially rehearsed
By one in wanton revelry well versed,
Unheard-of luxury whose only creed!)
Of such Caesarian freaks I'm not in need.
For since a week, when cherry blossoms burst,
Followed by creamy pear bloom (almost first,
But never quite!)—with apples to succeed:
Even as I work, sweet blossoms all the day
Lightly descend upon me from the trees,
Flying about in merry jocund play
Wafted by every lightome gust and breeze;
Like fragrant snow they downwards softly rain—
Roman! Thy Petal Feasts tempt all in vain!

KATE FREILGRATH KROEGER.

HONORARY DEGREES AT CAMBRIDGE.

THE following are the Latin speeches delivered by the Public Orator (Dr. Sandys) on June 27, on the occasion of the visit of the Royal Agricultural Society to Cambridge:—

"Principis nostri, plusquam semel Praesidis sui, auspicio, Cancellarii nostri sub praesidio, Regiam agricolaum Anglicorum societatem Cantabrigiam denuo inuisentem Academiae totius nomine iubemus salvere. Ipse Tullio auctore novimus, primum nihil Xenophonti tam regale visum esse quam studium agri colendi; deinde hominum generi universo culturam agrorum esse salutarem; denique omnium rerum ex quibus aliquid adquiratur, nihil esse agri cultura melius, nihil dulcius, nihil homine dignius. Salvete igitur studii tam praeclari professores, qui in agris colendis scientiam cum usu et experientia coniunctam profitemini. Vos, segetis laetae in expectatione, telluris gremio semina creditis; nos, non minore cum spe, iuventutis nostrae in mentibus doctrinae germina inserere conamur. Vos, in agrorum cultura scientiae lumen per Angliae rura late diffunditis; nos, inter Academiae nostrae numina, etiam ipsi Cereri locum nuper seposuimus. Et vestra et nostra commoda sunt aliquatenus communia; vestrae artes dum vigent, etiam nosmet ipsi prospera fortuna utimur, florent praediorum nostrorum redditus, florent Collegia nostra, floret tota Universitas. Nihil igitur auspiciis hodie precari possumus quam ut, vestrae societatis auxilio, patriae totius ad fructum, civium omnium in usum, telluris munera divini indies ampliora vobis reddantur; utque nostrum quocumque in populum universum descendant benedictiones illae antiquae: benedictus tu in civitate et benedictus in agro; benedictus fructus terrae tuae fructusque iumentorum tuorum; benedicti greges armentorum tuorum oviumque tuarum.

Atque haec quidem ominis causa praefati, pergitur deinceps titulo nostro primum Principis nostri filium, Principis novi patrem, ornare, deinde vestrum omnium in honorem etiam alios decorare. Non omnes sane, quos volumus, hodie laudibus nostris adficere possumus; sed, velut in frugibus vendendis vosmet ipsi ex acervo magno grana quaedam aurea emptoribus ostendere soletis, non aliter vestro ex ordine amplissimo nonnullos, quasi exempli causa, Cancellario nostro, Praesidi vestro, praesentamus, fidemque damus etiam ceteros esse bonae frugis.

THE DUKE OF YORK.

"Quam libenter Reginae nostrae augustissimae et Principis Alberti, olim Cancellarii nostri, nepotem Academiae totius nomine nunc primum salutamus. Salutamus denuo patrem eius, Principem nostrum illustrissimum, quem triginta abhinc annos titulo eodem ornatum vidimus; salutamus matrem, omnium consensu pulcherrimam, quam hodie etiam ipsam adesse vehementer laetamur. Salutamus Principem, qui prope ex ipsa pueritia scientiae navali perdiscendae sese strenue dedicavit; qui maria magna emensus, colonias nostras, toto orbe a nobis divisas, toto corde nobis coniunctas, regni sibi aliquando fortasse destinati nondum consciis, invisit; qui populorum magnorum historiae studiosus, imperii Britannici gloriam navalem sibi carissimam esse identidem indicavit. Nuper Kalendis Iuniis, dum misericordia solita pauperum aegrotantium salutis consulebat, classis Britannicae victoriam centum abhinc annos eodem anni die reportatam inter omnium plausus palam commemoravit. Idem prope uno abhinc anno (juvat recordari) inter regum principumque gratulationes, inter civium exultantium acclamationes, Ducis primi Cantabrigiensis neptim ab omnibus dilectam vitae totius consortem duxit. Hodie vero, gaudio novo elati, laetamur regni tanti heredis heredem filio feliciter esse auctum, et matro salva genus regium usque ad tertium gradum prospere esse continuatum.

MR. ALEXANDER PECKOVER.

"Primus omnium Principibus nostris assurgit hodie Reginae ipsius in comitatu Cantabrigiensis legatus, cuius o maioribus unius, tempore Cromwelliano militia functus, pacis artes a se postea praelatas posteris suis feliciter excolendas tradidit. Ipse, liberali imprimis ingenio praeditus, nuper in urbe nostra salutis templo administrando dignitatis iure praepositus, statim munificentia summa pauperum nostrorum valetudini consuluit. Viro tam munifico dum animi grati ex abundantia titulum nostrum hodie donamus, venit in memoriam monitum illud antiquum:—'date et dabitur vobis; mensuram bonam et confertam et coactatam et superfluentem dabunt in sinum vestrum: eadem quippe mensura, qua mensi fueritis, remetietur vobis.'

THE DUKE OF RICHMOND AND GORDON.

"Sequitur deinceps Universitatis Aberdoniensis Cancellarius, vir in publicis rebus saepenumero cum laude versatus, cuius pater agricolarum societati quinquaginta quattuor abhinc annos praeses prope primus fuit, quique ipse societati eidem bis praepositus, inter Oxonienses suos honoris titulo anno eodem est ornatus, quo Cancellarii nostri pater, Cancellarius ipse, societati praefuit. Virum tot titulis iam pridem ornatum etiam nosmet ipsi hodie libenter decoramus. Atqui nullum titulum ipsi potlorem esse credimus quam a Principis nostro inter epulas regias societatis suae in honorem habitas palam fuisse appellatum 'agricolarum amicum.'

EARL CATHCART.

"Incedit proximus vir insigni lepore et litterarum amore praeditus, qui maioribus inter arma illustribus oriundus, Minervam et Cererem non minus quam Martem coluit. Ipsa Ceres filiam suam, solis ex lumine telluris in gremio absconditam, facibus accensis quaevisse fertur; Cereris autem cultor insignis, quem hodie salutamus, nihil antiquius duxit quam, societatis suae fastis litterarum luce illustratis, Angliae totius agricolis faciem doctrinae praetendere. Talium virorum merita, inter Cereris ministros non obscura, etiam Academiae in lucem hodie libenter proferimus, Cererem ipsam atque Solem veritatis arbitrum Euripidis verbis testati:—

τήν τε περφόρον θεῶν
Δήμητρα θέμενοι μάρτυρ' ἤλοι τε φῶς.

SIR JOHN HENRY THOROLD.

"Salutamus deinceps virum societatis vestrae consiliorum prope in omni parte praeclare meritum, Cancellarii nostri in loco in annum proximum Praesidem vestrum designatum. Per annos complures agrorum suorum redditu infelicitate immutato, quanta animi cum magnitudine, quanta cum fortitudine, se gessit. Quam dignum laude illis Horatiana esse praestitit:—

'est animus tibi rerumque prudens et secundis temporibus dubisque rectus.'

SIR ROBERT NIOEL FITZ-HARDINGE KINGSCOTE.

"Adest deinceps vir in bello quondam insignis, in pace postea illustris, primum Senatui Britannico tres et triginta annos adscriptus; deinde Angliae totius memorum silvarumque et Cornwalliae metallorum redditibus exigendis praepositus; denique societatis vestrae de negotiis quotidianis praeclare meritis. Adest 'egregie cordatus homo,' vir in epistolarum commercio admirabilis, in animalium salute exploranda et adjuvanda indefessus.

MR. ALBERT PELL.

"Iuris Doctorum agmen clauditalumnus noster, iudicis filius, qui adhuc juvenis quattuor et quinquaginta abhinc annos societatis vestrae conventui primo Cantabrigiensis interfuit; qui postea, pestilentia gravi inter Britanniae boves saeviente, consilia salutaris solus obtulit pestemque tantam iussu publico opprimendam curavit; qui deinceps Senatui Britannico per annos septemdecim adscriptus, agri culturae patronus strenuus exstitit; qui nuper denique Academiam nostram Seneschalli sui cum auxilio de agri culturae studiis deliberantem magnopere adjuvit. Quod scientiae huius diplomata nostra hodie in honore sunt, talium virorum praesertim consiliis debemus.

SIR JOHN BENNET LAWES.

"Salutamus tandem par nobile collegarum qui de agrorum cultura, de pecudum alimentis variis, experimentis exquisitis una elaborandis annos quinquaginta, magnum profecto aetatis humanae spatium, dedicaverunt. Tot annorum autem labores non modo chartae fideles in perpetuum custodient, sed etiam saxum ingens nomine utroque insculptum inter posteros testabitur. Ab ipso autem 'monumentum aere perennius' erit exactum, experimentis tam utilis, tam fructuosum, munificentia ipsius etiam in posterum continuistis. Anguramur, nec nos fallit augurium, in agri culturae annalibus talium virorum nomina fore immortalia.

SIR JOSEPH HENRY GILBERT.

"Quos tot annorum labores una coniunxerunt, eos in laudibus nostra hodie divellere vix possumus. Constat tamen labore illos viri huiusce scientia admirabili et industria indefessae plurimum debere. Constat eodem eiusdem scriptis, eiusdem orationibus, non modo in patria nostra sed etiam peregre maximo cum fructu esse perfactos. Cum collega suo summa concordia coniunctus, Plinii verba iure optimo posset usurpare: 'nobis erat nullum certamen, nulla contentio, cum uterque pari iugo non pro se, sed pro causa niteretur.'

'Felicis ter et amplius quos irrupta tenet copula.'

PROF. DEMETRI IVANOVICH MENDELEEF.

"In scientia chemica investiganda diu inter peritos quaerebatur, quatenus ratio interesset inter atomorum pondera et quibus rerum elementa constarent et vires eas, sive chemicas sive physicas, quae elementis ipsis velut propriae inhaerent. Qua in ratione penitus perscrutanda atque ad certam quandam legem redigenda nemus plura perfecisse existimatur quam vir illustris qui Siberia in remota natus, et undecim abhinc annos a societate regia Londinensi numismate aureo donatus, hodie nostra corona qualicumque decoratur. Magnum profecto est inter tot elementa rationem certis intervallis velut circuitu quodam recurrentem observasse, eque rerum notarum observatione etiam ignota providisse. Viri huiusce ingenio etiam elementa prius inaudita mentis divinatione singulari praedicta sunt posteaque in ipsa rerum natura reperta. Quae elementa, trium gentium nominibus Gallium, Scandium, Germanium nuncupata, nomen ipsius illustrius reddiderunt et Russorum famam, quantum ad ipsum attinet, feliciter auxerunt. Ergo virum de scientia chemica tam diu tamque praeclare meritum, totque titulis aliunde ornatum, hodie etiam nostrorum

'turba Quiritium

certat tergemini tollere honoribus.'

Newtoni certe in Academia honos ei praesertim debetur, qui etiam in scientia chemica Newtoni in vestigiis tam fideliter insistit, ut alumui nostri 'qui genus humanum ingenio superavit' imaginem intuens, Lucreti verba paululum mutata possit usurpare:—

'Te sequor, o Grantae magnum deus, inque tuis nuuc

Ficta pedum pono pressis vestigia signis.'

MR. ERNEST CLARKE.

"Vobis omnibus notum esse arbitramur concilii vestri per annos septem adiutorem strenuum et indefessum, virum in Britannia quidem societati antiquitatis studiosum, inter exteros autem societatibus plurimis honoris causa adscriptum. In agro Suffoliciensi natum fuisse constat virum inagnem, qui scriptis suis fere centum abhinc annos in lucem missis agri culturam (velut alter Tremellius) 'eloquentem reddidit.' Viri tanti popularum, quem hodie laudamus, e loco suo natali spiritum eiusdem hausisse crediderim.

DR. JOHN AUGUSTUS VOELCKER.

"Clanditi sciem patris in scientia chemica illustris filius in eadem scientia insignis, qui inter Germanos Philosophiae Doctor multa cum laude nominatus, etiam de agri cultura inter Indos publice rettulit. Idem, per annos novem societati vestrae in re chemica consilio dando, patris successorem sese dignum praestitit. Quod omnibus gratum, nemini tamen mirum sit; etenim experti nostis Horatianum illud:

'fortes creantur fortibus et bonis;
est in iuvenis, est in equis patrum virtus.'

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- CARO, Madame E. L'idole. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
FIDRÉE, G. Chapu: sa Vie et son Œuvre. Paris: Plon. 13 fr.
GOSLER, V. RAYNEBURN, F. Fehr. Grundriss der Kunstgeschichte. Berlin: Duncker. 6 M.

SCHNEIDER, Le Commandant. Le Second Empire à Saint-Cloud. Paris: Victor-Havard. 3 fr. 50 c.
WETZ, E. La Plote de guerre et les arsenaux. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

BARLMANN, P. Deutschlands katholische Katechismen bis zum Ende d. 18. Jahrh. Münster: Regensberg. 1 M. 60 Pf.
FEHRMANN, A. Die Offenbarung d. Johannes. St. Petersburg: Eggers. 3 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

BAUMONT, H. Etudes sur le règne de Léopold, Duc de Lorraine et de Bar (1697—1729). Paris: Berger-Levrault. 7 fr. 50 c.
BOERNER, A. De rebus a Gracilis inde ab a. 410 usque ad a. 493 a. Chr. n. gestis quaestiones historicae. Göttingen: Dieterich. 2 M.
CROQUET, Arthur. Les Guerres de la Révolution. 10e Vol. Valenciennes: Paris: Cerf. 3 fr. 50 c.
COMBES DE LESTRADE, Le Vicomte. La Sicile sous la Monarchie de Savoie. Paris: Guillaumin. 3 fr. 50 c.
FORSCHUNGEN zur Brandenburgischen u. Preussischen Geschichte. 7. Bd. 1. Hälfte. Leipzig: Duncker. 6 M.
GIEUX, H. De homicidiis in areopago Atheniensis iudicio. Göttingen: Dieterich. 1 M.
HANSEERESSE. 3. Abth. Hanserecesse von 1477—1530. Bearb. v. D. Schäfer. 5. Bd. Leipzig: Duncker. 23 M.
LEMAIS, Th. Un District breton pendant les guerres de l'ouest et de la Chouannerie (1793 à 1800). Paris: Fischbacher. 5 fr.
MEYER, Adalbert. Documents de paléographie Hébraïque et Arabe. Leiden: Brill. 18 M.
REICHLING, Th. Alexandri de Villa-Dei doctrinalis codices manu scripti et libri typis impressi. Berlin: Hofmann. 5 M.
SIEGEL, die westfälischen, des Mittelalters. 4. Hft. 1. Abtlg. Münster: Regensberg. 20 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

DREWS, A. Kants Naturphilosophie als Grundlage seines Systems. Berlin: Mitscher. 10 M.
ENGLEA, A. Ueb. die Gliederung der Vegetation v. Usambara u. der angrenzenden Gebiete. Berlin: Reimer. 3 M. 50 Pf.
GROSSOUEVE, A. de. Recherches sur la craie supérieure. 2e Partie. La paléontologie. Paris: Baudry. 20 fr.
HEATWIG, A. Zeit u. Streitfragen der Biologie. 1. Hft. Jena: Fischer. 3 M.
MARTEL, E. A. Les Alpes: explorations souterraines. Paris: Delagrave. 20 fr.
NATHORST, A. G. Zur fossilen Flora der Polarländer. 1. Thl. 1. Lfg. Berlin: Friedländer. 16 M.
RESULTATE, wissenschaftliche, der v. N. M. Pizawalski nach Central-Asien unternommenen Reisen. Zoolog. Thl. 1. Bd. Säugethiere. Bearb. v. E. Büchner. 5. Lfg. Leipzig: Voss. 15 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

BEITRÄGE zur Kenntnis d. Russischen Reiches. 4 Folge. 1. Bd. Reisen v. Forschungen im Jakutskischen Gebiet Ostsiбириens. Von Baron G. Maydell. 1. Thl. Leipzig: Voss. 19 M.
CURTIUS, E. Gesammelte Abhandlungen. 2. Bd. Berlin: Besser. 12 M.
GALENI, C. protreptici quae supranant. Ed. G. Kaibel. Berlin: Weidmann. 2 M.
HANDSCHRIFTEN-VERZEICHNISSE, die der k. Bibliothek zu Berlin. 15. Bd. Verzeichnisse der arabischen Handschriften v. W. Ahlwardt. 6. Bd. Berlin: Asher. 28 M.
HOUTHAFF, M. Th. E. türkisch-arabisches Glossar. Nach der Leidener Handschrift hrg. u. erläutert. Leiden: Brill. 1 M. 50 Pf.
PERNICE, E. Griechische Gewichte. Gesammelt, beschrieben u. erläutert. Berlin: Weidmann. 6 M.
RADLOFF, W. Die alttürkischen Inschriften der Mongolei. 1. Lfg. Die Denkmäler v. Kosch-Zaidam. Leipzig: Voss. 2 M.
TORRES, A. Verzeichnisse Beiträge zur französischen Grammatik. 2. Reihe. Leipzig: Hitzel. 5 M. 60 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"ÆTHELRED-MUCIL, GAINORUM COMES."

London: June 2, 1891.

Historians may, I think, be excused for harbouring the notion that Æthelredus Gainorum comes, qui cognominabatur Mucil, derived his second name from mycel "great." The notion is not an outcome of modern ignorance, but is eight or nine centuries old. The second section of the first portion of the Northumbrian Annals, which has come down to us under the name of Simeon of Durham, states that Alfred married "filiam Æthelredi Gainorum comitis, qui cognominabatur ab Anglis Mucil, eo quod erat corpore magnus et prudentia grandævus." This section of the work is drawn largely from Asser, and was compiled apparently in the latter part of the tenth century. The Northumbrian History was used by the author of the St. Albans compilation that formed the groundwork of the Chronicles of Roger of Wendover and of Matthew of Paris; and by their means the statement that Mucil meant "great" obtained a wide currency. This was increased by Parker's note to Asser that Æthelred was called Mucel, "eo quod erat corpore magnus." If the modern historian sought for confirmation of the statement, he might find it supported by no less a name than that of Kemble, who adopts unreservedly Simeon's statement that Mucel means "big man" (Proceedings of the Archaeological Institute at Winchester, 1845, p. 100). It is, as Mr. Bradley states, impossible to connect the name with O.E. micel, since that word is not, as the spelling mycel suggests, derived from mukil. But it is noticeable that mucel was, apparently, the form of micel used by Simeon or the compilers whom he adopted. This appears from the 878 passage from Asser, which states that Mucelwudu (not Selwudu as in our text of Asser) is "Latine vero Magna Silva, Britannico more Coitnawr."

The burnt MS. of Asser was, according to the facsimile given by Wise, in a hand of the early eleventh century, so that it cannot be held that the u of Mucel arises from the Mid. Eng. use of u for O.E. y. Moreover, we have the evidence of charters that a name Mucel existed. It must be connected with the name Muca, which occurs as follows: A.D., 801, 803, Muca abbas, Cart. Sax., i., 418, 20; 435, 84; 436, 18; A.D. 822, 823 Muca dux, aldormen, Ib., i. 510, 7; 512, 10; Parker Chron., ann. 822 (Muca, Chronn. B and C); A.D. 950, Mucan treow, Cart. Sax., iii. 44, 23. If this name be Muca as given in Chronn. A and B, then Mucel, if from the same root, is even further divorced from micel. Muca and Mucel may be diminutives from the adj. "muc" "meek" (Goth. "muke" in muka-mōder).

I have notes of the following occurrences of the name Mucel:

I. A Mercian dux, A.D. 814, Cart. Sax., i. 481, 10; 489, 3; A.D. 815 Mucel, Ib., i. 492, 21; 816, 498, 24; 495, 29; 823, 512, 3; 828 (Mucael) 518, 28; 824, 521, 4; 825, 532, 6, 537, 2; 836 (Mucel), 581, 31; 583, 3; circ. 840, Ib., ii. 2, 19; 3, 26; 840, ii. 5, 19; 841, 7, 21; 12, 3; 843 or 844, 20, 29; 845, 33, 6, 12; circ. 848, 35, 24, 27; 37, 7; 848, 39, 25, 32 (princeps): 852, 58, 24; 60, 15 (p[raefectus]), Kemble, more probably (p[ri]nceps): 855, 89, 11; 90, 22; 91, 31; 857, 95, 30; 864, 120, 35; 866, 126, 35; 868, 140, 9.

II. A second Mucel dux, who witnesses Mercian charters together with the aforesaid Mucel, as follows: A.D. 836, i. 582, 39; A.D. 845, Ib., ii. 33, 6, 12; circ. 848, ii. 35, 24, 27; 848, ii. 39, 25, 32. Some of the signatures given under No. I. must belong to No. II. As only one Mucel dux signs after 848, it is probable that No. I. died about that period.

III. A third Mucel (a minister?) witnesses a Mercian charter, circ. 848, Ib., ii. 35, 28. He is, no doubt, the Mucel who witnesses, in addition to Mucel dux, in 855, ii. 89, 17; 866, 126, 35.

No. I. (or II.?) is described as Mucel Esning and Mucel aldormenn (dat. sg.) in 836, i. 581, 31, 39. The Esne is probably the dux, princeps, comes who witnesses Mercian charters from 761 to 809.

IV. A minister who witnesses West-Saxon charters as follows: A.D. 858, Ib., ii. 101, 15; 860-866, 128, 22; 862, 114, 39; 863, 116, 31; 867, 130, 2; 868, 136, 8. It is possible that he is the same person as No. III.

V. A dux (possibly No. II.) who witnesses West-Saxon charters, and who signs separately from No. IV., in A.D. 868, ii. 136, 2. This dux Mucel also witnesses two charters of King Æthelred of Wessex, which have been treated by Kemble and Birch as charters of Kings Eadgar and Eadred. In the earliest instance (C.S. iii. 488, 31; Cod. Dipl., vi. 81), a later scribe has boldly changed Æðelred's name into Eadgar; but he has retained the correct date 867, for which the editors suggest 967. But a moment's thought will show that this date is impossible, as the charter is witnessed by Archbishop Odo, who died in 959. What has really happened to this charter is that the scribe has changed the names of the king and of the archbishop (Ceolnoth), and has erroneously copied the name of Bishop Heahmund as Eadmund.* The other charter is the one printed in Birch, iii. 24, and in Kemble, v. 322. In this case the Abingdon Chartulary gives the king's name as Æðred and Æðered. The latter represents the ninth century West-Saxon form of the king's name, Æðered = Æðelred, which occurs in the Parker MS. of the chronicle. It is impossible that Æðered could be written for Eadred. Kemble has "edited" this charter in his usual reckless manner, so that the Æðred and Æðered of the MS. appear as Eadred without a note of the true reading. The charter is dated 948, and the date has, according to Birch, been "partly altered by erasure." The date should, no doubt, be 868.† A brief comparison of the names of the witnesses to these two charters, with those of Æðelred's charters and the West-Saxon charters about his time, will show that both are really charters of that monarch. They do not at all agree with the formulae of the time of Eadgar and Eadred. The editors' suspicions should surely have been awakened by the style "Æðred occidentalium Saxorum rex" of the second charter, since Eadred naturally called himself "rex Anglorum," and used in addition the pompous titles that Eadmund introduced. There are several other similar instances that I have noted of charters being wrongly ascribed to O.E. kings by post-Conquest copyists, and they have all escaped the notice of Kemble and Birch.

* The MS. has the easily explained misreading Mucelpurh.

Vf. Mucel, bishop of Hereford, according to Florence of Worcester's list. He occupied that see between 857 and 866 (Stubbs). No signatures of his are known.

Thus, at most only six bearers of this name Mucel are recorded; and there may be really only three, since No. VI. is a rather shadowy personage, and Nos. IV. and V. may be Nos. II. and III. No. II., who sigas until 868 (see No. I.), might be the father-in-law of Alfred, as No. I., signing as early as 814, is hardly likely to have been the father of Alfred's bride of 868. There is, I think, a reasonable probability that No. II. was Alfred's father-in-law. He was a Mercian noble, as Asser states Æðelred-Mucil was. That he signs as Mucel, and not as Æðelred, is not an insuperable objection to the identification, as there are several instances where the full name was practically superseded by the short name. For example, two of King Offa's nobles were known as Brorda, and the death of one of them is recorded in the Northumbrian Annals (Simeon), A.D. 799, as follows: "Eodem anno Brorda Merciorum princeps, qui et Hildegils vocatur, defunctus est." It is quite clear that Hildegils-Brorda subscribes as Brorda, not as Hildegils. It is not a very violent assumption that Æðelred-

Mucil similarly witnessed as Mucel. Moreover, he was contemporary with Alfred's brother Æðelred, who signs prior to his accession in 866 as Æðelred princeps, dux, or filius regis. Where both Æðelred and Mucel attest, we may conclude that Æðelred is the West-Saxon prince. An Eaðered (for Æðered) witnesses a Mercian charter of 862 (C.S. ii. 110, 33). As Mucil does not figure amongst the witnesses to this charter, it is possible that this is Æðelred-Mucil. But this cannot be affirmed with safety, as there are other Æðelreds in the field. There is an Æðelred or Eðered dux who witnesses West-Saxon charters of this date, in addition to Æðelred, the King's son (C.S. ii. 108, 114, 116). There is a grant to him of lands in Kent at p. 115. He may possibly be the Mercian dux, and may be Æðelred-Mucil, since, as we have seen, a Mucil dux witnesses Wessex charters about this time. It is, in any case, a singular coincidence that there should be at this period a Mercian dux Æðelred and a dux Mucil and West-Saxon duxes of the same name. It would clear the ground if we could conclude that all four really represent Æðelred-Mucil. The close connexion of Mercia and Wessex made it possible for a Mercian dux to sign West-Saxon charters. We certainly meet with Prince Alfred (the Great) and his brother among the witnesses to the charters of their brother-in-law, Burhred of Mercia. Æðelred-Mucil was presumably alive in 868, when Alfred married his daughter. In 872-874 we meet with an Æðelred, Merciorum dux (C.S. ii. 155, 9; 156, 6), who may possibly be Æðelred-Mucil. But I am inclined to think that this is the Æðelred, ealdorman of Mercia, who married Alfred's heroic daughter Æðelflæd, and died in 912. The Æðelred, dux et patricius gentis Merciorum of 880 (C.S. ii. 166) must, I think, be Alfred's son-in-law, as we know that he was old enough to receive London from the latter in 886. If this Æðelred was a grown man in 880, he must have been somewhat older than his wife Æðelflæd,* whose parents were married in 868. He may therefore be the Æðelred dux of 872-4. The signatures of the duxes Mucel cease in 868, the year of the great Danish invasion of Mercia. It is possible that Mucel or Æðelred-Mucil met his death in fighting against the Danes. Asser, it may be noted, records Alfred's marriage in 868 before mentioning the Danish invasion of Mercia, which, no doubt, occurred in the spring. If we regard the Æðelred, Merciorum dux, of 872-4 as Alfred's son-in-law, as I think we must, we find that the Æðelred-signatures that have any possible connexion with Æðelred-Mucil cease in 868, in the same year as the Mucel-signatures. This again is a remarkable coincidence. Æðelred-Mucil, although he married a member of the Mercian royal house, was not seemingly of royal descent. He was a Mercian ealdorman, not ealdorman of Mercia. Alfred's son-in-law had the latter rank, and must, therefore, have been of royal descent. Indeed, until the time of Eadric Streona and Godwine all the great ealdormen seem to have been members of the royal families. This difference in rank explains the position of Mucel's subscriptions to the charters. He does not sign, as a royal dux would have done, at the head of the duxes. Thus, the position of Mucel's signatures is quite compatible with the view that he was Æðelred-Mucil.

It is to be hoped that we may hear no more of the derivation of Gainsborough from the * Æðelflæd witnesses the above charter of 880 as Æðelred's wife. At that date she would only be eleven or twelve years old. There is probably an error in the date of the charter, which exists only in eleventh-century copies. The indiction given in it belongs to 887.

Gaini.* Like many other accepted etymologies—Scarborough (Skarða-borg) from scar "rock," Chippenham (Cippan-ham) from chipping "market," for example—it will not bear a moment's examination. Gainsborough appears in the Chronicle in 1013 as Genes-burh, Gaignes-burh, Gegnes-burh. Surely if this was an English name, it should not have come down to us without initial guttural stop. The fact that it has done so is a strong presumption that the first part of the name is of Danish origin. It is not improbable that the O.N. adj. gegn may have been used as a nick-name, or, as Norse was so given to developing personal names from nick-names, even as a real name. So little has been done in registering the innumerable O.N. personal names that it is possible that Gegn may occur. There are slight indications of an O.E. gen, gena, which may be personal names, e.g., Genenofre, near Bredicot, co. Worcester (C.D. iii. 261, 32; 263, 7); Genes-born Gegnes-thorn, at Bleadon, Somerset (C.S. iii. 141, 34; 648, 10); Genetune, Berks (Domesday, i. 58 b, col. 2); Geneshale, co. Stafford (ib., i. 247 b, col. 2); Genstedegate Geinstedegate,† near Aldingbourn, co. Sussex (C.S. i. 99, 15; 113, 7; iii. 192, 16). The first of these names is derived from Heming's Worcester Chartulary; and it is not very far from Bromsgrove, where, as Mr. Bradley points out, there is a place called Gaines. Bromsgrove was, however, the property of Worcester Monastery before Æðelred-Mucil's time (C.S. i. 428, 33; 438, 26). The territory of the Gaini has, like so many other O.E. territorial names, left no memory behind in local names.

The Gāingas surmised by Mr. Bradley may be recorded in Ginge in Berks (Gaing, C.S. i. 490, 27; Gaing, iii. 67, 26; Gaing Gæinge, iii. 173, 14; 174, 5; Gæging, Gæing, Gaing, iii. 257, 9, 28, 32; Gæinge, i. 506, 2). This is a really stream-name (ib., i. 224, 26; iii. 257, 32), but a provincia might derive its name from a stream, as seems to have happened in the case of Wanting Hundred (from the Wanting stream) and in the provincia Usmerorum.‡ Ginge, however, cannot be the pagus of the Gaini, as it is in Wessex, not in Mercia.

W. H. STEVENSON.

WHAT IS SLANG?

London: June 27, 1894.

Mr. R. B. Johnson makes a number of discoveries about my version of "Brand" which have escaped the rest of my critics. Some of his remarks I confess to finding obscure; but one is unexceptionally definite. Mr. Johnson finds in my translation a "reiteration of such slang terms as 'slack' and 'budge.'" I cannot deny I have used "budge" twice within six thousand lines, and "slack" nearly, though * Gainsborough is in Lindsey, which was not, properly speaking, in Mercia, where the district of the Gaini was. In the O.E. list of territorial names, Lindsey, although linked with Mercia, is mentioned separately. It was evidently not regarded as part of Mercia at Worcester, for Florence (an. 910) records that the bones of St. Oswald were brought from Bardney into Mercia—meaning to Gloucester (Malm., G. R., i. 136; G. P., p. 293).

† The Kentish Ganburh (C.S. i. 446, 5, 17) probably = Eanburh, as Gean-berht = Ean-berht. See Sievers, § 212, an. 2. The latter name is spelt Eanberht in an original charter of 774 (C.S. i. 300, 20).

‡ Or, is this a misreading of Benstede; capital B and G in early fourteenth century hands being very much alike?

§ The province Gifla (Yeovil) clearly derived its name from the river-name. The province Hicca is probably the district about Hitchen, co. Herts, on the river Hic (O.E. **Hiccen*?). The estate is called Hicche (O.D. iv. 156, 19). Hicca can scarcely be the province of the Hwicci, as Birch regards it.

* By restoring this charter to its proper date of 867, we get a slightly earlier signature of Bishop Ealhferð of Winchester. The earliest subscription registered by Bishop Stubbs (who calls the bishop erroneously Alfred) is 868.

† It is easy to see what has happened. The twelfth-century copyist, being familiar with silent e, regarded the Æðered of the original charter as the equivalent of Æðred, which he next identified with Eadred (Ead- being frequently written Æd- at that time). When the charter was thus ascribed to Edgar in the Chartulary, it was discovered that Edgar was not reigning in 868. Hence the alteration of the date.

not quite, whenever the characteristic slap occurs in the original. And these words, it seems, are slang in Mr. R. B. Johnson's dictionary. They are not so, however, in the better known work by an author of the same name. They were good English to Dr. Johnson. They appear as such in most of the great English classics. "I will not budge for no man's pleasure."—Shakspeare. "That slack devotion should his thunder 'scape."—Waller. "He'd as lief eat that glass as budge after them himself."—Goldsmith. "The Duke shall know how slack thou art."—Shakspeare. And so on through Drayton, Hooker, More, and a whole column of citations. From hints—alas, all too reserved!—I fancy Mr. Johnson's views on the diction of the original might be as stimulating to Norwegian scholars as the above must be to students of English.

F. EDMUND GARRETT.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, July 2, 5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.
TUESDAY, July 3, 8 p.m. Anglo-Russian: "Pushkin," by Mr. F. P. Marchant.
9 p.m. Royal Academy: Conversazione.
WEDNESDAY, July 4, 4 p.m. Archaeological Institute: "The Tomb of St. Hugh at Lincoln," by Mr. F. J. Wills; "The Devastation of Nubia," by Mr. Somers Clarke; and "Roman Antiquities in Carin'bia," by Prof. B. Lewis.
8 p.m. Botanic: Evening Fête.

SCIENCE.

TWO BOOKS ON AFRICAN SPORT.

Travel and Adventure in the Congo Free State, and its Big Game Shooting. By Bula N'zau. (Chapman & Hall.)

Five Months' Sport in Somali Land. By Lord Wolverton. (Chapman & Hall.)

LACK of opportunity for martial exploits has of late diverted the energies of English youth to mountain-climbing and big game shooting. Because there are few peaks now left unconquered, the attractions of big game shooting are in the ascendant. Following closely upon the publication of the Badminton Library volumes on this subject, the books above-named are favourable examples of their kind. "Bula N'zau" (which means "elephant smasher") sought adventures on the Congo, partly from necessity, as he was engaged in the administration of that State, partly in order to supply his men, and the natives near him, with food. Lord Wolverton, travelling for pleasure on the opposite coast of Africa, encountered its larger game rather for amusement, and in order to obtain specimens. Both books abound in narrow escapes and perils from wild beasts. Both show how the country is being opened up, and illustrate the districts treated of by excellent maps. With rifles of the power and precision which are now used, and the experience which shows where a bullet ought to hit a wild animal, danger to the sportsman, and cruelty to the creature hunted, are much lessened. Thus, "Bula N'zau" on one occasion, advancing behind trees to within a dozen yards or so of a herd of wild elephants, killed three through the forehead in as many shots; and on another occasion five, firing only seven times. Thus he well merited his native nickname. It seems to tap the fount of native humour, for Stanley was called by the dwellers on the Congo "Rock Smasher," inasmuch as on one occasion he had blown up some rocks to clear the way for his steamers. His people, it seems, did not secure the affections of the natives.

"Bula N'zau" mainly followed buffaloes and elephants, partly because they were the largest animals of the Congo fauna, and partly because they furnished most food for the large army of servants and camp followers which hangs around the tents of an English sportsman. He went through many perils in the chase of these; his nearest escape perhaps was when he just avoided the horns of a charging buffalo, being struck on the hip as he reached the friendly shelter of a tree. He found a fair amount of game in the districts round the Congo, the difficulty of obtaining carriers forming the chief drawback to his sport. Buffaloes often charge a man without provocation, and were considered by the author to be ten times more dangerous than elephants. These animals furnished him, of course, with a valuable commodity in their ivory; the largest tusks which he obtained weighed one hundred and twenty-seven pounds. Another good pair weighed respectively forty-five and forty-nine and a-half pounds. The other animals which he pursued were chiefly tigers (leopards), crocodiles, and antelopes; but he soon found that all these were retreating further up the country. This is invariably the case as game is pursued in Africa. It becomes scarcer year by year, as may be seen specially in Bechuanaland and Southern Africa generally. At times the author shot pythons, and notes that one was an inch and a-half short of eighteen feet in length. To a naturalist the most curious adventure which befell the author was his shooting two gorillas. He agrees with Hanno (who is the first in the "Periplus" to mention these creatures), that they are very hairy, and attack those who approach them with teeth and hands. He sent a young gorilla home to Liverpool, but thought that the risks of cold and dysentery were much against its ever reaching England. The hippopotamus was, he found, easily shot. It occurs in great numbers on the tributaries of the Congo. Besides sport, there is a strong mercantile flavour about the book. The present to a chief of a case of gin, and the expedition sent against an independent chief who stopped and robbed caravans, during which he was killed, his village burnt, and the plantations destroyed, suggest that civilised rule is not always fraught with unmitigated blessings to the natives.

Lord Wolverton with Col. Paget wandered for five months from Berbera through Somaliland to the river Shebeyli in a more heroic spirit, shooting lions when they attacked the natives' flocks and killed the guardians, dispensing even-handed justice to miscreants who robbed and murdered inoffensive natives, and saving the lives of an African Hagar and her son, whom they found in the desert. The chivalric tone of the whole narrative causes the reader to catch the writer's enthusiasm. The staple of the game shot by the friends was lions, and the habits of these animals are graphically portrayed. Once the sportsmen saw two lions and three lionesses dash into the midst of a flock of sheep, kill right and left till the ground was strewn with carcasses, and then strike down the unfortunate shepherdess. In three days Lord Wolverton and his friend tracked out and shot all these marauders. During their expedition they killed sixteen lions. The natives were usually overawed by the force they took with them, but once were on the brink of an attack, when things might have been serious for the sportsmen. The travellers carefully surveyed and mapped out the land to the river Shebeyli. From here to the river Tana, some 420 miles on the Uganda route, the country yet requires surveying.

Lord Wolverton's book, independently of its interest to lovers of natural history, gives a good idea of the barrenness and monotony of Somaliland. He procured the first specimens of Zebra Grevii which have arrived in England, secured many antelopes, and learnt much of the habits of lions. The illustrations in both these books are good, and Lord Wolverton's map is indispensable to all who would follow his footsteps in North East Africa. At times his sentences are amusingly involved, as—"lions are not the only destroyers of the flocks and herds here, as the country around is infested by panthers, but they seem to have all the cunning of the cat tribe, although they are very nasty customers to tackle, especially when wounded." These "nasty customers" are probably panthers. The development of carnivorous goats would be marvellous even in Africa's wonderland, and yet the author says: "the equatorial district through which we are now travelling must, we think, entirely depend, first, on its goats, which make very good skins; secondly, on its herds, which will in the future supply them with food."

Both these books are useful contributions to the knowledge of the enormous continent whereof the Congo Free State and Somaliland form so small a portion.

M. G. WATKINS.

TWO BOOKS ON ANCIENT PHILOSOPHY.

Geschichte der alten Philosophie. Von Dr. W. Windelband. (München: Beck; London: Williams & Norgate.) This history of ancient philosophy, by Prof. Windelband (his valuable contribution to vol. v. of Iwan von Müller's Handbuch der Klassischen Altertums-Wissenschaft) expands and justifies a good many of the judgments which he passed in a more summary way in his general Geschichte der Philosophie, Freiburg i. B., 1892 (of which, by-the-by, a good English, or rather American, translation has just appeared). His method or design is not like that of Mr. Burnet's study of the earliest Greek philosophers, where we find their views turned and re-turned in the closest juxtaposition with the all-too-fragmentary texts. Nor is it quite like Ferrier's plan of taking from each philosopher a leading thought, holding up that thought to the modern reader, and showing in the lucidest of surveys how it shaped itself and what it meant. Nearer to Ferrier than to Burnet, however, Prof. Windelband thinks most of tracing the history of philosophical problems and conceptions; and, as he says in another place, it has been his chief purpose to understand this as a connected and interrelated whole. But, if he dwells most on internal factors, he is not neglectful of the external features of the history of philosophy. The collegiate character of much of ancient research is clearly set forth by him, and he notices step by step how the political history of Hellas acted upon her speculative thought. On Democritus he sets, as all recent inquirers have done, very great store, even to the extent of grouping him with Plato and Aristotle. We should ourselves be disposed to think of Democritus as less exclusively a systematist, the holder of a purely theoretical conception of science, than Prof. Windelband does. We seem to infer from his ἀραγία interest in man as an acting and feeling creature. But to say this is, after all, only to give further reason for placing him with Aristotle. It is to be regretted that the Professor should seem to lend the weight of his authority to an often repeated error, that of attaching the σαρφρασίη of Plato exclusively to the ἐπιθυμητικὸν μέρος of the soul (p. 126, compare p. 127 of the English History of Philosophy). His review of ancient thought is very complete, reaching down to its final transformation in "die Patristik," which he has explained as being "the philosophy of Christianity," "a philosophical secularisation of the Gospel," an attempt to adapt "religious faith to the conceptional forms of Greek science." The book ends with a useful section, by Dr. S. Günther, on the history of mathematics and natural science in antiquity.

Platonstudien. Von F. Horn. (Wien: Tempsky; London: Williams & Norgate.) Dr. Horn is not content with the statistical method applied of late years to the investigation of the genuineness and the proper order of the Platonic dialogues. Comparative tables of the occurrence of certain words and expressions do not lead to any conclusive or even consistent results, and Dr. Horn would rather find his way to questions of order and genuineness through a close study of the contents of the dialogues. The development of Plato's thought must have been regular and legitimate; and therefore, if we can make sure of what the thoughts were, we shall necessarily see their order. So much for development. As for discrepancy, dialogues which are in irreconcilable contradiction with those which we have the best reason for knowing to be surely Plato's, must be dismissed as ungenueine. Dissatisfied with existing analyses or summaries, Dr. Horn has written out his own, and prefixes them to his deeper study of the meaning of Plato's words. The Laches, Protagoras, Gorgias; Lysis, Charmides, Euthydemus; Phaedros, Symposion, Phaedon, are treated in this way, and shown to fall into the three groups indicated. Dr. Horn's theory of the relations of the Menon and Philebos, here relegated to an appendix, is not quite clear to us. The Republic is reserved for a separate treatise.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

A PRELIMINARY list has been issued of those who have promised their support to the International Congress of Orientalists, to be held at Geneva in September, under the presidency of M. Edouard Naville. It is interesting to note that both France and Germany will be well represented; and there is also an unusually large number of names from the United States. As regard England, the universities of Cambridge, London, and Oxford, the Royal Irish Academy, the Asiatic and Geographical Societies, the Society of Biblical Archaeology, and the Palestine Exploration Fund have already announced their intention to send delegates; as also have the universities of Calcutta and Madras, and the Asiatic Society of Bengal. Messrs. Luzac & Co., of Great Russell-street, have been appointed agents for the issue of tickets for this country as well as for America.

MESSRS. WILLIAMS & NORGATE have issued the prospectus of an Assyrian Glossary, by Dr. W. Muss-Arnolt, a pupil (we believe) of de Lagarde, who has lived for some time in the United States. His plan is to provide a work for beginners which shall be both cheaper and more handy than the great lexicons of Strassmaier and Delitzsch. He has, therefore, confined himself for the most part to the words found in the ordinary historical texts. The mode of arrangement will be in alphabetical order, with the derivatives collected under their respective stems. Cognate forms in other Semitic languages will be cited; and a special feature will be a complete index to Delitzsch's Assyrian Grammar. Cuneiform characters will be used as little as possible, the transliteration of consonants into Hebrew being done according to the system of Haupt and Delitzsch. The work will consist of about 560 pages, super-royal octavo; and the mode of publication will be in eight quarterly parts, of which it is hoped that the first will be ready within two months. The printing has been entrusted to the well-known firm of W. Drugulin, of Leipzig.

THE annual meeting of the Hausa Association will be held on Tuesday next, in the council-room of the London Chamber of Commerce. Among those who have promised to be present are Mr. H. M. Stanley, Mr. H. H. Johnston, Sir George Taubman Goldie, and the Hausa student who will shortly start for the Central Soudan, where the Hausa language is spoken over a very large area.

THE following awards have recently been made by the Académie des Inscriptions: the Prix Volney to M. E. Masqueray, for his Dictionnaire Français-Touareg; 1000 francs to M. Hartwig Derembourg, for his work entitled "Autobiographie d'Ovsama"; 500 francs to M. Casanova, for his series of Memoirs on the history and archaeology of Egypt; 500 francs to M. Victor Henry, for his translation of the seventh and thirteenth books of the Atlarva Veda; and 500 francs to M. Julien Vinson, for his Attempt at a Bibliography of the Basque Language.

THE last Rough List issued by Mr. Bernard Quaritch relates to Oriental literature. It begins with a portion of the library of the late Sir Alexander Cunningham, including complete sets of Reports of the Archaeological Survey, of the Journals of the Royal Asiatic, and of the Bengal and Bombay branches, of the Indian Antiquary, of the Journal of Indian Art and Industry, and of Stray Feathers. Then follow Egyptology, Cuneiform Inscriptions, Hebrew and Aramaic (including the first printed edition of the Pentateuch, and a Passover Liturgy printed at Mantua in 1568), Arabic (to the extent of just four hundred volumes), some very fine illuminated Ethiopic MSS., Persian (including many handsome chronicles and poems), Armenian, and Turkish. The total number of lots is more than 1300.

WE have received Part II. of Dr. Hoernle's edition of the Bower MS., which is published by the Government of India as a sort of supplement to the Archaeological Survey. This magnificent work consists of—(1) a facsimile of the original leaves (or, rather, strips of birch-bark), reproduced at Calcutta by the process of photo-etching; (2) a transcript in Nagari characters; (3) a Romanised transliteration, with a few textual criticisms; and (4) an English translation, with abundant illustrative notes. The present instalment, containing thirteen leaves of the MS. written on both sides, consists entirely of a medical treatise, entitled "Nāvanitaka," composed of approved extracts from the writings of ancient authorities. The editor has taken infinite pains to identify the drugs mentioned, and to compare the prescriptions with those given in standard Hindu medical treatises. There are, altogether, fifteen chapters, dealing with such topics as the compounding of powders, oils, enemas, gruels, aphrodisiacs, collyriums, hair-washes, and the treatment of women and children. Their general character may be inferred from the following "excellent formula for adenia":

"Take a dead black snake, and place it in a new earthen vessel, and, having covered its mouth with a plaster of clay, roast it, thus enclosed, over a very strong fire. When done, mix it up with oil, and place it as a plaster over the patient's enlarged glands. An application of this remedy for no more than seven days will effect a cure of the adenia."

THE last number of the Journal of the Anthropological Society of Bombay (London: Kegan Paul & Co.) contains a paper of considerable length on the Aghoris or Aghorapanthis, based upon the MS. collections of the late E. T. Leith, who is known to have devoted himself to the investigation of this disgusting sect of religious mendicants. It is curious that their headquarters should be at such sacred places of pilgrimage as Benares, Ginnar, and Mount Abu. Another article is on some rude stone implements, found on the shore of Back Bay, in Bombay Island.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ASIATIC.—(Tuesday, June 12.)

E. L. BRANDRETH, Esq., treasurer, in the chair.—Mr. Beveridge read a paper on "The Khalāsāt at Tawārīkh, or Essence of History of Sujān Rāi of Patiala." He remarked that the book was written 200 years ago, and was interesting as being perhaps the earliest and the best historical work by a Hindu. Sir Henry Elliott had accused the author of plagiarism, but probably the so-called Makhtasur at Tawārīkh was an early draft of the Khalāsāt, or a plagiarism from it. If the Khalāsāt was a plagiarism, it was a fortunate one, as the alleged original has entirely disappeared. Prof. Dowson has described the author as writing like a bigoted and intolerant Muhammadan, but in fact there was not a trace of bigotry or intolerance in the work. On the contrary, the writer was remarkable for the liberality of his religious sentiments, and has been praised by M. Garcin de Tassy for his impartiality. He was certainly a Hindu, but his mind had been enlarged by association with Muhammadans. Probably he was a Sikh at heart, for he wrote very highly of Nanak and his religion. The paper noticed the valuable geographical information in the work and the writer's art in telling a story, and suggested that he might be described as the Indian Herodotus. The first part of the book had been rendered into Urdu by Sher Ali Afse, but with additions and omissions that were not always improvements. Sher Ali's work had been translated into French by the Abbé Bertrand, and into English by Captain Court; but it was desirable that the original should be published in its entirety. This had been recommended by Colonel Lees, who had also suggested that part of it should be translated into English.

HELLENIC.—(Annual Meeting, Monday, June 18.)

PROF. JERRA, who presided, in moving the adoption of the council's report, gave a short account of the more important discoveries that have been made in Greek archaeology during the past year. The French archaeologists at Delphi have found, among other things, the treasure house of the Athenians (which was built soon after the battle of Marathon), and marble slabs containing the now famous hymn to the Delphian Apollo. Of this there are fourteen fragments in all, the principal one containing some eighteen lines. The musical notes are denoted by letters, which are sometimes tilted or turned upside down in order to supply more symbols. The clue to the interpretation of these is found in a Greek writer named Alypius, who distinguishes two systems of notation, one for voices and the other for instruments—presumably the lyre and flute. There are specimens of both systems among the Delphian fragments. The date of the hymn is thought to be the third century B.C., and it is the most authentic and extended piece of Greek music as yet known. The British School at Athens have been investigating the course of the aqueduct in connexion with the spring Callirrhoe. In Cyprus the Trustees of the British Museum have undertaken the excavation of the necropolis of Amathus, while German explorers have been working in the plain of Troy. Prof. Armitage Robinson has been searching for Greek MSS. in Constantinople. In the library of St. Sofia he found none, but in another library he discovered about forty, which, however, do not seem to be very valuable.—Mr. Ernest Gardner, in seconding the report, gave some particulars about the damage caused to antiquities in Greece by the recent earthquakes. The Parthenon seems to have suffered considerably.

METEOROLOGICAL.—(Wednesday, June 20.)

R. INWARDS, Esq., in the chair.—Mr. R. H. Scott read a paper on "Fogs reported with Strong Winds during the Fifteen Years 1876-90 in the British Isles." Out of a total of 135 fogs, 108 were associated with cyclonic, and 27 with anticyclonic conditions. The majority of the fogs occurred with south westerly winds and with temperatures very close to the maximum for the day.—Mr. R. H. Curtis read a paper on "Some Characteristic Features of Gales and Strong Winds." After calling attention to the unsatisfactory state of anemometry, and after describing the "bridled" anemometer at Holyhead, Mr. Curtis stated that the greatest force of an individual gust which he had met with was registered in December, 1891, and amounted to a rate of 111 miles per hour, which with the old factor would be equivalent to a rate of about 160 miles. Gusts at a rate from 90 to 100 miles per hour have many times been recorded; but the usual limit for gusts may be taken to equal about 80 miles per hour, which on the old scale would be equivalent to about 120 miles. Gales and strong winds differ in character very much; and as the result of a prolonged study of their general features as recorded by the "bridled" anemometer, the author has been able to group them into three general classes. He then described those gales which are essentially squally in character, in which the gusts constitute the main feature of the gale. In an average gale the ordinary gusts follow each other at intervals of about ten to twenty seconds, while the extreme gusts occur at the rate of about one per minute. Another class of gales are those in which the velocity of the wind is tolerably steady. In the third class are gales which appear to be made up of two series of rapidly succeeding squalls—the one series at a comparatively low rate of velocity, the other at a much higher one, the wind force shifting rapidly and very frequently from one series to the other. Mr. Curtis also stated that, on looking carefully over the anemometer records, he had not unfrequently found very distinctly marked a prolonged pulsation in the wind force which recurs again and again with more or less regularity of perhaps twenty minutes or half-an-hour in some cases, and in others at longer intervals of about an hour more or less.

HISTORICAL.—(Thursday, June 21.)

H. E. MALDEN, Esq., in the chair.—Messrs. J. R. Temple and W. G. Johnson were elected fellows. A paper was read by M. Waldemar Ekedahl on "The Causes of the Renewal of the War between England and France in 1803." Sir James Ramsay, Mr. Poultny Bigelow, and Mr. Duppa Lloyd took part in the discussion.—Dr. F. Liebermann, of Berlin, a corresponding fellow of the society, communicated a text of the Coronation Charter of Henry I. This text, which is derived from the collation of twenty-eight important MSS., will be printed, with an English introduction, in the next volume of the Society's Transactions.

FINE ART.

Chapters on Greek Dress. By Maria Millington Evans. Illustrated. (Macmillans.)

THIS tasteful little volume of some eighty pages gives a clear and comprehensive view of a subject by no means easy. Much help is afforded by the numerous and well-chosen illustrations which supplement the text. It is the fate of books on antiquities to repeat illustrations that are themselves ancient, and in the present case many of the cuts are old acquaintances. They all, however, fulfil a purpose; and some at any rate are new.

Starting with Homeric garments, Lady Evans proceeds to discuss the forms of dress prevalent in historic times. By help of a diagram, reminding one of Euclid, a good account is given of the so-called "Dorian" chiton and its method of adjustment, an operation demanding no small amount of care and dexterity in pinning. From this the "Ionian" chiton is broadly distinguished as being a made-up garment and requiring no pins.

In the case of the female figures discovered on the acropolis of Athens, the variety of patterns traced on each has been supposed to imply a corresponding number of separate garments. These differences of surface, however, says Lady Evans, "do not represent a difference of material, and consequently a separate garment, but are attempts to show the various ways in which the same garment may appear owing to the folds which it assumes and the shape of the body it covers: falling in close fine folds over the chest and shoulders, and in larger freer style over the legs."

The authoress finally deals with the outer garments of men and women, and especially the head-dress of females as illustrated by the coins of Syracuse.

Greek dress may at first sight appear a simple matter. There was very little of it; and the chief difficulty must have been to keep up that little long. "Half naked and quite Greek" seems true enough if we judge by works of art. But we must allow for the doctrine of "heroic nudity," and not suppose that the gilded youth of Athens were quite so independent of their tailors as they appear on the frieze of the Parthenon.

It is undoubtedly rash to question a lady's views on feminine apparel, yet I find it difficult to accept the statement that "the veils in Homer . . . may probably have been linen, inasmuch as wool would have been too heavy." Surely the woollen "clouds" of Germany are lighter than any linen.

Of obvious errors there are very few. On p. 14 ἐνδύματα is wrongly accented; "armour" on p. 44 should be arms; "apotygma" for apotygya occurs on no fewer than seven pages.

TALFOURD ELY.

THE ASHMOLEAN MUSEUM.

WE quote the following from the annual Report of the Visitors of the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford:—

"The year 1893 has been specially productive of acquisitions to the Egyptian and Early Greek sections of the museum. Thanks to the liberality of Prof. Flinders Petrie and his colleague Mr. H. Marlyn Kennard, the more important objects derived from the excavation of Khuenaten's palace at Tel-el-Amarna have been deposited in the Ashmolean Museum. From their bulk it has been impossible to exhibit more than a few specimens in the old building; but when the new Ashmolean building is completed, it is hoped that they will be adequately displayed at the end of the First Room. This will make Oxford a centre of interest for what, from the European standpoint, owing to its intimate connexion with Mykenæan culture, is a most important epoch of Egyptian art. Interesting Egyptian stelae from the North Temple at Wady Halfa have also been presented by Capt. H. G. Lyons, R.E.

"The unique collection of Hittite seals in the Ashmolean Museum has been enriched by two remarkable acquisitions. One is the silver boss of a seal, the other a haematite cylinder representing the dedication of a child to Istar—a fitting pendant to the bilingual cylinder of Indilimma. It is a masterpiece of the engraver's art, and is interesting not only from the subject, but from the typical character of the costumes and accessory symbols. From its parallelism with the Indilimma cylinder, it can be dated about 2000 B.C.

"During a visit to Greece in the spring, the Keeper was able to secure a valuable series of objects illustrative of the Mykenæan and Primitive periods. Amongst these are the contents of some early tombs from Amorgos, in which early bronze implements are associated with ornaments of silver, steatite, and other materials, and with an interesting series of primitive images of marble and ivory, which seem to be the prototypes of later Greek forms. These finds probably date from the third millennium B.C. He was also able to procure the contents of a Mykenæan Tholos on Hymettos, and a series of early terra-cotta figures from Boeotia, illustrating the transition from Mykenæan to archaic Greek forms, and a bronze tripod-plate from Olympia, which must rank among the finest specimens of the geometrical style of metal work to be seen outside Greece. The series of Early Greek fibulæ has been also largely increased; and some welcome accessions to this part of the collection, and the acquisition of numerous stone implements, chiefly from the Greek islands, have been due to the kind co-operation of Mr. John Myres, the Craven fellow, who has also presented some Mykenæan gems from Crete and a primitive marble figure from Amorgos.

"Important additions have been also made to the collection of Greek vases, among the most noteworthy being that on which the potter Oikophilos commemorates his handicraft in a rude hexameter, the kylix with the name and effigy of Kleinias, the father of Alkibiades, and another with the signature of the artist Hermogenes, and a white lekythos with a mourning scene of great pathos from the Kerameikos at Athens.

"The event of the year, however, in this department has been the publication of an illustrated Vase Catalogue by Prof. Gardner, with fine drawings of the more important pieces by Mr. Anderson. The Keeper has also co-operated in the work, and has supplied a special section on the vases procured by him at Gela (Terranova) in Sicily, and on the forms of sepulture with which they were associated. The publication of the Vase Catalogue is the more a subject for congratulation, that a few years since the Ashmolean Museum had practically no vase collection to catalogue. The policy of concentrating the archaeological collections of the University in the Ashmolean Museum, and the great efforts made on the part of the Museum itself in recent years to add to the collection of Greek vases, which, more almost than any other series of objects, are here of direct educational value, have thus borne welcome fruit. The vase collection has been re-arranged in accordance with the Catalogue.

"A further subject for congratulation must be the fact that Dr. Fortnum is at present engaged in drawing up a Catalogue of the magnificent collection of Italian Majolica presented by him to the Museum, which it is to be hoped will shortly form the material for a new volume of the Museum Oxoniense. In its bearing on this department of our collections, the acquisition by the Museum of an Italo-Greek terra-cotta lamp, found at Vico Equense, is of great interest. It bears a relief of a bearded Satyr drinking, which is in every detail the original of a Renaissance bronze relief in Dr. Fortnum's collection formerly attributed to Donatello."

CORRESPONDENCE.

TWO CHALDAEAN STATUES IN THE GUILDHALL MUSEUM.

London: June 24, 1894

In the Guildhall Museum are two broken Chaldaean statues, without inscription, concerning which I should like to say a few words, in the hope that some Assyriologist may be able to throw some light on them.

The first is a seated figure of green diorite. This figure is shown in the same posture as the statue of "Gudea" in De Sarzec's Découvertes en Chaldée (pl. 9). The dress has a kind of fringe like the statue of Gudea, and reaches down to a little above the ankle. The head is missing, and so are the arms; but, taking all things into consideration, it may possibly belong to one of the early kings of Chaldaea, perhaps Gudea himself.

By the kindness of Mr. Charles Welch, the principal librarian, I am enabled to give the following measurements:—

Breadth of back	...	...	1ft. 6in.
Bottom of dress	...	...	1ft. 5in.
From back to front	...	...	1ft. 7½in.
Total height	...	...	2ft. 4½in.
Circumference, including dress	...	...	5ft. 1½in.

The second statue is of black diorite, which we know was a favourite stone of Gudea's, and which he obtained from the Wady Maghara. This statue, of which only the feet remain, is represented in an erect position, similar to Gudea on pl. 10 of De Sarzec's work.

The following measurements may be of some use in comparing these statues with those in the Louvre:—

Circumference	...	...	6ft. 9in.
Length of foot	...	...	1ft. 4½in.
Total height	...	...	4ft. 10½in.

It would be interesting to know where these figures came from, especially as at the present moment great interest is taken in the remains of Southern Chaldaea.

H. W. MENGEDONT.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE annual conversazione of the Royal Academy will be held at Burlington House on Tuesday next, July 3.

THE following exhibitions will open next week: at the Rembrandt Head Gallery, Vigo-street, some new pictures by Mr. G. F. Watts, and a proof of Mr. Frank Short's mezzotint after the picture entitled "Mount Vesuvius from the Bay of Naples"; at the Clifford Galleries, Haymarket, a collection of oil-paintings and water-colour drawings.

The French Government have purchased from the Salon for the Luxembourg the following English pictures: "Forging the Anchor," by Mr. Stanhope Forbes; "Benedicite," by Mr. J. H. Lorimer; and "Before the Setting Sun," by Mr. Denovan Adams.

AMONG recent additions to the National Gallery are:—a small Gerard Dou, said to be a portrait of Anna Maria Schurrman; and a signed picture in its original frame by Filippo Mazzola, the father of Parmigianino, representing the Virgin and Child, with two Saints.

WHAT is called only the first portion of the collection of coins of the late Henry Webb, of Redhill, will be sold next week by Messrs. Sotheby, the sale lasting altogether for five days. During nearly half a century, it seems, Mr. Webb had devoted himself to the silver coins of England, from the Conquest down to the Jubilee year of the present reign. In particular, he had acquired almost a complete set of the numerous pieces issued in the time of Charles I., though we do not observe an example of the Aberystwith groat with the error CHRITO. The beauty of preservation of most of the coins is as remarkable as the great number of unpublished types.

THE Bibliothèque Nationale has recently acquired a collection of primitive Greek coins in electrum, which were found together in the island of Samos. According to M. Ernest Babelon, their date cannot be later than the middle of the seventh century B.C., and they are thus among the very earliest examples of coined money. They bear various devices—the head of a lion, a flying eagle, an eagle devouring a hare, a rose, a ram lying down, &c. They are all struck, with mathematic precision, from staters to obols, according to the Euboic standard of 17·52 grammes to the stater. M. Babelon therefore infers that the so-called Euboic standard must have originated in Samos, whence it was imported to Euboea, and afterwards spread throughout the Greek world.

PART IV. of Archaeologia Oxoniensis (Henry Frowde) contains several interesting articles. Mr. Perceval Landon concludes his notes on the heraldry of the colleges. We are told that the tierced marshalling, to represent three founders—as in the case of Brasenose, Corpus, and Lincoln—is peculiar to Oxford. Concerning the arms of New College there seems to be some doubt. It seems that the original arms of Winchester College was "sable three lilies arg.," whence it is possible that Waynflete borrowed the coat of Magdalen. By the way, there is no proof that Waynflete was educated at Winchester, as here stated. But the familiar coat of "two chevrons sable between three roses gules," now used by both Winchester and New, is found on Wykeham's seal when he was only Archdeacon of Lincoln, and is practically identical with that of the Oxfordshire Wykehams, whose remotest ancestor is said to have lived in the time of King John. The arms assumed by Jesus are severely criticised, as being without any authority; and under Trinity we are informed that, though the heads on the shield are those of griffins, the heads in the crest are dragons, a very considerable distinction. In another paper, Mr. C. Oman examines the military pictures in Rouse's Life of Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, father-in-law of the King-maker, with a view to ascertaining what light they throw upon the armour and weapons used in the Wars of the Roses; and Mr. F. Haverfield discusses the vexed question of "Britannia Prima," in connexion with an inscription of the fourth century recently discovered at Cirencester.

THE STAGE.

THE first performance of Mr. Malcolm Salaman's new piece is appointed for Monday next, at the Haymarket. The evening run of Mr. Grundy's "Bunch of Violets" will not, however, for the present, be interfered with.

SOMEWHAT tardily we have to record what is now indeed the continued success of "Arms and the Man" at the Avenue. It is very characteristic of Mr. Bernard Shaw, its lively and distinguished author, and never more characteristic than in the many moments in which, while it inclines you to sympathetic laughter, you are, after all, not quite sure whether you were not meant to take the thing seriously. Mr. Shaw, you see, is by no means above being a literary artist—still less is he above being funny; but when we have admired the cleverness and joined in the fun, "Was that the way," we involuntarily ask ourselves, "in which we were meant to see it?" The scene is laid at the period of the turmoils between Bulgaria and Serbia: so it would seem—but our history on the point does not pretend to accuracy. Russia is Bulgaria's friend; and Serbia is served by, among others, an intelligent mercenary, one Captain Bluntschli—played excellently by Mr. Yorke Stephens. That chocolate-cream soldier—who takes his responsibilities lightly, in a war most of whose incidents prompt Mr. Bernard Shaw to mockery—is, late in the piece, engaged to be married to Raina Petkoff, who has sheltered him, and Raina is played by Miss Alma Murray with delicate perception and rare grace, Miss Murray delivering her mock heroics with all her wonted mastery of diction, and presenting every phase of the character with her accustomed and distinguished charm. A Bulgarian to whom Raina had previously been plighted is played by Mr. Nutecombe Gould, with the discretion and quiet authority we have often liked. Mr. James Welch, Mrs. Charles Calvert, and Miss Florence Farr, do much to compass a completeness of interpretation for a piece which is so bright as to be deserving of all that can be done for it by the actor's art. "Arms and the Man" marks certainly a stage of progress in the literary career of an author who has been a little too much disposed, in the past at least, to give up to the Fabian Society what was meant, not perhaps for mankind, but at any rate for the London public.

MR. WILLARD appeared on Monday night at the Avenue, in that which has been one of his greatest successes in America, Mr. J. M. Barrie's Scottish farce or comedy, "The Professor's Love Story."

MUSIC.

THE HANDEL FESTIVAL.

To everything there is a season; and now is the appointed time to render homage to the greatest but one of the composers of the first half of the eighteenth century. Handel was not only great then, but is so still. He spoke, as did Bach, in the language of his day; but his genius enabled him to deliver a message which, in spite of the many changes in musical art, is still a real, living one. Of course, among the thousands that flocked to the Crystal Palace during the last week, many went in obedience to fashion, or to wile away a long summer's day; but the majority, because they love Handel, and, according to their measure of capacity, feel the power of his genius. We are certainly in favour of abolishing the "Messiah" at provincial festivals, and making use of the precious time to introduce one of the less known oratorios of the master, or even a novelty; but at the Palace it forms a solemn and appropriate opening to the Festival, just as "Israel" forms an imposing close. The "Selection" day is always more or less of a disappointment: not because the selection itself is actually bad, but because so little can be done to illustrate the noble series of works of which the audience can read the titles displayed in the central transept above the orchestra. Favourite solos have to be introduced for the sake of the vocalists, and some familiar choruses for the sake of the audience. And then, proud of his army of 220 violinists, Mr. Manns made them play on Wednesday the familiar Sonata in A. It was certainly a fair performance, and, on the whole, much enjoyed by the listeners; yet, from a high-art point of view, such a thing ought not to be allowed. Protests have been made in past years, but in vain. The novelties included the stately choruses, "Let our Glad Songs," "O celebrate His Sacred Name," and the "Alleluiah," from "Deborah"; "How dark, O Lord, are Thy Decrees," from "Jephthah"; "Vinto è L'Amor," from "Ottone"; and the Concerto in D, No. 6 of the Concerti Grossi, for strings, oboes, bassoons, and organ. By the way, the second movement in D Minor of this Concerto is also to be found in the third Harpsichord Suite, and, with very slight changes, in the fourth of the second set of Organ Concertos published after Händel's death.

The performance of the "Messiah" on Monday was one of the most impressive ever heard at these Festivals. The choir is magnificent, though truth compels us to say that the male singers are finer than the female. Having said this, we may add that the tone of the choir is of rich quality, and not lacking, at the right moments, in power. There is no need to describe the performance in detail. The vocalists were Mme. Albani, Miss Marian McKenzie, and Messrs. Ben Davies and Santley. They all sang well, and were well received, especially Mr. Santley, who quite surpassed himself. On Wednesday, Mme. Albani sang "From mighty Kings"—well, of course, though not altogether in Handelian style. Mme. Melba's rendering of "Let the bright Seraphim" was marked by great power, and, at the same time, great ease; the fine trumpet playing of Mr. Morrow deserves recognition. Mr. Ben Davies sang "Waft her, Angels" smoothly, but his reading of "Deeper and deeper still" was tame. Mr. Lloyd scored a silent success in "Sound an Alarm." Mr. Santley sang "Honour and Arms" with wonderful fire. Mr. Walther W. Hedgecock played the Concerto extremely well. The choir was again excellent, particularly in "How dark, O Lord," one of Handel's characteristic choruses. Mr. Manns and his splendid band did themselves full justice. The National Anthem was sung on the Monday, and the Dead March in "Saul" was played on Wednesday in memory of President Carnot.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC OF THE WEEK.

THE last Philharmonic Concert of the season took place at the Queen's Hall on Thursday, June 21. The programme included three novelties; but owing to the late arrival of the band parts, Vincenzo Ferrari's "Ariosto" Overture could not be given. The concert commenced with Dvorák's Fifth Symphony "From the New World" (Op. 95). It seems that the composer wishes to establish a "distinctively American style"; and, hence, his themes are "written in the manner and spirit of indigenous tune as found in negro and Indian airs." The great composers were always fascinated by folk-music, and that influence is specially noticeable in the works of Haydn and Schubert, though it may be described as an indirect one. Dvorák selects, or rather imitates, with deliberate intention; but negro themes as subject-matter for a Symphony seem—judging from the specimen before us—as much out of place as a bull in a china-shop. No one doubts the composer's power of making the best use of his material: he is great in the art of development, and also in that of colouring. But the Symphony, the highest form of instrumental music, seems to demand subjects of greater dignity and earnestness. Why did not Dvorák write a Negro Rhapsody or Fantasia? The two middle movements of his Symphony, the Largo and Scherzo, are the most interesting, and, as music proper, the most characteristic. Dr. Mackenzie's Nautical Overture "Britannia," is brimful of humour and cleverness; it was admirably performed under the composer's direction, and loudly applauded. M. César Thompson gave a dull reading of Beethoven's Violin Concerto; his intonation was far from perfect. Mme. Sophie Menter and M. Sapellnikoff displayed great technical skill on two fine Steinway pianofortes; but Liszt's "Concerto Pathétique" is not interesting, and certainly not pathetic.

The recent discovery at Delphi of a portion of a Paean to the Pythian Apollo, with musical notation belonging to the third century B.C., has, naturally, revived interest in ancient Greek music; and Mr. C. F. Abdy Williams, therefore, chose the right moment to read a short paper on the subject at Queen's Hall on Monday afternoon. He gave a programme of Greek music, including not only the Hymn to Apollo, but also all other existing remains. It commenced with the music to a portion of Pindar's first Pythian Ode (474 B.C.) first published by Kircher in his Musurgia in 1650, who claimed to have discovered it in a very ancient MS. of Pindar's works in the Library of the Monastery of St. Saviour, near Messina. The library in question has been searched, but no trace of the MS. in question discovered; yet, as Mr. Williams justly remarked, there seems no reason why Kircher should have made an untrue statement. Then came the Hymn to Apollo, followed by various fragments belonging to the second century A.D. All this music was sung by Mr. W. H. Wing, accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. Williams. One might be critical and say that the accompaniment was modern, but it was deemed advisable to support the voice parts. The difficulties of reproducing music even so recent, in comparison, as that of Handel and Bach are great, for their scores are imperfect, or include instruments now obsolete; in the case of Greek music the difficulties are far greater, and Mr. Williams deserves praise for his interesting experiment. The Hymn to Apollo is remarkably quaint, while the chromatic element in it forms a marked feature; the diatonic character of the later specimens, which belong to a period when Greek musical art was on the decline, stands in striking contrast. And not only was the experiment interesting, but the brief review of the little that has been preserved of Greek music was most acceptable, now that there seems a possibility of that little becoming larger.

"Siegfried" was performed at Drury Lane last Saturday, and attracted a large audience. Frau Klafsky was very fine, both in voice and gesture, as Brünnhilde, and Herr Max Alvary as Siegfried appeared to great advantage: so far as we know him, this is one of his best rôles. MM. Wiegand (Der Wanderer) and Mr. David Bispham (Alberich) rendered useful service. Herr Rodemund took the difficult part of Mime; he acted well, though there was a tendency all through to overdo the part—to put, as the French say, les points sur les île. Herr Lohse again conducted, but the band was still rough. Of course, in important music such as that of "Siegfried," any shortcomings are at once perceived.

MUSIC NOTES.

MR. ALFRED SCHULZ-CURTIS announces three orchestral concerts to be given at Queen's Hall next November. The first will be conducted by Herr Siegfried Wagner, and the other two by Herr Felix Mottl. Mr. Curtius hopes to arrange with Madame Wagner for the performance of some important sections of "Parsifal." The début of the son of Richard Wagner as conductor will, of course, be an event of special interest; and Herr Mottl will also be a welcome guest.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS TO THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . . . .	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c. . . . .	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of

NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS

BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume, is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

The AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE (New Edition), of 191 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 63 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."

NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, New Oxford Street, London,

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Pictorial Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost. Specimens and price list on application.

Offices 14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

NOW READY, price 2s. 6d. net.

A JUNE ROMANCE.

By NORMAN GALE.

NEW EDITION, with specially designed Title-Page.

London: WHITTAKER & Co.

Rugby: GEORGE E. OVER; and all Booksellers.

VINOLIA CREAM

IS RECOMMENDED BY

MEDICAL MEN

For any slight SKIN IRRITATION, such as SUNBURN, INSECT BITES, PRICKLY HEAT, &c.
1s. 1½d. and 1s. 9d. per Box.

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES.

Now Ready, price 1s. 4d.

THE MAGAZINE OF ART

For JULY, containing—

- "HOMEWARDS." By FRITZ VON URDE. Etched by WILHELM UNGER.
- "MISS ELLEN TERRY as LADY MACBETH." By J. S. SARGENT, A.R.A.
- THE ROYAL ACADEMY, 1894. By the Editor. With Three Illustrations.
- RAPHAEL'S CARTOONS CRITICISED. By JOHN BRETT, A.R.A. With Seven Illustrations.
- WESTMINSTER ABBEY and its MONUMENTS. By H. P. DUNCKEL-DOWNING, A.R.I.B.A. With Six Illustrations by the Author.
- THE WAY OF THE WORLD. Poem by CHRISTINA O. ROSSETTI. With an Illustration by W. E. F. BRITTEN.
- THE NEW GALLERY. By M. PHIPPS JACKSON. With 6 Illustrations.
- "HOMEWARDS." Note on the Frontispiece.
- SIR FREDERICK BURTON. By W. A. With a Portrait of Sir F. Burton.
- GLIMPSES OF ARTIST-LIFE: the Artist's "Ghost." A Study in Evolution. By M. H. STELMANN.
- THE GRAFTON GALLERIES. By F. G. SEPPEURS. With Five Illustrations.
- OUR ILLUSTRATED NOTE-BOOK With Eleven Illustrations.
- THE CHRONICLE OF ART: ART in JUNE.

Cassell &amp; Company, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

Now Ready, price 7d.

CASSELL'S MAGAZINE

For JULY, containing—

- THE PASTIMES OF PUBLIC MEN. By MAX PEMBERTON. Illustrated.
- A TALK ABOUT THE PLEIADES. By Sir ROBERT S. EALL, LL.D., F.R.S. Illustrated.
- MUSICIANS: Heads of the Professions. By J. CYRIL HADEN. Illustrated.
- CRICKET at the UNIVERSITIES. Illustrated.
- PEOPLE WHO FACE DEATH: Firemen. By A. E. BONSER. Illustrated.
- SERIAL STORIES—
THE EDGE of a PRECIPICE. By BESSIE E. DUFFETT.
THE CLEARING of the MIST. By FRANCES HASWELL.
- NEW PAID-OCCUPATIONS for WOMEN. By ELIZABETH L. BANKS.
- MRS. TUNTER'S TROUBLES. By G. B. BURNIN. Illustrated.
- ROYAL GHOSTS in HAMPTON COURT PALACE. By A. RESIDENT.
- A PARTY of TWO. By "ONE of THEM." Illustrated.
- CHIT-CHAT on DRESS. THE GATHERER.
- Frontispiece—LORNA. Drawn by F. M. SKIFFORTH.

Cassell &amp; Company, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

The New Review

Contents, JULY. Price One Shilling.

- BRITISH CENTRAL AFRICA. By H. H. JOHNSON.
- THE GOVERNMENT and the BUDGET. By the Right Hon. Sir JOHN LAMBSON, M.P.
- THE REAL MADAME SANS GENE. By A. D. VANDAM.
- THE ART of the HOARDING. (Illustrated.)
1. JULES CHERT.
2. DUDLEY HARRY.
3. AUBREY BEARDSLEY.
- SECRETS from the COURT of SPAIN. Part III.
- A DRAMATIC REALIST to his CRITICS. By G. BERNARD SHAW.
- MUNICIPALITIES at WORK: BIRMINGHAM. By E. DOLMAN.
- EDMUND YATES: an Appreciation and a Retrospect. By T. H. S. SCOTT.
- PILES DEAR LOVE. (A Short Story.) By LUDY LINDSAY.
- CHIESS (with Problems). By I. GUNDBERG.

London: WILLIAM HEISEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

FOR CONTENTS OF—

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE,

See Messrs. MACMILLAN &amp; CO.'S Advertisement, page 544.

TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE,

See Messrs. BENTLEY &amp; SON'S Advertisement, page 526.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE,

See Messrs. SAMPSON LOW &amp; CO.'S Advertisement, page 525.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 945.—JULY, 1894.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—WHO WAS LOST AND IS FOUND, chaps. v.-viii.—SENOUSI, THE SHEIKH OF JERROUB—PLACE-NAMES OF SCOTLAND, by Prof. Blackie.—MORE ABOUT THE PREPARATORY SCHOOL—THE PROTECTION OF WILD BIRDS, by Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart.—THE RED BODICE AND THE BLACK FLY, by A. Crawshaw.—SIX WEEKS in JAVA, by Colonel Sir H. Collett.—SIDE-LIGHTS ON THE BATTLES OF PRESTON AND FALKIRK, by Prof. Veitch.—MEMORIALS OF OLD HAILEYBURY, by Sir Auckland Colvin.—AGRICULTURE TAKEN TO DEATH—IN "MACA'S" LIBRARY.—THE NEW AFRICAN CRISIS WITH FRANCE AND GERMANY.—DESTRUCTIVES AND CONSERVATIVES.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD &amp; SONS, Edinburgh and London.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

JULY.

SOCIALISM and NATURAL SELECTION. By KARL PEARSON.

POEMS in PROSE. By OSCAR WILDE.

A LESSON from the CHICAGO. By NAUTICUS.

THE POETRY OF ROBERT BRIDGES. By Professor DOWDEN.

A GREAT EXPERIMENT. By T. W. RUSSELL, M.P.

NOTES on ENGLAND. By PAUL VERLAINE.

THE KING, the POPE, and CRISPI. By the Rev. H. R. HAWES.

WORKING-CLASS SETTLEMENTS. By CHARLES HANCOCK.

EVERY-DAY CRUELTY. By LOUIS ROBINSON, M.D.

SILVER and the TARIFF at WASHINGTON. By Lord FAIRER.

REJOINDERS. By MORETON FURMEN, Professor NICHOLSON, and F. J. PARAGAY.

FAUST. By IVAN TOURGENIEFF. (Translated by Miss MILMAN.)

CHAPMAN &amp; HALL, Ltd.

Now ready, price Sixpence.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

JULY.

THE MATCHMAKER. By L. B. WALFORD. Chaps. XXXV.—XXXVIII.

POLAR BEAR SHOOTING on the EAST COAST of GREENLAND. By Dr. FRIDTJOF NANSEN.

THE HAUNTED HOUSE. By MARY R. L. BRYCE.

THE TICKING of the CLOCK. By Mrs. ALFRED BALOWIN.

CHAMOIS HUNTING ABOVE the SNOW LINE. By HUGH E. M. STUTFIELD.

THE UNBIDDEN GUEST. By E. W. HORNUNG. Chaps. VIII.—XI.

AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN &amp; Co.

THE FREE REVIEW.

Edited by JOHN M. ROBERTSON.

Contents for JULY.

MR. BALFOUR: a Study. By the Editor.

THE BETTING CRAZE. By GREGORY MORTIMER.

A CHARACTERISTIC of ENGLISH FICTION. By WILLIAM WHARTON.

CURRENCY. By ION PERDICARIS.

TIME the DESTROYER; or, the 19th Century Viewed in the Light of the 34th. By ROBERT SCOTT MOFFAT.

WOMEN and CHRISTIAN MORALS. By LOUIS MENARD.

WASTAELS. By the Author of "THE CAY of THE CURATES."

COMPETITIVE RELIGION at CHICAGO.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

SWAN SONNENSCHN &amp; Co., Paternoster Square, E.C.

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9.0, MARRIAGE. Messrs. Sydney Brough, H. Hudson, C. F. Little, and Mackintosh; Misses Lena Ashwell, and Gertrude Kingston. At 8.15, THE CAPE MAIL. Messrs. Willard Draycott, W. H. Quinton, and Sant Matthews; Misses Vane Featherstone, Lillian Lee, Maude Abbott, and Carlotta Addison.

CRITERION THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE CANDIDATE. Mr. Charles Wyndham, Messrs. Wm. Blakeley, Geo. Giddens, C. W. Somerset, F. Worthing, F. Atherley; Miss P. Coleman, Miss Pattie Browne, Miss Miriam Clements, and Miss Mary Moore. Preceded, at 8.30, by MRS. HILARY REGRETS.

GARRICK THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, MONEY. Mr. John Hare, Messrs. Forbes Robertson, Arthur Cecil, H. Kemble, C. Brookfield, G. Hare, A. Bouchier, Aynesworth, Rock, Du Maurier, Sims; Miss Kate Rorke, Miss Maude Millett, and Mrs. Bancroft.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, CHARLEY'S AUNT. Mr. W. S. Penley, Messrs. Walter Everard, Sidney Paxton, H. Farmer, Cecil Thornbury, and H. Reeves Smith; Misses Ada Branson, Emmie Meyrick, Kate Graves. At 8, IN THE EYES OF THE WORLD.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, A BUNCH OF VIOLETS. Mr. Tree; Messrs. Lionel Brough, Nutcombe Gould, G. W. Anson, Holman Clarke, C. M. Hallard; Miss Lily Hanbury, Miss Audrey Ford, and Mrs. Tree.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8 punctually, FAUST. Mr. Irving; Miss Ellen Terry; Messrs. Wm. Terris, Julius Knight, C. Hogue, Haviland, Tyars, Johnsoo, Harvey, Tabb, Archer, Reynolds, Buckley, Belmont, Espinoza, Seldon, Cushing; Misses Kate Phillips, Lacy, Forster, Da Silva, M. A. Victor.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, Christmas Edition of LITTLE CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS. Messrs. E. J. Lomen, John F. Sheridan, F. Cook, G. Tate, W. S. Laidlaw, R. Carac; Mesdames Holland, Moore, Alice Lethbridge, G. Whiteford, E. Greville, Thorne, F. Wilson, M. Maraden, M. Bonheur, and Miss May Yohé. Preceded, at 7.40, WEATHERWISE.

STRAND THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, THE JERRY BUILDER. Messrs. Willie Edouin, E. Hendrie, C. Paget, D. Gordon, H. Ross, E. M. Sillward, R. Nainby; Misses Helen Conway, Susie Vaughan, May Edouin, Edith Hylton, Emily Dowton, Grace Lane, Lucy Wilson, &c. At 8, PARALLEL ATTACKS.

TRAFALGAR THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30, GO-BANG. Mesdames Jessie Bond, Agnes Hewitt, Adelaide Astor, Maggie Roberts, Maud Lockett, Lydia Flopp, and Letty Lind; Messrs. H. Gratton, George Grossmith, jun., Arthur Playfair, George Crawford, Edgar Stevens, Fred Strey, and John L. Shine. At 7.40, THE SILVER HONEYMOON.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE NEW BOY. Mr. Weedon Grossmith, Messrs. J. D. Beveridge, J. Beauchamp, S. Warden, K. Douglas, T. Palmer, F. Volpe, J. Halford; Mesdames Gladys Homfrey, May Palfrey, Esme Beringer, Helena Dacre. Preceded, at 8.20, by THE GENTLEMAN WHIP.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO QUINCES PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE OF BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

Two Delightful Novels.

By F. Marion Crawford "Love in Idleness,"
By M. Burton Harrison "A Bachelor Maid"

Begin in the July Number of

The Century Magazine. Price 1s. 4d.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

NEW VOLUME OF THE POPULAR COUNTY HISTORIES.

In demy 8vo size, handsomely printed on antique paper, and bound in cloth, price 7s. 6d.
On HAND-MADE PAPER, bound in Roxburgh, price 10s. 6d. net. LARGE-PAPER copies on hand-made paper, and bound in Roxburgh, to Subscribers, 21s. net.

A HISTORY OF WESTMORLAND.

BY

RICHARD S. FERGUSON, M.A., LL.M., F.S.A.
(CHANCELLOR OF CARLISLE: Author of "The History of Cumberland")

CHEAPER EDITION.

Now Ready, 488 Pages. Price One Shilling.

TOLSTOI'S BOYHOOD:

WRITTEN BY HIMSELF,

And Translated by CONSTANTINE POPOFF.

"This edition comprises in one volume what has hitherto been issued in two or three; and that in point of style it is indubitably the best English version of the Russian novelist's remarkable autobiographical work."—Academy.

"One of the most faithful and closely retrospective autobiographies of the opening years of life that have ever been given to the world. Mr. Popoff's translation reads easily, and, as he is a Russian, we may count upon its accuracy."—Literary World.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

THE "BORDER" WAVERLEY.

READY, JULY 2nd.

ANNE OF GEIERSTEIN. 2 vols.

TEN ORIGINAL ETCHINGS by R. DE LOS RIOS.

Introduction and Notes by ANDREW LANG.

LONDON: JOHN C. NIMMO, 14 KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND. (16)

NOW READY.

POPULAR EDITION. PRICE 3s. 6d. 95-4

LIFE OF THE RIGHT HON. WILLIAM HENRY SMITH, M.P.

By SIR HERBERT MAXWELL, BART., M.P.,

Author of "Meridiana," "Scottish Land Names," &amp;c.

WITH A PORTRAIT AND OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

Crown 8vo.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD &amp; SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

ASPECTS of MODERN STUDY.

University Extension Addresses by Lord PLAYFAIR, Canon BROWNE, Mr. GOSCHEN, Mr. JOHN MORLEY, Sir JAMES PAGET, Professor MAX MULLER, the DUKE of ARGYLL, the BISHOP of DURHAM, and Professor JEBBS. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

SOCIAL EVOLUTION. By

BENJAMIN KIDD. Fourth Thousand. 8vo, 10s. net.

THE JUNGLE BOOK. By

Rudyard Kipling. With Illustrations by J. L. Kipling, W. H. Drake, and P. Frenzeny. Eighth Thousand. Crown 8vo, 6s.

ATHENÆUM.—"We tender our sincere thanks to Mr. Kipling for the hour of pure and unadulterated enjoyment which he has given us, and many another reader, by this inimitable 'Jungle Book'."

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"In this latest evidence of the versatility of his talent, Mr. Kipling shows us once more how close an observer he is, how little escapes his attention when once he rivets it upon an object, and with what brilliant intuition he creates a plausible and coherent impression."

A MODERN BUCCANEER.

By ROLF BOLDREWOOD. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 81s. 6d.

ACADEMY.—"In compactness of plot and crispness of style 'A Modern Buccaneer' is a distinct advance upon anything he has yet published."

SPEAKER.—"Mr. Boldrewood possesses something of the secret of Defoe. He tells his tale with so much precision and so much detail that he compels the reader to accept it."

A HALF CENTURY of

CONFLICT. By FRANCIS PARKMAN. 2 vols. Fifth Edition. Crown 8vo, 15s. (Completing the Edition of Parkman's "Collected Works," in 12 vols. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each vol.)

A SHORT HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE. By J. R. GREEN. Illustrated Edition. Edited by Mrs. J. R. GREEN and Miss KATE NORGATE. Part 3d. Super-royal 8vo, 1s. net. (Vols. I., II., and III., super-royal 8vo, 12s. each net.)

LIBRARIES in the MEDIEVAL and RENAISSANCE PERIODS. The Rede Lecture delivered June 13, 1894. By J. W. CLARK, M.A., F.S.A., Registrar of the University, and formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.

NEW VOLUMES.

GRISLY GRISELL; or, the

Laidly Lady of Whitburn. A Tale of the Wars of the Roses. By CHARLOTTE M. YONGE. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

LADY WILLIAM. By Mrs.

OLIPHANT. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 417. JULY. Price 1s.

CONTENTS.

- 1.—PERLYCROSS. By R. D. BLACKMORE. (Conclusion.)
- 2.—THE FOUNDERS of the BANK of ENGLAND.
- 3.—LORD CHATHAM on the SURRENDER of SARATOGA.
- 4.—THE BEGINNINGS of the BRITISH ARMY.—II. The Cavalry.
- 5.—THE WIT of MAN.
- 6.—SCHOLAR-GIPSIES.
- 7.—A VISIT to his PROPERTY. By A SMALL LANOLORD.
- 8.—MADAME DU DEFFAND.
- 9.—A BIT of LAND. By Mrs. STEEL.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LONDON.

P The Academy. Volume XLV Jan-June 1894
LE
A

University of Toronto
Library

DO NOT REMOVE
THE CARD
FROM THIS POCKET

Acme Library Card Pocket
LOWE-MARTIN CO. LIMITED

